The reports on the "Four Year Program" were most encouraging. Practically all the goals have been reached and every indication points to the reaching of the entire sixteen goals by every congregation in the district before the National Conference of 1920. That the auxiliaries of the church may receive more attention it was planned to hold a two days' conference at Whittier during the latter part of the month of October when the work of the Sunday school, the Christian Endeavor and the Missionary Society shall have special attention.

The Ministerial Examining Board made its report through its secretary and reported the recommendation of three persons for ordination to the eldership.

The only stated address of the day, "The Evangelistic and Bible Study League—The Need and Objective" was given by the conference secretary, J. C. Beal. By vote of the conference the address is to be printed in the Brethren Evangelist.

The election of the officers of the conference for the coming year resulted as follows:

A. V. Kimmel, pastor at Whittier, re-elected moderator; J. C. Beal, pastor at Compton Avenue, vice-moderator; Hazel Shibley, First Church, Los Angeles, secretary; A. E. Neher, Compton Avenue church, Los Angeles, assistant secretary; H. V. Wall, Long Beach, treasurer; A. V. Kimmel was elected member of the Executive Committee of National Conference to represent this district, and J. C. Beal was chosen as a member of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College from this district.

T. J. Steves of La Verne was elected member of the District Mission Board and N. C. Nielsen of Long Beach was re-elected member-at-large on the Mission Board of which board he is now chairman.

T. H. Broad, N. W. Jennings, L. S. Bauman, A. V. Kimmel, and J. C. Beal, the pastors of the various churches of the district were elected members of the Ministerial Examining Board.

Friday evening, July 18. The sermon of the evening was delivered by Elder N. W. Jennings of the First church, of Los Angeles. His subject was "Jesus Only" and Brother Jennings handled the subject in his characteristic and forceful way. His thoughts were based on the incident recorded in Matthew 17:4-5. He emphasized the following points: The transfiguration was the unveiling of Jesus; Jesus is the head cornerstone; Jesus is the King, the beginning and the end; Jesus only in redemption; Jesus only in his coming again; Jesus only in regeneration; Jesus only in justification; Jesus only in sanctification here and in glorification there.

There were no day sessions on Saturday. At 7:30 P. M. there was worship in song and prayer led by Prof. B. P. Stout of Pomona who had been secured to have charge of the music of the entire conference. Brother Stout's solos were much enjoyed by all who heard him and they have a distinctively Gospel message which makes them very helpful. Dean J. Allen Miller of Ashland, Ohio, gave the first of his addresses on the general topic "The Person and Work of Jesus Christ." The specific subject taken up was "The Advent of the Son of Man from Heaven." He used as "key verses" John 3:13 and 6:32. The following are some of his statements. The whole New Testament is authentic. God is one but at the same time there are three in the God-Head. The name of Jesus as Son of Man is messianic. The manhood of Jesus was real and perfect. The manhood of Jesus was sinless. No one has a perfect knowledge of the Father except the Son. Jesus manifested in the form of God took upon himself the form of a servant. Wealth might have been his but he became poverty for us. Through his poverty we become rich. Jesus existed before he was born of the Virgin Mary. He could not cease to be God when he became flesh.

Sunday morning, 9:30, the Sunday school was under the direction of the regular Long Beach officers. The Long Beach Sunday school is a live one and is doing effective work. The large number of adults in the school is a feature which is especially noticeable. At 11 o'clock Prof. Stout led the congregation in song. The devotional services were directed by the pastor, L. S. Bauman.

Dean Miller then brought the message of the hour based on Ephesians 1:1. The subject of the sermon was "The Plan of the Ages." An outline of the message follows: God has a plan for each life—things are not done by chance. God is working out his plan through Christ Jesus. The plan of God has to do with this world and with us and not with other worlds. The world is small but God is ruling it with wisdom. Everything is in order and it was never known that one star was behind time. God's wisdom is shown because of the smallness of the things with which God works. Can we say he does not see us and forgets us? The address was closed with an exhortation that our lives work in harmony, with his will.

On convening at 3 P. M. fifteen minutes were spent in song, scripture, and prayer. Prof. Stout at this point sang one of his most effective solos. At 3:15 Dr. P. B. Fitzwater of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, gave the first of five popular addresses on "The First Days of the World and the Last." At this service he stressed the part of the general subject that has to do with "From Chaos to Eden." The following are some of the thoughts expressed: History repeats itself. If we are acquainted with the first days of the world we are pretty sure to know what is to come in the last days of the world. Genesis 1:1 gives the origin of all things. God is the foundation of everything. A long space of time between the events of verse one and verse two. The Bible is up-to-date and meets every situation of the scientist today. If you want to know what God intended us to be, see the God-Man who came down and linked himself with man, to show us what he wants us to be (Eph. 3:24; Col. 3:10). We possess God's personality and know what is right and what is wrong without being told. You never found a mule with a guilty conscience, nor a monkey with a guilty conscience. God made man with the power of self-consciousness. We have self-will but the dog has no self will. Adam had the wisdom to name the animals. We are doing wonderful things today but if man had not sinned these wonderful things would have been done long ago.

At 6:15 P. M. were held the meetings of the Christian Endeavor societies and at the same time the women's prayer circle met in one room and the men's prayer band met in another. At 7:30 the convention was led in a season of worship in song by Prof. Stout. At this same session the leader sang another of his inspiring solos. Rev. C. H. Ashman of Sunnyside, Washington, brought the message at 8 o'clock from the subject, "Watchman, What of the Night?" 1—The Word of God always uses night and darkness to represent sin. This is the night of sin, of villainess and corruption. "As in the days of Noah."

2—The last several years have uncovered the weaklings and discovered the guilt of many. The weak are falling away and the strong are getting stronger.

3—It is night as long as Jesus is away. Jesus is coming to bring the light and there is no light without Jesus. The darkest hour is just before dawn.

4—We believe in a salvation that can save and deliver from sin now. The night is far spent and the day is soon here.

Monday. There was no morning session. This time was left open for rest and recreation.

At 2 P. M. Prof Stout again led the conference in worship and song.

At 2:15 Dr. Fitzwater brought the first of his studies on the book of Romans.

1—The position of Romans in the New Testament is not because of when it was written but because of its importance. Romans is the best epistle and is therefore put first. God has certainly put things in their right order—another proof of the inspiration of the Bible.

2—The theme of the book—"The Gospel of Christ is the revelation of the righteousness of God, which is received by faith (Rom 1: 16-17).

3—The text of the book is Habakkuk 2:4,—"The just shall live by faith."

4—To grasp the meaning of the Gospel it is absolutely necessary to know Romans. It deals with the very heart of Christianity.

5—Never try to explain the Gospel. Just preach it. It will explain itself and defend itself, too.

6—Chapter one, verse 18, is the first great definition of the book of Romans.

At 3:15 P. M., C. H. Ashman gave the second of his prophetic addresses from the subject, "The Millennial Reign of Christ."

1—The 20th chapter of Revelation tells of the millennium. Millennium means 1,000. The Devil is a post-millennialist.

2—Things Christ will find when he comes:—(a) Unbelieving world; (b) Apostate church; (c) The Anti-christ ruling the world.

3—Characteristics of the millennium:—(a) Shepherding the nations (Rev. 19:5). (b) Universal peace, but universal peace will never come until the Prince of Peace comes. Isaiah 2:4 will come to pass when the return of Jesus takes place.

At 7:30 P. M. the conference enjoyed a season of worship in song and prayer and listened to a solo by Prof. Stout. At 8 o'clock Dr. Fitzwater brought the second of his lectures on "The First Days of the World and the Last," stressing at this time "From Eden to the Land of Nod."

The speaker reminded the audience that in Eden everything that was lovely was to be found and that more pleasant enjoyment was the lot of those who dwelt there. He warned against being deceived and urged that the family altar be found in every home because if the family altar is not restored the Devil will get full hold on our boys and girls. He reminded his hearers that those who are trying to get rid of hell are doing so because they don't want to suffer the consequences of their sin. The wife of Pastor Russel got a divorce from him on the ground of a charge of adultery, so Russel thought he would get rid of hell. The speaker said we should thank God that we are obliged to work. It is a great privilege to the believer to know that when we get to heaven all sin will be blotted out because of the abolishing of the one who sinned in the Garden of Eden.

Tuesday, 9:30 A. M. After a short session of song and prayer, Dean Miller brought his second message on the "Person and Work of Jesus Christ," the division of the subject emphasized being "The Glory of the Cross." This was a strong address and the speaker summed up his message as follows:—"The Gist of the Whole Thing."

1—The terrible fact of sin in the human heart and its fatal consequences make redemption necessary.

2—Self redemption is impossible, all human schemes fail.

3—Redemption is of God in Christ Jesus, and there is no other.

4—Salvation in God's plan is grounded upon the efficient motives, namely: God's unbounded and gracious love and his righteousness.

5—The incarnation reaches its climax in the atonement of Christ on the cross for sin. This is the glory of the cross.

6—God sent his Son to be the Savior of the world. The Son willing to go himself.

7—Jesus Christ died on the cross for the sin and the sinners of the world.

8—His voluntary death is the propitiation for the sins of the whole world and the redemption purchased by his precious blood shed on the cross makes reconciliation possible.

9—He died and was buried; He arose and ascended to the right hand of the Majesty on high. He is still in heaven continuing his mediatorial ministry and is able to save to the uttermost all who will come to him.

10—This ministry he will continue until the time fixed in the counsel of God, when the mediatorial offices cease and the plan of the ages is consummated and God the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, the blessed trinity, will be all in all."

After a short intermission Dr. Fitzwater presented his second study on Romans. The following are the high points in the study:

1—Your sin is you. You can't separate the sinner from the sin. There was no sin until some one committed sin. The Devil was the original sinner. You can't say that God loves the sinner but not the sin.

2—The race had adequate opportunity. God was the teacher and so there was no excuse. Every one possesses God-consciousness. Your conscience is that part of you that answers back to God.

3—Idolatry is terrible because they make images of God out of corruptible things.

4—You are judged by the secrets of the heart and not by outward appearance. All our sins are going to be showed up unless they are covered by the blood of Jesus.

5—Both Jews and Gentiles are guilty before God. The Jews had the Law and broke it while the Gentiles did not have the law.

At 2:15 P. M., Rev. Chas. Ashman brought the third of his prophetic addresses, "The Lid Off of Christian Science." Eddyism is the most dangerous of all "isms."

1—Christian Science says that Christ failed to come to the perfect state reached by Mrs. Eddy. Christian Science also accuses Christ of being a medical failure.

2—They deny the resurrection. They are not looking for the "blood" to cleanse them from their sins but are looking for a license to sin.

3—They are a menace to society.

4—Mother Eddy declares that the Bible is full of errors; that Christ was only an idea; they deny the personality of the Holy Spirit.

5—Christian Science is the Judas Iscariot to Christian doctrine without sense enough to go out and hang itself.

6—Christian Science is a sign of the times. At 3:15 Dr. Fitzwater brought the third of his studies on Romans. The following is a digest of the study:

The righteousness of Jesus Christ is reckoned to me. You can't believe unless God gives you faith. God won't be debtor to any man. When your sins were atoned for God suffered. We are as near to God as the Son of God, Jesus. The righteousness that has been provided in Christ Jesus, that's grace. You will never overtake your sins; they are as far from you as the east is from the west. God loves us more when we are Christians than when we were sinners.

PENNSYLVANIA CHURCHES—N. B.

Owing to conditions over which we have had no control the program for the Pennsylvania district conference will not be published until the first issue of the Evangelist after General Conference. The Pennsylvania conference meets with the Johnstown church on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, October 7, 8, 9. Those having the more prominent parts on the program will be notified before general conference, if they have not already been told of the part they will have to take. We are looking for this to be one of those inspiring, long-to-be-remembered conferences. The desire of the executive committee is that we have a large attendance, and that all will come praying for the Spirit of God to prevail in all things. The program promises to be one of good things, and there will be place on the program for consideration of questions or propositions that the delegates may desire to bring up, and which the committee did not sense beforehand. If all goes as planned we will have a pleasant surprise for the closing number of the conference, but all numbers will be of special merit. In the name of the church and the executive committee I appeal to all the churches of the district to turn out well for the conference which will no doubt be the last to be held in the old church at Johnstown, for they are going to spread themselves in the near future.

E. L. MILLER,

Secretary Executive Committee.

GARWIN, IOWA

Perhaps a short report summing up the work at this charge for the year will not be out of place. This pastoral year closes with the first of September. The year has been short as months go. We have had but seven and a half months of service owing to the epidemic. Even though this has not been an average year in length, we have had a number of accomplishments. The parsonage was freed of debt, a meeting was held in which forty-five (45) united with the church, a well put down by the parsonage, an electric lighting plant was installed for the benefit of the church and parsonage, special communion tables were made and used for the communion service, and many other smaller matters that have had their place. We have had a splendid year, the church and Sunday school are in a good live condition, made so by the hearty co-operation of the officers, and congregation. A Sunday school picnic was recently held, and was enjoyed by a large crowd. Over five thousand dollars ($5000.00) have been subscribed during the year for various purposes.

A business meeting was held recently, in which we were given a call to continue our labors with these people during the coming year. The call carried with it an increase in salary of over five hundred dollars ($500.00) which we very much appreciated. It has been a pleasure to labor with these people and we are very appreciative of their interest shown in us in many ways. The outlook for the coming year is very bright, and we desire the interests of the brotherhood, in order that much may be done for the Kingdom.

OVER THE TOP AT LAST

The financial year for the Brethren Publishing Company closed on August first, and our annual report appears in this issue of the Evangelist. Any one who has been familiar with the business of the Company for the past ten years or more must see at once that the business for the past year has been most satisfactory, and yet there is room for progress. Yes, there is room for great progress, and we hope the churches and Sunday schools and the pastors that have made the work so successful the past year will not only maintain their present enthusiastic attitude toward the Publishing House, but that even greater and closer co-operation between all concerned may be developed in future years.

The Honor Roll and The Evangelist

We have been more than pleased with the result of our efforts to increase the subscription list of the Evangelist by starting an Honor Roll of churches that reached a certain standard. The result has more than justified our efforts and has more than exceeded our anticipations.

A few years ago we talked with some of our brethren about the possibility of increasing our subscription list from 2250 to 4500 subscribers, but the thought was about abandoned as impractical. However we did not give up entirely, but kept thinking and working until we have finally reached the goal we set during the past year to be attained before the meeting of the Winona Conference. It has been our ambition to run off the press FIVE THOUSAND copies of the Evangelist by Conference time, and a short time ago we promised that we would give the first page of the Evangelist to honor the pastor of the church that would win a place on the Honor Roll and at the same time make it necessary for us to print 5000 copies of the Evangelist.

A glance at page one this week will make it plain that the goal has been reached and that the Goshen, Indiana, church, with its enthusiastic pastor, has won this honor. Goshen has won the banner among all the Brethren churches by securing a list of TWO HUNDRED yearly subscriptions to the Evangelist. We congratulate Brother McInturf and his congregation for this most commendable achievement. Brother "Mack" will not claim all the glory for himself for he knows that he has had a splendid committee of loyal Brethren to help him in this work. Then too, the Business Manager was glad to be invited to visit the Goshen church and to preach two sermons for them and to give them a talk in regard to placing the church paper in the homes of all the families of the church. We thank all who had any part in the great work. This week we print five thousand two hundred and fifty copies of the Evangelist, and we only trust the whole church may become so enthused that the list will never be allowed to become any less.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

The Recent General Conference of the Brethren Church

Seldom has a General Conference passed that has created such intense and widespread interest as did the one held at Winona Lake, September 1 to 7, inclusive. This is evidenced by the spirit of anticipation and questioning which existed before conference convened, by the largest number of official delegates in attendance ever recorded, by the positive and vital character of the conference itself and by the feeling of anxiety and deep concern that seems to be now quite generally manifested as to the outcome. It is heartening to all those who were in any measure responsible for the conference to note the deep interest that was created concerning it. The Evangelist sought to use its unmeasured influence in every way possible to turn the attention of the brotherhood toward Winona, and not only so, but to pre-dispose Brethren everywhere toward a truly successful conference. Many earnest hearts were praying for the guidance of God's spirit in all the deliberations and many zealous souls were working assiduously that nothing within the power of man to do might be left undone to make for the "greatest conference yet." And to a greater extent than even the leaders could have hoped, success was achieved.

It is impossible to give even a resume of all the addresses and sermons delivered at conference; these together with a report of all business transacted will appear in the Brethren Annual and Conference Minutes which will likely be ready for mailing within two months. Nor are these things of the first concern to our many readers. What resulted from all the inspirational addresses and the enthusiasm generated there is what the brotherhood wants to know.

Possibly the most welcome statement that could be made concerning the recent conference is that a spirit of harmony such as has not prevailed for years was evidenced in every session from first to last. The Holy Spirit seemed to have his way in the hearts and thoughts of the delegates in a larger way than at times has been the case in some preceding conferences. From the opening session when Brother J. A. Garber, in the first sermon of the conference, appealed for a recognition of the fact that "one is your Master and all ye are brethren and the importance of demonstrating that fact by a genuine love of the brethren and a willingness to follow Christ "on to victory" to the closing sermon on Sunday night by Dr. G. Campbell Morgan when the speaker urged that we as "Progressive Brethren" heed God's command to Israel—"Go forward," practically every one seemed disposed to leave personal differences and disagreements in the background and place the vital things of the kingdom foremost. Every day from the early morning prayer meeting until the benediction was pronounced at the close of the evening session there was to be noticed in nearly every speech or prayer, scripture or song an appeal for harmony of action and unity of purpose. It was the Holy Spirit leading us into the fulfillment of Christ's prayer, "That they all may be one, even as thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." To a very encouraging degree the delegates seemed to partake of the divine ideal and desire for oneness of spirit that should exist among brethren in Christ. As a result nearly every one left the conference with a consciousness of strength and a confidence in the future that was re-assuring to those who have borne the burden and heat of the day in the Brethren church.

A thing that was brought before the conference as a matter of supreme moment was the need of giving more serious attention to the deepening and quickening of the spiritual life of the church. We were apprized of the danger that the church may be over-institutionalized and under-spiritualized. The church must be the church of the living God and it must be vitalized by the indwelling of his Holy Spirit. Yet we have been undervaluing this fact and permitting spirituality to go by default. It was discovered that the goals placed first in the Four Year Program and are first in importance—those dealing with attendance at communion service and prayer meeting—rank very low in the order of attainment. This ought not to be for nothing is so important as that our religious activities shall be deeply spiritual and our Christian professions clothed with life. To the end that this may be realized increased emphasis will be placed upon the goals of spiritual attainment during the coming year. As an engine without steam is powerless, so also a church without spirituality is powerless. We are doomed to failure if we presume to go forth with the "good news" to the uttermost parts of the world before we have gathered in the "upper room" and tarried till we have been endued with power.

Another distinct consciousness of the conference was that of a great responsibility resting upon it for positive and aggressive action in the interest of the Kingdom of God in view of the world's sore need. Over and over again was the fact brought home to the minds of the delegates that a new day of opportunity was before the church. "Never was vital religion so much needed." "Never did the world need the guiding hand of a spirit-led and spirit-empowered church as now." "Never were such great issues dependent upon the extension of Christianity's saving and transforming power as now." "Never was the harvest so ripe and the need of more reapers more urgent." "Never was the church faced with such a critical world situation as now." "If the church does not exercise a dominating influence in the affairs of the world in the next five years she will be relegated to the scrap heap." "The church must set before herself a big program and accomplish it." "Let us think bigly of our God; think bigly of our enterprise and bigly of our responsibility." Such were some of the expressions with which the speakers set before the conference the urgency of the hour for the church of Christ. With such a consciousness it was inevitable that the conference should set herself seriously to the formulation of big plans. The conference and the church that would not be challenged to undertake big things in the face of such a situation would not be worthy of bearing the name of Christ.

It will be interesting to note briefly some of the plans for advancement that received consideration, if indeed they were not conceived at this conference. Every effort is to be put forth to make this last year of the Four Year Program a "victory year" and in addition a committee of fifteen was appointed to plan a new five year program of church extension, vitalization and efficiency. This new program is to be ready to launch at the close of the present Four Year Program at next General Conference. Evangelism was given new impetus and efforts will be made to see that every church has a revival meeting during the year. Both home and foreign missions received much attention and it was found that the missionary activities of the church had grown to such extent as to demand the entire time of one man to collect and care for the funds. To do this work, Brother William A. Gerhart of Dayton, Ohio, was elected and consecrated. He will be known as the General Missionary Secretary of the Brethren church and will receive the offerings for both home and foreign missions. The college authorities told of their plans to push the endowment campaign under the direction of Brother Wm. H. Beachler until the last member of the Brethren church has been given a chance to contribute. Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, the new president, declared that three things were absolutely necessary to the success of Ashland College, viz., efficient physical equipment, a thoroughly trained faculty and spiritual ideals. With these supplied they will be able to give to Brethren young people a training second to none. The Brethren Publishing Company took a forward step. Every one in the employ of the company as well as every ambitious Brethren acquainted with the situation, has been chafing under the limitations that the equipment imposed. At last the Lord opened up an opportunity which was eagerly seized and soon we will be located in a modern printing plant in the heart of Ashland where the chances for growth are multiplied.

The Laymen's Conference is a new organization that had its beginning in the recent General Conference. The ideal really had its birth in the mind of Brother J. A. Garber, secretary of the executive committee and with the hearty endorsement of the other members of the committee, the laymen were programed for a conference at the hour of the other simultaneous conferences. The first day possibly a dozen and a half attended, the second day a hundred and fifty by actual count were present and each day thereafter both attendance and interest continued to grow. The laymen were delighted with the experiment and effected a permanent organization and will hereafter plan their own programs.

The National Sunday School Association announced a number of forward steps to be taken this year. Consideration will be given to the provision of a Brethren second year teacher training book. A committee was appointed to prepare a series of denominational doctrine and history to take the place of such lessons in the Graded series. The last Sunday in each month was set aside as "Go-to-church Sunday" when every member in the Sunday school will be urged to attend church services. (It is a fine idea, except that Go-to-church Sunday ought to be every Sunday instead of one a month. But maybe one Sunday a month will do for a starter). The Association has also planned for the doing of field work by district secretaries during the coming year. These secretaries will endeavor to conduct institutes in every church at a convenient time, giving addresses, holding open conferences and adjourned conferences with key workers. The various schools are invited to have institutes and where finances are a problem the National Sunday School Association will meet the expense.

The General Conference organization resulted in the election of the following officers: Dr. Charles A. Bame, of North Manchester, Indiana, Moderator; Prof. J. A. Garber, Ashland, Ohio, Vice-moderator; Rev. Dyll Belote, Canton, Ohio, Secretary; Rev. M. J. Snyder, Milledgeville, Illinois, Assistant Secretary; and Mr. Norman Kimmel of Gratis, Ohio, Treasurer. The official delegates numbered 320, the largest yet, and the visiting members were proportionately increased. It was a successful conference in every way. May its influence live through the year.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Red Hill church, near Roanoke, Virginia, has recently experienced an ingathering under the evangelistic preaching of Brother P. J. Jennings. The splendid success achieved shows that not only some effective preaching was done, but also some earnest praying. Such results are not accomplished without prayer.

Brother J. A. Baker of Eau Claire, Wisconsin, makes an appeal for aid for a needy brother in his little flock. The mere mention of this need ought to be sufficient to bring forth the needed help from Brethren more fortunately situated. A whole gospel church ought to be the last one to permit their members to suffer want.

Don't forget to notice what the Business Manager has to say this week. He is happy, as are the rest of us, over the prospect of a new home for the Publishing Company. Also one new church, Ardmore, Indiana, is placed upon the Honor Roll this week. Welcome, Ardmore, we shall be pleased to have frequent reports of the good work you are doing.

The Pennsylvania District Conference program is to be found in this issue. It is a splendid program and very thoroughly covers the field of the church's interest. There ought to be and doubtless will be a large attendance at this conference. It will likely be the last time a conference will ever be held in the First church of Johnstown as the Brethren there are hustling for a new church in the near future.

The "College Notes" this week by President Jacobs will be of unusual interest. Every member of the Brethren church will be pleased to note the evidences of growth and improvement. Aside from the faculty changes, improvement in equipment and plans for the future noted, Dr. Jacobs announces a most important investment of college funds. This purchase means much not only to the college, but to the Publishing Company as well, for in the first floor we expect to make our future home.

The Kanemorado District Conference program in this issue will be read with interest by all and especially the members of that district. It is interesting to note that the churches of this district are shepherded entirely by young ministers which may account to some extent for the enthusiasm with which they prosecute their work. The conference is to be held in the Hamlin, Kansas, church.

Brother Barnhart, pastor of the Pleasant Hill, Ohio, church reports the work at that place and also announces his resignation to take place the first of October. He is open to calls for evangelistic work or pastoral service and Pleasant Hill is looking for, if she has not already found, a new pastor. May the Lord direct both pastor and people in making arrangements for the future.

If you will take a minute to peruse the treasurer's report of Ashland College you will notice that "our college" is coming to the place where she need not feel so dreadfully poverty stricken as she has in the past. Brother Hendrickson is the man who keeps account of and helps to invest the funds you send in for Ashland College's benefit. He has a most level business head and is very careful in keeping all accounts.

Brother Beachler comes to us with a summary report of the endowment campaign to date and makes some important suggestions about how we might improve in our giving to Ashland College. He is now beginning the campaign in Ohio. We are expecting big things of the state in which our college is located for it benefits from it as no other district does. What will Ohio do? We believe she will go "over the top" in fine form.

Brother Orion E. Bowman, Secretary-Treasurer of the Home Missionary Board gives the final report of the conference year in this issue. It is a splendid report and makes a good showing for the year in spite of the hindrances that board met in taking its offerings. Much credit is due Brother Bowman who so faithfully prosecuted this difficult task notwithstanding the fact that he is one of the busiest attorneys of Dayton, Ohio, and also gives much time to the work of the local church of that city.

VICTORY YEAR

I can not say that I am yet, over the Conference. May I be very bold to say that I hope you are not. Let me make it bigger still and say that I hope that you will not get over it till the year is over. This is to be "Victory Year" in the progress of our Program. In a wonderful way, the Lord has led us; Let us go on to perfection.

A Memorable Conference

Measured by almost any Christian standard, the 31st Annual Conference was the greatest the church has ever had. Again and again, the Moderator was told by the foremost men of the church that there was never another like it. Do you wish to know why? I feel sure I know the reason; it was because it most fully represented the ideals of the church. If ever a church was born with the hope that it might be dominated by "righteousness, joy, and peace in the Holy Spirit," it was the Brethren church. Freed from church trials and quarrels over small things, the members of the Brethren church hoped they had found a place where these things might never be. They had not wanted to be a theological, defining church nor a creed-writing church. They wanted to live and practice their religion, "every man fully persuaded in his own mind" (Rom. 14). So much did they want this that for many years of the beginning history, they did not have annual conferences lest they might not enjoy the peace they hoped for. Going still deeper into the feelings of the membership as I sense it, there are many of the newer and later recruits to the church that are like-minded. Now, I feel that if there was ever a conference that represented these ideals, in the last ten years, it was this one. May it be but the beginning of a long series of conferences that shall be known and remembered for the harmony of thought and unity of the spirit.

But how did the Conference take the Four Year Program? Take to it? Why the Four Year Program took the Conference by storm three years ago and it has never had any other attitude. The Conference has always been seriously enthusiastic about it. It is not the Conference that is hurting the Program; it is the fellow who is not in touch or in harmony with the Conference that deals it the death blow. No, I should not say that, but the "Solar Plexus" that leaves the charts half yellow. It is a thorough disgrace to the fraternity that nearly half of the churches listed in the "Annual" do not report what they have done or what they are doing. If it is that to the fraternity, what must be the loss to themselves?

Several times in the week of Conference, this year was referred to as "VICTORY YEAR." It will, under the grace of God and the stewardship of the leaders be that or a year of defeat. There is no going back. We have set our faces to accomplish a certain task and there is nothing but victory or defeat for us. Which it will be, must depend on the leaders of the congregations, now. While the Conference was a constructive one, it did nothing but say "go on." It has not planned to send a man into each congregation as I had hoped it might. However it is not too late for the

to do original work along this line. I have heard of some state conferences that have planned to have some special work done by a state evangelist. I hope many may do it. If only every member of a state district would give a dollar to helping the weak churches and mission points every one of them could keep a man in the field all the year. We can not have a VICTORY YEAR unless something is done along this line. Will they do it?

A Wonderful Coincidence

What a wonderful evening was the last one of the Conference! With two of the religious world's most popular and greatest preachers taking part, the Rev. "Billy" Sunday and Dr. G. Campbell Morgan of London, temporarily of Winona, besides several of Winona's other prominent preachers and singers; Winona church for the first time worshipping with us. Who would have thought that possible to a small denomination like ours? Well it happened.

Spirit Led

Strange as it may seem, I am here going to say that if ever one of our conferences had a message straight from heaven, it seems to me that Dr. Morgan gave that message. In his introductory remarks, he said, I have chosen this text because I am speaking to PROGRESSIVE BRETHREN; second because you have chosen as your slogan, as shown on your program, "On to Victory" and third because you have as your Conference text, "This is the victory that overcometh, even your faith." Then he announced that the text he had chosen was, "Speak to the Children of Israel that they GO FORWARD." Without saying that we are a peculiar people (which he doubtless thinks) he pointed out how peculiar were the children of Israel and that Israel meant "God led." Then the heart of the message was that the church is in a place like Israel was when the mountains were on either side, the Red Sea ahead and the Egyptians behind. Without any possible chance to move, seemingly, God gave the word, GO FORWARD. They went on as God had commanded. Will we? His closing sentence was "ON TO VICTORY." How loudly ought the brethren all over this land of ours, yea all over the world say AMEN! Will you not do it? If you do, we shall have a wonderful report at the next conference.

What is the Victory?

Go forward to what, did you say? Well, in an early issue of this paper you will have a report that will help to open your eyes, we think. Already the Conference has appointed a committee of FIFTEEN brethren to study for a part of the year, the needs of our denomination and to report a new program for our guidance in the succeeding years. At this Conference, the old Evangelistic Organization of the Brethren church voluntarily gave way to a larger and better one that will keep an evangelist or more in the field this year. Indeed, we are in a small way, at least looking up and out to the harvest that is already white. Bigger and better is the spirit of the people who go to Conference and those who are not so privileged ought to read well the reports so that they may keep pace with the wonderful things the Lord is trying to help us to do.

"Immediately"

"Straightway," you know is the keyword of Mark's gospel. Straightway, every Goal Director both in the district, national and congregational organization ought to be getting busy to strengthen the stakes of Zion. See where your church has most failed and bring it up to FOUR YEAR PROGRAM requirements THIS YEAR. For this is the last chance you will have on that program. What a wonderful thing to do it for the Master. He is looking. He marks down on the heavenly book everything you do for the progress of the church. But it must not be delayed. Straightway. Another thing; every one in the church ought to join the Evangelistic and Bible Study League and forward to its secretary one dollar for use THIS YEAR in evangelism. We shall need a revival in every church and mission and then some to reach 30,000 at the end of this year. But it is not impossible. Just go to it, "straightway," and we shall have a very real, VICTORY YEAR. AMEN! HALLELU-JAH!

Christianity of Vital Concern to the Laity. By H. F. E. O'neil

Is Christianity of vital interest to the members of the church of Jesus Christ today? If so, why? If not, why not?

Does Christianity differ from the other religions, and if so, in what?

It is a recognized fact in China, France and other countries that the great difference between America and other countries is not only its industry, its commercialism, its education, its natural resources; nor is it all of them combined, but it is admitted freely by the leading statesmen of these countries, even those who are not themselves Christians, that it is the spirit of Christ that is manifest in some of the American people that makes them and this country of ours so different from their own.

China is sending her brightest and best young men to America for their education, not because they cannot be educated in China, but because with their education in America, they are subjected to the influence and power of the Christian religion.

Germany serves as an outstanding example of a people who have been educated, and "Kultured" without Christ taken into consideration. We can not deny the facts of their educational tendencies, for their great grandparents were reading the sciences when many of our own could not read the newspaper. BUT while they could read and teach the sciences they had failed to recognize the real source of all knowledge, God and his Son Jesus Christ.

But you say what has this to do with the subject at hand, this can be best illustrated by a fact which comes close to my own experience. The government authorities have urged the Y. M. C. A. to send our representatives to France, to institute the work of our organization among the young men of that country; not that they have become Christian by any means, but they believe in the results that we are obtaining both among our own young men and with the men of their armies while we were operating among them. And this work was and is being done by Laymen. This brings me to the heart of the subject.

As one becomes interested in the work of the church, he hears about the personal life of the minister, and pastor, but not much is said about the life of the laity regarding their responsibility and opportunity of influencing the lives of young people, in business, politics, commerce, etc, and why not, are our responsibility and opportunity not as great, and as necessary, and are we not legion in number compared to the preachers?

If this statement is true why is not Christianity of vital interest to the laity in a larger measure than is generally shown?

Christianity is Christlikeness, and that means the Spirit of God manifested to our fellow men, in our everyday life. If this definition is true then let us compare our life with that of his Son Jesus who lived and wrought as men should today.

Jesus the greatest founder of any religion once asked his disciples, or new students, who were to become promoters of his religion, this great question, "Whom say ye that I the Son of Man Am?" Other founders of religion have asked their followers great ethical and theological questions but none ever asked such a fundamental or far reaching one. There had been much discussion among the people at large as to whom Jesus was, but this was not of so much concern to him as what the disciples thought of him, for upon the principle and fact involved in the answer Jesus was to establish his new religion which is possibly well summed up in the New Commandment he gave them, "That they love one another as he had loved them."

The thing that differentiates Jesus from all other foundders of religion, was that he did not say I will show you the way, but that "I am the Way," not only was he the Way, but he was the Truth and yea, the very life of his religion, namely Christianity.

If ye will follow me you will not only know me but my Father-God. His answer to Philip clearly reveals this truth, "Have you been so long a time with me Philip, and not known the Father?"

If vital religion as lived and interpreted by Jesus were the chief concern of the laity today, what effect would it have on the members themselves and on the community? In order for the laity to make vital religion their chief concern we would crave to learn to put first things first. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God."

Take the fundamental sin, "selfishness," see it manifested as you enter a train, folks will sit in a seat alone and when a family comes in who would like to sit together, the one alone thinks, and demonstrates his thinking by his action, I was here first and I paid for this seat, and there he stays. The same is true largely when it comes to letting ladies and elderly men stand while we sit, and more selfish still, when one happens to be in the seat first, we take our half out of the middle of the seat and expect the newcomer if he wants to sit at all to take his half of the seat on both sides of us because we were in the seat first. Think you that this statement is overstated, or deals largely with non-Christian people? Just watch the first people in the church next Sunday, and see how many of those who are first in the pew, sit right down at the aisle and make the next ten people crawl over them to get into the seat,—and they are supposed to be Christian—"Christlike" people (?)

Again, if VITAL religion were the chief concern of the church members, what effect would it have on the attendance at church services? Would there not be need for more kneeling benches and less need for swing, and auto cushions? There would be more "Alone with God" experiences, and less tea parties, clubs and social affairs, as good as many of these are. There is plenty of need and room for some of these, yet we must remember that the good is the enemy of the best. More "Alone with God" experiences would produce more Philips, Pauls and Moodys and Billy Sundays.

Vital religion should be no different in the pew from what we expect it to be in the pulpit. It consists of practicing the written, verbal and acted answers of Jesus to the questions of his day as well as to those of our day.

It is the opinion of many religious leaders that we are beginning to make religion more vital, and the financial movements of many denominations, and the Inter-Church movements are cited as illustrations of this. Other characteristics of this new awakening are the demand that a religious survey of the cities disclosing the needs of the people of the communities be made, and that a budget adequate to meet the needs be raised, and both men and money be secured to meet the needs in the name and spirit of Christ. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these," says Jesus, "ye have done it unto me."

Such a movement is man's co-operation with God in his plan to save the world through Jesus. But religion that is vital will effect the individual and family as well as the community, and will be effective by clearly facing each problem we meet. Study the Bible and find the solution Jesus offers and then apply that solution. Such a plan will change formalism in religion into vitalized religion or Christianity.

Religion that is vital will make you yearn over men's sinful condition, pray for their redemption, and if need be die to save them.

"The Evangelistic and Bible Study League--The Need and the Objective"

(Address by J. C. Beal, given at the Southern California Bible Conference, at Long Beach, and, by vote of conference, requested publication in the Brethren Evangelist)

Some months ago there was born out of prayer and of deep concern for the welfare of the souls of men in this day of apostasy, the organization known as "The Evangelistic and Bible Study League." This organization received the approval of the representatives of our churches of Southern California at a convention held in the First church of Los Angeles. At that time a constitution was adopted which in a general way sets forth the reasons for the organization as well as the means to be employed to meet the pressing need of our day.

It is my task today to set forth more fully than the constitution has done the need for the organization also the objective as worked out by those who were, as human instruments, responsible for its creation. Nothing I might say could any better set forth the general need and objective of the organization than the preamble of the before-mentioned constitution. The preamble follows:

PREAMBLE

Realizing the apostasy now threatening Christendom, in this age of Bible criticism, when thousands of church members are being swept into the fads and frauds of religious movements; with a dearth of spirituality in the churches and a growing indifference to the claims of the Gospel, we as members of The Evangelistic and Bible Study League feel bound, with our claims of a whole Bible and a whole Gospel, to put forth a special effort in leading men back to the Word of God and anchoring their faith to the Rock, Christ Jesus, and thus reaching forth to save lost men.

The preamble claims:—

1—That we are in an age of apostasy which is threatening Christendom.

2—That this is an age of Bible criticism, of course, understood as of the destructive sort that has had its origin in Germany.

3—That there is a growing indifference to the claims of the Gospel.

4—That church members are being swept into fads and frauds of religious movements.

If these claims be true they furnish sufficient need for the bringing into existence the organization relative to which I am speaking at this time. It becomes, therefore, my task to prove that the conditions as stated in the preamble of our constitution do exist.

That this is an age of apostasy is evidenced by:—

1—A mutilation of the Word of God in a manner hitherto unknown. I presume that in all probability at least most of us if not all have heard of "The Shorter Bible" covering the New Testament scriptures. The chief author of this production is Prof. Charles Foster Kent of Yale University, one of the leading destructive critics and as one writer has said, "the echo-man of German-made infidelity in our country." I take time to give a brief synopsis of a review by a noted Bible student and teacher: "We notice the contents of this 'Shorter Bible' first. He has re-arranged the record of the synoptic Gospels under seven divisions:

1—The universal significance of Jesus' birth.

2—The life of Jesus.

3—The Master teacher and his disciples.

4—God and Man.

5—Man and Society.

6—Man and his neighbor.

7—The essentials of true happiness.

Different parts of the three Gospels are taken out of their divinely given places and jumbled together to suit the purpose of this critic. In looking over these seven parts we find the name "Jesus" is used 34 times, but NOT ONCE is he called Lord. It is constantly his earthly name; never once is he designated as the Lord. The way the Epistles are treated gives conclusive evidence what spirit is behind this attempt to introduce a Shorter Bible. We give a few illustrations. Here is Romans 3:19-28—that sublime passage containing such vital truths. The whole passage is given in this Shorter Bible except two verses. The verses omitted are the twenty-fifth and the twenty-sixth, the most important: "Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time his righteousness, that he might be just and the justifier of him who believeth in Jesus." What reason can there be given to mutilate this great passage? Perhaps Prof. Charles Foster Kent and his associates have but little use for the blood, for the substitutionary sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ. Not believing it, it is as much as possible eliminated from this Shorter Bible."

Besides this let us see something of the way in which the Epistle of Paul to the Ephesians is treated. Only the first five verses of that great first chapter are given. Why the omission? The blood. Read the passage for yourself. We turn to 1 Peter 1:18-20. This too is missing. The first nine chapters of Hebrews treating of the Priesthood of Jesus is omitted and the entire matter found in these chapters is summed up in a very few verses in the Shorter Bible. This despite the fact that the preface of the "Shorter Bible" says, "the passages in this work contain the true heart of the Bible that has proved the inspiration of past generations and will prove in increasing measure the guide of those to come." Not a word is given concerning the resurrection of Lazarus. Matthew 12:38-42 is quoted except verse 40. Read this and see why it is omitted. 1 Thessalonians 4:13-18 finds no place in the work of this critic. But enough of this. Woe unto the man who takes away from the living, the holy Word of God. God will surely deal with those who try to destroy his truth.

2—The denial of the fundamentals of our Christian faith.

I quote from an article that appeared in the Biblical World over the signature of Prof. Case of the Chicago University on the subject, "The Modern Critical Estimate of Jesus—Significance for Religion."

"The doctrine of the virgin birth is not an integral part of the New Testament records; in fact, it is contradicted by the bulk of the Gospels as well as by the testimony of Paul's letters and the Acts. He was sinless not because he was so born that he could not sin, but because his choice of God was so absolute that he did not. The ruling ideas of our age so discredit miracles that they can be accepted only on such evidence as may be regarded sufficient to substantiate other statements in the field of history. Jesus' exercise of the gift of healing is found to be the historic basis for the miraculous element in the Gospels and all else is legend; but this power to heal did not differ in kind from that which other good men of his day possessed and was dependent for its effect upon the patient's own mental attitude. Jesus was not an object of worship, but the ideal religious man in whom divinity, which appears in others as a mere spark, glowed with full brilliancy. From this standpoint his supreme value today lies in our knowing and appreciating the real character of his earthly life and the actual life contact of the historical Jesus. Read this again, Christian believer; and see what this writer says. No Deity of our Lord—no virgin birth. Christ not sinless by nature. The Gospels in the greater part of their contents but legend.

3—The breaking down of all obstacles to the unification of all faiths in preparation for one supreme ecclesiastical head. Permit me to quote from the Cleveland (Ohio) Plain Dealer of a recent date. "The new day in the history of religion has arrived. A rabbi will enter a Cleveland Methodist church on February 13 and will preach a revival sermon concerning Jesus Christ from the pulpit of that church. A world war has changed the boundaries of nations, giving freedom to the oppressed and wrought transitions that a few years ago were unbelievable, but none of them perhaps holds as much significance along the lines of new thought as the decision of Rabbi Louis Wolsey of the Euclid Avenue Temple to talk about Jesus Christ in a Protestant evangelistic campaign."

This is certainly progress but progress in the wrong direction. It is development downward and not upward. This Jewish rabbi does not believe in the deity of our Lord nor does he believe in the Cross of Christ and the blood without which there is no remission of sins. Inviting an unbeliever to preach a "revival sermon" shows the lengths to which men are willing to go and it also proves that the Word of God, the old Gospel is no longer preached. May I quote from the New York Sun of December 17, 1918, from an article which appeared on the front page of that paper. This quotation shows the revival of Romanism as a power in the religious world. "Thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and thine holy name is called upon by us; leave us not, O Lord our God.

"Remember, O most gracious Virgin Mother, Star of the Sea, that never was it known that any one who fled to thy protection, implored thy aid and sought the intercession, was left unaided. O mother of the Word-Incarnate, despise not our petition, but in thy clemency hear and answer us.

"O Lord, save us waking, watch us sleeping, that we may wake with Christ and rest in peace.

"Visit, we beseech thee, O Lord, our distant homes and families; thine angels guard them with thy peace and benediction. Bless this ship, we beseech thee, and drive far from her all the snares of the enemy; guide her upon a tranquil course unto the wished for haven. May the Lord Almighty grant us a quiet night and a perfect end. Jesus mercy, Amen."

From the 'Sunset Prayer at Sea' aboard the U. S. S. Leviathan." At sunset the buglers blew attention. Agnostic, Protestant, Jew, Catholic, atheist all stood rigid until the end of the prayer. To pray to the Virgin Mary is simply idolatry. This shows the increasing power of the Roman church when such a thing can take place on board a troopship of the United States. The barriers are surely being broken down.

The war is ended and the reconstruction days are upon us. There is need for reconstruction but there is no need of a reconstruction of the Gospel. The Truth of God, the Gospel is able to meet the needs of the human soul as it has been in the past years. However, there is growing evidence that men who think themselves wiser than the Almighty are demanding the giving up of the very fundamentals of our Christian faith. The following is a paragraph taken from a sermon preached by a leading Methodist preacher of the State of New York: "We seem to have many new things since this war has ended. We have a new religion, a new pacifism, and a new enthusiasm. Our religion was a process of saving a few souls here and there out of a world we condemned as bad. The new religion is a community affair, and we will make our towns and our cities the right kind of places so that everybody will be a Christian as a matter of course. Where it used to be hard to be good, it will become hard to be bad."

I would have you note that this New Theology which is being demanded has no place for nor use for the Cross of Christ, the blood, no use for the Gospel of Christ which is the only power of God by which God can save man.

The following are the words of a leading Presbyterian minister of New York City as they appeared in the January issue of the Atlantic Monthly:

"We have been continuously supplied, in hymns, in liturgies, in sermons, with Jonathan Edward's dominant ideal. 'I make seeing my salvation the main business of my life.' Even when this self-regarding motive has not been centered on a post-mortem heaven, it has been centered quite as sel-dishly on this present life. God appears as a gigantic policeman, forever clubbing those who break his traffic regulations, and feeding with goodies from his ample pockets those who mind his word, so that one had better keep upon his kindly side.—H. G. Wells is not the only one who was brought up in the churches on that kind of deity. It was a senior chaplain who, returning from the front, wrote of our religious thinking: 'It has descended through a steady gradation of selfish prayers and antiscotal hymns, till it reaches its final degradation in that definitely and shamelessly unchristian chorus, which was recently so popular in revival meetings—

That will be glory—glory for me!

Against the background of the millions of self-forgetful men who fought in France, how dark this record looks.'"

I give one more quotation. This is from Prof. Gerald Birney Smith, Professor of so-called Christian theology in Chicago University in his "Guide-book to the Study of the Christian Religion." The quotation follows:

"In the light of the new historical criticism, the Bible is a natural and not a supernatural book. A religion for the twentieth century must be made by twentieth century people. It was the Bible writers who adopted the myth of the God-Man. Our belief in the Godhead of Christ is a myth. There is now more appreciation of Christ as a man, and less emphasis on his virgin birth and his supernatural nature. The statement in the Scriptures that 'without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin' is both foolish and futile."

The individual who can not see the ear-marks of the apostasy in these utterances is indeed blind and unwilling to be made to see.

That the people are being swept into the fads and frauds needs only be mentioned. Any one who has even casually observed the growth of Christian Science as well as the other cults knows this to be true without further argument. Christian Science is the Devil's masterpiece and is a most effective way of gathering the tares into bundles preparatory to the burning.

That there is a growing indifference to the claims of the Gospel is manifest in the crowds which attend the movies and theaters on a Sunday evening and the empty pews in the churches. Recently a census was taken to ascertain the number of people who attend the Sunday night services in the leading Protestant churches in New York City and also a census of the theaters and moving picture shows. The report says that a number of places of amusement were attended by 38,000 people with big waiting lines of those who could not get in, while the churches were about a quarter full. One New York preacher said, "If you want an average attendance in your churches on Sunday night you will have to provide entertainment. That is, in other words, some kind of a show must be given, moving pictures or a big musical program to attract the average congregation. But even a religious show will not keep up an average congregation. It is too tame and the professing multitudes prefer the real thing, an evidence that it is as the Spirit of God predicted it would be in the last times—'lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God.'"

These conditions most certainly furnish sufficient need for a united effort on our part.

Another condition that makes some effort necessary is the situation in which the churches in the rural districts find themselves. In many cases they are unable to have proper religious instruction because of lack of finances and this makes them fertile ground for the propagation of dangerous doctrines.

The teachings which I have quoted so extensively are laying hold upon our colleges and universities. This makes the situation still more alarming and calls for our prayers and best efforts. Read the statements from various college professors. These are taken at random and give the general situation among the educational institutions of this country:

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

"Jesus and the Salvation of Society." By Z. T. Livengood

TEXT: "The Kingdoms of this world are become the Kingdoms of our Lord, and his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11:15.

Some one has said that, "The millennial hope is the social hope of Christianity." It seems to me that all so-called Christianity, of whatever type it may be, both east and west, is hoping and trusting for the Bible Millennium, when the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and his Christ.

In my youthful experience and also later in life, I was made to believe that the nations of the world were the representatives of hell, fighting each other, and devouring one another whenever and wherever they could. And there was an abundance of evidence that the fighting and devouring part was at least partly true. It seemed that salvation had to do with the individual alone, between the one individual and another individual; the activities between individuals must be just and right, but when the individual was dealing with society or a nation, then the law of righteousness did not apply.

Germany, in her schools, religion, politics and business, was the great representative of this false leading, and such teaching throughout the world was the one great cause of the late cruel war.

Let me illustrate this delusive doctrine in a more familiar way. A number of years ago it was no uncommon occurrence for a good church member, from any one of the very best churches, to defraud a railroad company out of a large part of his fare while traveling from one point to another; so common was this that members would tell laughingly, how they had beaten a big and rich railroad company. A rich man told me about 15 years ago, that the only way to make money was from the labor of society. This seems to be a primitive idea of society and is certainly very difficult to overcome. Present profiteering is an outgrowth of this same conception. The world crisis of today, the revolution and strife now ravaging the world is the natural outcome of this pernicious and unchristian policy.

Here is the error, that Jesus came to save the person, but not society, nor the nations. To me "there are two personalities Jesus wants to save, the personality of man, and the great collective personality of mankind." Why should I be just and right with my brother and defraud society, or a nation, or a community? To my mind, the individual is not thoroughly saved who will defraud any person or a company or a nation or society. Then, on the other hand, a nation or community or society that defrauds the individual is not to remain on earth, but ought to be changed into a just and righteous concern.

I am sure that Jesus came to save the individual, and to save him completely, thoroughly, and save him so that when he becomes a governor or a president he will be a genuinely saved man in all his acts and deeds.

This may be difficult to do, and some may say it can not be done. Yet this will be done some time, "For righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the deep." And some time "nations shall learn war no more." The powers (or governments) that be are ordained of God. Governments, I believe, are ordained of God to protect the life and property of the individual. Unrighteous governments are a great curse to humanity, but righteous governments are a great blessing.

I can not conceive that God and Jesus could be pleased when a strong nation robs a weak one. No, "Righteous exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people."

What do I say then? Let our individual salvation be so complete that we will practice it in our entire lives. At home and abroad, with the individual and society. Yes, Jesus died for the whole world. For the personal man and for society.

The millennial will come. Are you preaching it? The world is filled with the spirit of war and fighting. Every one wants to "strike" and quarrel and fight.

What are we preaching? I wish the day of the Lord would come. I wonder if we really are ready for his coming.

Ten Reasons Why the Best Conference

By G. C. Carpenter

1. The fine weather through the week.
2. The large attendance of loyal Brethren.
3. The ever forward and the ever upward look.
4. The conquering spirit of all the delegates.
5. The determination to meet God's new day-challenge.
6. The splendid mission reports and the enlarged mission plans for the future.
7. The promised blessings to come through the new organization, "The Evangelistic and Bible Study League."
8. The atmosphere of devotion and prayer and consecration that enveloped and charged the whole conference.
9. The splendid conference program every day beginning before breakfast and ending before midnight and culminating on Sunday night with messages from Evangelist Billy Sunday and Dr. G. Campbell Morgan.
10. The spirit of Christian harmony and Christlike love and earnestness all of which forbodes the next twelve months, the last year of our four year drive, to be indeed, in every way, our VICTORY YEAR."

PERU, INDIANA.

"The Decalogue is no more sacred than a syllabus;" "The home as an institution is doomed." "There are no absolute evils." "Immorality is simply an act in contravention of society's accepted standards." "Change from one religion to another is like getting a new hat." "Moral precepts are passing shibboleths." "Conceptions of right and wrong are as unstable as styles of dress." "Wide stairways are open between social levels, but to the climber children are an encumbrance." "The sole effect of profligacy is to fill tiny graves." "There can be and are holier alliances outside the marriage bond than within it."

When we know these things is it any wonder that fathers and mothers shudder at the thought of sons and daughters being under such teaching during their college course?

The objective of the organization is to be found in the preamble. Briefly stated it is as follows:

- 1—To lead men back to the Word of God.
- 2—To anchor their faith to the Rock, Jesus Christ.
- 3—To reach forth to save lost men.

This is an objective that ought to challenge our deepest interest and our best effort.

The objective of the organization is to be achieved by:—

- 1—An adequate membership. We need men and women interested in a definite way. We must have your prayers and your finances as well. The work can not be carried on as it should be without the necessary financial support.

2—Taking the Word of God to hungry souls. This is to be done by giving opportunity for definite Bible study under competent leaders. This is to be accomplished by the Institute plan.

3—Carrying the Gospel to neglected fields through evangelistic effort.

4—The distribution and sale of good and safe literature to take the place of what is so frequently read.

May this conference give this work such an impetus that will make possible the going into the fields "white unto the harvest" and snatching men and women as "brands from the burning."

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Higher Friendship. By Delbert Whitmer

OUR SCRIPTURE

Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends. Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you. Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his Lord doeth; but I have called you friends: for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you (John 15:13-15). Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world (Matt. 28:19, 20).

OUR MEDITATION

Life is an education in love. It comes to us at many points, trying us at different levels, that it may get entrance somehow, and so make our lives not altogether a failure. When we give up our selfishness and isolation, even in the most rudimentary way, a step is taken that will carry far toward cultivation of that higher friendship. If it were not so, life would be a hopeless enigma, and the world a meaningless farce. There must be a spiritual function intended, a design to build up strong and true moral character, to develop sweet and holy life otherwise history is a despair, and experience a hopeless riddle. All truly great human life has been lived with a spiritual outlook, and on a high level. Men have felt that there is no justification in pain, sorrow and failure, if these do not serve a higher purpose than mere existence.

And spiritual man has also discovered that the very breakdown of human ties leads out to a larger and more permanent love or friendship. A man must discover that there is an infinite life in him, which only the infinite can match and supply. Man is capable of the heights of friendship. But man can never take the place of God, and without God life is "horn of its glory."

So the human heart has ever craved for a relationship, deeper and more lasting than any possible among men. The limitations and losses of earthly friendship are meant to drive us to the higher friendship. Life is an education in love, but the education is not complete till we learn the love of the eternal. Ordinary friendship has done its work when the limits of friendship are reached, when through the discipline of love we are led into a larger love, when a door is opened out to a higher life. We are sometimes driven out not knowing whither we go, not knowing the purpose of it; only knowing that here we have no abiding city, or home, or life or love; and seeking a city, a home, a life, a love that hath foundations whose maker is God.

There have been implanted in man an instinct, and a need, which make him discontented till he finds content in God. The solitude of life in its ultimate issue is because we were made for a higher companionship. If we believed in God only because our reason gave warrant for the faith;

it would not matter much whether he really is, and whether we can really know him. But when the instincts of our nature and the necessities of the heart-life demand God, we are forced to believe. He claims everything but he gives everything. We part from men here to meet God, that we may be able to meet men again on a higher plane of friendship.

We were born for the love of God; if we do not find it, it were better for us if we had never been born. We may have tasted of all the joys the world can offer, have known success from every angle, but if we have not found this the chief end of life, we have missed our chance, and can only have at the last a desolated life. But if through the joy or sorrow of life or through the gaining of friends or the loss of them, we have been led to dower our lives with the friendship of God, we have achieved the great purpose of life.

Communion with God is the great fact of life. It is the experience of the nearness of God, the mysterious contact with the divine, and the consciousness that we stand in a special individual relationship with him. Men of all ages have known this close relationship. The possibility of it is the glory of life; the fact of it is the romance of history. All devout men that have ever lived have lived in the light of this communion. Men have known this communion to such a degree that they have been called pre-eminently the "Friends of God."

To us, in our place in history, communion with God comes through Jesus Christ. It is an ineffable mystery, but it is still a fact of experience. Through Jesus Christ all things are made possible and he becomes our ever present friend. We offer Christ our submissive hearts, and our obedient lives, and he offers us his ever abiding presence. We take him as our Master, and he takes us as his friends. "I call you no longer servants," he said to his disciples, "but I have called you friends."

Sometimes we are brought nearer to God through our friends, but oftener the experience has been that, through our union with the Friend of friends, we are led into closer relationship with our fellowmen. The nearer we get to the center of the circle, the nearer we get to each other.

We ought to make more of our Christian friendships, the communion of saints, the fellowship of believers. Have we an increasing interest in the things which interest Christ? "Ye are my friends if ye do whatsoever I command you," is the text by which we can judge ourselves. Even if sometimes we almost doubt whether we are really in this blessed covenant of friendship, our policy is to go on loving and serving him, and striving to please him, and he will not disappoint us.

To know that we are ever before him, taking him with us into the market place, into our business, and into our pleasure, and to have him as our familiar friend in joy and sorrow must be a source of strength, lifting life to a higher level of thought, and feeling and action.

The man who lives with Jesus knows him to be a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. Some even say, "Oh, that I knew where I might find him." It is true that love can not be found, but we can bring ourselves into the presence of the lovable. We can enter into friendship through discipleship, and the day will come to us also when the Master's word will be true, "I call you no longer servant, but I call you friend."

OUR PRAYER

O God, who are evermore present, let thy loving mercy and compassion rest on the head of thy servants everywhere. May we all feel within ourselves that greater and higher friendship, that we can experience only in thee and by allowing ourselves to be brought into that close relationship with thy Son, Jesus Christ, who is our ever present friend. May thy Holy Spirit guide us in the paths of righteousness and bring us nearer to thy providential care, and we will give thee praise forever and ever. Amen.

September Slogan: "Back to the Bible" in School and Home. By Wilbur F. Crafts

The supreme task of Christian patriots for September is to start both the school year and the church year right by restoring and improving daily Bible reading in homes and schools. Juvenile delinquency and social unrest are increasing; Sunday school attendance and Sabbath observance decreasing.

For the sake of the Nation and the world, let the recent financial "drives" in the churches be followed by a "drive" for daily Bible reading—not mere "reading in course" to fulfill a vow, but apropos readings that will help individual and social life. And let the movement to put wall charts of the Commandments in the schools and mills and courts and on the outside of churches be taken up in every county by some preachers' meeting or Bible class or young people's society. Every court house should show its cornerstone in a tablet containing God's law. In addition to previous indorsements of these plans by Hebrews, Catholics, and Protestants we have just received the Catholic Bishop of Porto Rico's approval of proposal to post Commandments in "upper grades of public schools."

The International Reform Bureau (206 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.) is sharing expense of these movements, and invites correspondence. North Dakota plan and Gary plan help only church-going children. The other half of the youth which still more needs the message of the Bible, can be brought in contact with it only by Bible reading in the public schools. This is required daily by law in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Tennessee, and in New York City. If it is not so read it is the fault of the lazy and timid citizens of those States who do not see to it that their laws are observed. Arizona is the only state where Bible reading in schools is forbidden by law, and Illinois is the only one where the last court decision is adverse, and that is an old decision that some teachers disregard, and all might, challenging a new trial of the issue. The gradual banishment of the Bible from American schools, in which daily Bible reading was once universal, has been a cowardly retreat of Protestants before a propaganda whose object is to make schools "Godless" as an argument for a division of the school fund between public schools and sectarian schools. Catholics should be frankly told this is impossible, as it would mean not a division of the school fund in two parts, but into more than one hundred and fifty parts, as every sect must share pro rata, and the pro rata changes yearly.

Some Protestants argue "Bible reading in schools is of no account unless it is read by spiritual persons." But that would shut out much of the Bible reading in Sunday schools and homes, and even in pulpits. All along the line let us work for more impressive Bible reading, but meantime we will not give it up because elouctionally and spiritually not of the highest grade. It means much to the young to have the Bible opened first of all books in school and college day after day. It is assumed that even churches cannot secure daily Bible reading in the homes of their members. But it has been done and can be done if the same energy is put into it that is put into financial "drives." And there is a great need of a "drive" for good reading generally. The recent examination of Henry Ford should compel a general effort to promote reading of history. Let libraries have twilight talks on real books, and let pastors organize "Round the World Tour in Books" as the best social center for young people. The Reform Bureau will send plan free to all who apply, with stamp.—From Reformed Messenger.

The Education We Need

The need of our country is not to lift marble to the fortieth story of some new office building, but to lift the level of character; not to whiten the seas with the sails of our commerce, but to develop those simple fidelities and homely virtues which are the chief defense of nations. When Tennyson wrote "The Crossing of the Bar," he did more for civilization than if he had built any ocean-liner or man of war. Thomas Stevenson did much for England when he built the lighthouses which send their radiance each night over the tossing waters of the Channel. But we owe far more to his son, Robert Louis Stevenson, because he taught us how to kindle a light within, how to keep the soul serene and steadfast in the face of pain and death. When Millet seized his brush and painted the "Angelus" on the bit of canvas that cost him three francs, he did more for labor and the laboring man than if he had seized a spade and worked for fifty years in the fields of France. Not the men who add to our quantity of materials, but the men who deepen the quality of our living, are the real benefactors and educators of the world.—William Herbert Perry Faunce.

"Oh Lift Me Up So I Can See!" By Miss Gertrude Ham

Margaret Slattery was standing on the corner of "The busiest street in the world," watching a parade, when a dirty little four-year old waif came running to her with outstretched hands and pleading eyes crying, "Oh, lift me up so I can see." Margaret Slattery lifted the child and holding her close to her heart, heard in her plea the cry of the whole world of girls who are begging to be lifted up that they may see. And thus was born the world's Y. W. C. A.—born because in spite of the turmoil and confusion, the unrest and noise, one busy woman separated herself from the din, even while she continued to be in the midst of it, caught a vision of Christ in the eyes of a child and through prayer and consecration worked out her vision.

Who can estimate the result of one busy consecrated life?

As I listened to the story there flashed through my mind the thought of the millions of people who are today crying out, "Oh, lift us up so we can see."—The great throbbing heart cry of humanity. And men and women who know the power that can lift and save are too busy to take the suffering world into their arms of faith showing them the risen Christ, who if he may only be seen will draw all men unto himself.

If we would know the sorrow of humanity we must get under its burden. If we would alleviate the suffering we must first feel it—know it.

In today's mad race for fame, for achievement, for wealth and pleasure; in the sharp struggle for existence and in the strife, we must stop short, for our self-seeking and remember those about us, who, weaker than we, are crying, "Oh lift us up that we may see." We who have acknowledged him and have been too busy—too indifferent—to pray must recognize the power of the lifted Christ in our own lives and must lift hands of prayer both for fellow man and ourselves. For,

"What are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain
If, knowing God, they lift not hands of prayer
Both for themselves and those who call them friend;
For so the whole round earth is bound
With golden chains about the feet of God.

In the twisted, restless today of reconstruction there is greater need for personal knowledge of God than ever there has been, and until Christ becomes real to those who have accepted his love, men and women and little children will cry in vain, "Oh lift us up so we can see."

May the church of Christ lend ear to the plea and lift and help those who are crying and in need.

Christian Endeavor at Winona. By J. A. Garber

Winona is a favorite spot for Endeavorers. It becomes a rallying center for Brethren young people at the time of General Conference. The late Conference brought an unusually large number and all seemed to enjoy themselves greatly.

Social Fellowship

Early in the week Brother E. A. Rowsey convened a general committee consisting of Miss Kanauer, Miss Cotterman, Miss Hildebrand and Mrs. Grosse. These persons planned and named sub-committees to conduct three Christian Endeavor meets. The first was a "Get Acquainted" meeting. On Thursday afternoon one hundred and twelve persons, by actual count, marched to Indian Mound where they engaged in singing and disposed of fifty of the "greenest things" in Indiana. A large number of persons assembled at Island Pavilion on Saturday morning for the C. E. breakfast. Entertainment was provided by Howard Leslie who recited amusing war stories and Misses Brumbaugh and Teeter and Messrs. Horlacher and Detsch, an argumentative quartet that staged a humorous debate. Talks of a more serious type were given by B. S. Stoffer, W. R. Deeter, Miss Mae Smith, Edwin Boardman and Dr. Jacobs. The hour proved to be both pleasant and profitable, and all are indebted to those who worked late and early to make it possible, particularly Brother Rowsey, George Walton, John Eck, the Misses Kanauer, Fudge, Brumbaugh, Eck, Cashman and others whose names have escaped the reporter.

Conference Sessions

The program for the conference sessions was carried out to the letter. Not one person failed to appear and every address showed that each person had made thoughtful preparation. For the most part the speakers were rewarded with the presence of a goodly number of hearers. The messages were inspiringly suggestive and replete with workable plans. We hope to secure the manuscripts for publication in these columns.

Plans for the Future

This being the last year of our Four Year Challenge effort, it was deemed unwise to make any changes in the National Cabinet unless very necessary. Brother DeLozier, our missionary superintendent, gave a ringing address on "Christian Americanization" and distributed about one hundred books bearing the same title, the home study text for November. Because of increased duties on account of his entering Lehigh University he insisted on being relieved of the superintendency of the missionary department, and Brother Marcus Witter was elected. He expects to carry forward the good work of his predecessor. All the other officers continue in office. They, in conjunction with the district officers in attendance, planned the future activities of our work.

Enlargement and Enlistment

The plan calls for a co-ordination of the monthly service themes announced by the United Society and our Four Year Challenge. "Enlargement and Enlistment" is the theme for September and October. Obviously enough, the aim is to increase the number of societies and to enlarge the membership. This effort relates in particular to Points 1 and 2 of our Challenge and to all others in general. The definite goal is a fifty percent increase all along the line.

Field Workers

Almost without exception our national and district officers confess failure to get the desired results through correspondence. There was a strong demand for a full time field worker. Finding it impossible to provide one at this time, a group of voluntary field workers was selected and assigned territory that they may cover without neglecting their regular work. The following persons were selected:

Northwest, Earl Hansen, Sunnyside, Washington.
Northern California, N. V. Leatherman, Ripon, Cal.
Southern California, Hazel Shively, Los Angeles, Cal.
Kanemorado, Jennie Bailey, Carleton, Nebr.
Illiokota, Edwin Boardman, Hudson, Iowa.
Northern Indiana and Michigan, Cora Culp, Nappanee, Indiana.

Southern Indiana, E. A. Myer, Bringhurst, Indiana.
Northern Ohio, E. A. Rowsey, Ashland, Ohio.
Miami Valley, Roy Patterson, Dayton, Ohio.
Western Pennsylvania, Mrs. Carl Grosse, Altoona, Pa.
Eastern Pennsylvania, To be supplied.
Maryland and W. Virginia, Mae Minnich, Greencastle, Pa.

Virginia, H. H. Rowsey, Roanoke, Virginia.

Observe the personnel of this list and you will be reminded that these persons are real Endeavorers definitely engaged in the work. Only three ministers are included and they are energetic young men who are willing to give some time to the strengthening of Christian Endeavor which has contributed largely to their development. The plan is to have these field workers visit every society in the assigned district. Society officers are earnestly requested to communicate with them for the purpose of arranging a conference. The conference may be held through the week or on Sunday. It may consist of one or more sessions. In addition to the general inspirational meeting, the field worker will meet with the cabinet and give suggestions as to the organization and promotion of the work. Assistance of this character by the field worker will create a revival in the society and enable you to attain all your goals. Who will be the first to call upon one of these field workers? And who will be the first of the field workers to make a report of his or her first conference? Let societies throw out the challenge "come on" and the worker will send back the response "Let's go."

Real Endeavor. By A. L. DeLozier

Christian Endeavor means something practical. There is danger of our discussing all kinds of missionary and other practical topics and still never getting away from the theoretical. The Italian name for Christian Endeavor is Attivita' Christiana (Christian Activity), so our little society claims the distinction of having been engaged during the summer in Christian Endeavor, or Activity.

Each Sunday evening at the usual hour we meet at the church and open our meeting, but instead of proceeding with the topic, we went into the heart of the Italian colony. Brother Fehnel proved to be a good leader for the open air work and was accordingly made permanent leader for the summer. He had us sing, then he prayed, after which followed two or three other addresses interspersed with song. Brethren Turner and Oswald were usually the ones to respond. By this time we had a good crowd of eager listeners. This much of the service was of course in English. Then the writer closed the service with a ten minute address in Italian and the listeners were invited to church and Sunday school "all 'angolo di 5a e Tighman strade."

Some of the Italian topics treated were:

LA DOMANDA CAPITALE—The Great Question.

LA RIPOSTA VITALE—The Vital Answer.

L'UNICA VIA DI SCAMPO—The only Way of Escape.

We cannot report any definite results from these meetings, but have every reason to believe that they were not in vain.

I suggest that other societies try this for the fall months. English alone will draw the foreigner and he can understand most of what you bring.

We had to abandon the Christian Endeavor topics, but only because our society is quite small. Where the society is larger the Endeavorers may be divided—some to speak on the street, while the others pray for them and take up the regular topic in the society's meeting place.

The Endeavorers of almost any society would enjoy this work and also have the happy satisfaction of knowing that it isn't theoretical Christian Endeavor.

Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Looking Forward. By Francis E. Clark

The happy vacation season is over; the still happier working days of the new church year have come. May the stored-up health and strength of the summer, whether our holidays were short or long, fit us well for the best year of service we have ever rendered to the Master Christ.

Those of you who were at the Buffalo Conference or have read the full reports of it (and that I hope means all to whom I write) know that it was unsurpassed in enthusiastic interest and in fruitful plans for the future. These plans are embodied in brief in our "Loyalty Campaign" and in our "Inter-State Challenges."

The "Five Goals" state these plans most succinctly and clearly. I would commend them to your very earnest, prayerful consideration and your active co-operation with Endeavorers all over the country in reaching them. Here they are:

A 50 percent NET increase in two years is quite possible in very many societies. In your Union are doubtless many such. Please see that all catch the enlarged vision. Most of our societies are needlessly small. They report on the average only about 35 members, even where the Sunday schools number hundreds. Be careful that the active membership shall consist only of "active, members," pledged, covenant-keeping Christians, but open the door wider to those whom you hope to win to Christ. The Alumni membership may also be a great help to our societies.

The second goal, "one or more societies in every church, or we will know the reason why," means a careful canvass of every church in the vicinity of our unions for new young people's, intermediate and junior societies.

"A Field Secretary in every state for whole or part time," "a denominational missionary budget," an Alumni fellowship in every union,"—our third, fourth and fifth goals, are all exceedingly important and reachable.

The "Challenges," a unique and most interesting feature of the Buffalo Conference, will stimulate work in every state. The goals and challenges have been printed in attractive form by the United Society; all should have copies of them. I enclose a copy of the "Loyalty Campaign," including Standards, Goals, Monthly Service Themes, and Christian Endeavor Week Program.

Let us carry the spirit of "Buffalo, 1919" into every society and local union in all our broad land, and the next two years will ever be memorable in Christian Endeavor history.

Again I appeal to you, the leaders of societies and unions, with all my heart, and in the Master's name, for two great years of service for him. "Come on!" I know your response will be "Let's go!"

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

PLEASANT HILL, OHIO

After a sojourn of nearly two years in the Miami Valley with the Pleasant Hill congregation, we are leaving the charge vacant October 1st for some other aspirant not yet chosen as successor.

Our period of service here has included the great "freeze up" of 1917-18 and the "flu" epidemic of 1918-19. The local church was hard hit by both of these handicaps. Though the flu caught every family in the church we lost no members. As a result of this malady and complications of chronic heart trouble the church has suffered the temporary loss of our esteemed church secretary, Miss Mazie Teeter, well known to many Evangelist readers and who after being an invalid for nearly ten months is now slowly getting back to normal condition. She has been greatly missed from the church activities.

So far five have been baptized and received into the church during our stay here. We found one soul a victim of the "flu" down in the "valley of the shadow" who called upon the Lord for life and salvation. At the very threshold of the "great beyond" we took her confession of faith and her promise to submit to baptism in case of recovery. The Lord heard the prayers and soon after she was received by baptism into the local church.

There are many souls here needing the gift of grace and salvation but the Lord is waiting for a Spirit-led and Spirit-filled people to win them.

We have found some of the finest souls here ever met with and wish the percentage was larger.

There is some fine young talent here which if properly conserved will be heard from in future years in terms of usefulness and power for the church. They are few but very precious, may the dear Lord keep them safe for himself.

This church is one of the first organized in the brotherhood and in recent years the list of pastors includes the names of Shively, Ashman, Watson, Smith, Baer and Pierce.

During the past year considerable repairs have been made on the church building, including a new heating plant and the repapering of the entire interior. The sisters of the congregation contributed a large percent of the zeal and the cash on these repairs.

Some time ago we tendered our resignation to take effect at the close of the regular pastoral year, October 1st. For the immediate future we are planning for evangelistic work. Any churches desiring help in this line may address me for the time being at Pleasant Hill, Ohio. W. J. BARNHART.

VACATION PREACHING

Ever since we have been engaged in the work in connection with the Publishing House and have been obliged to discontinue regular pastoral work we have accepted almost every opportunity to fill in vacancies and to preach for pastorless churches while they are seeking pastors, and for the past four summers we have filled such appointments at Gretna, Middlebranch, Glenford and again at Gretna.

When Brother Boardman decided to accept the work at Hudson, Iowa, the Gretna church invited me to preach for them again for a time and we have been visiting them on alternate Sundays throughout the summer. At the time of our last visit to Gretna a husband and wife were received into the church by relation. All who have ever visited the Gretna congregation know it is made up of some of the finest people in the state so it is needless to say anything along that line.

A New Pastor at Williamstown

The last week in August we received an urgent call to visit the Williamstown congregation for the purpose of ordaining one of their young men to the ministry. In obedience to this call we went to Williamstown on Saturday, August thirtieth and the next day preached an ordination sermon to a good congregation and at the close of the sermon ordained Brother Mark B. Spacht to the ministry. Brother Spacht is a native of the community that has called him to minister to its spiritual needs. He has been engaged in public school teaching for a number of years and has a wide acquaintance and many friends who have the utmost confidence in his integrity and in his ability as well. The Williamstown congregation has called Brother Spacht to become its pastor and we bespeak for both the church and the pastor a profitable year in the Lord's work.

We preached again in the evening to an appreciative audience and the next morning started for Winona Lake accompanied by Brother Spacht who attended the Conference as a ministerial delegate from Williamstown.

It seems to do a minister who was for many years actively engaged in pastoral work a great deal of good to be able to visit churches that need preaching and it helps him to keep in touch with the spiritual life of the church as well as to keep in practice as a preacher. For these opportunities we thank the brethren who have made it possible and we trust the churches have been blessed as well as we ourselves have been.

COLLEGE NOTES

All departments of the College are ready for the opening Tuesday, September 16th. While it has been difficult to secure teachers, yet the College has been able to fill all places in the teaching staff. Since the last issue of the Evangelist, Mr. Walter Leckrone, a member of the Church of the Brethren has been secured to take charge of the men's gymnasium work. With this exception, every member of the entire teaching staff is a member of the Brethren church.

Some changes in the faculty have taken place since last school year. Professor R. R. Haun, Higher Mathematics and Physics, is filling the place made vacant by the resignation of Professor A. A. Grubb.

Lucy Cowan Wimer, teacher of Piano, is filling the place made vacant by the resignation of Miss Wilma Lichty.

Mrs. Sarah Griffith, is instructor in Short-hand, and Dora Zimmerman will teach Violin and be Physical Director of Women.

Professor L. L. Garber returns to teach English.

Several of the girls who had planned to be in Ashland have been compelled recently to change their plans, due to illness in the family. So we have room for several other girls. It is not too late to plan to enter.

The College was favored by a visit from a former student, Rev. George Ronk. He was impressed with the general improved appearance of the College. The following are some of the improvements already completed, while still others are under way:

Three new hot air furnaces in the College building.

One new hot air furnace in the gymnasium. Some sanitary plumbing and electric wiring. Something more than a dozen rooms refitted in the Ladies' Hall.

New steel fireproof files ordered for the keeping of the College records.

Plans for the Immediate Future

1—Complete the campaign for endowment within the church, followed by a similar campaign in Ashland city and county. Goal $200,000.

2—The addition of some new teachers to the teaching corps, thus strengthening and enlarging the courses of study.

3—Increasing the enrollment, by doubling this year and by adding at least ten percent for the several succeeding years.

4—Mid-semester lectures to the members of the Seminary, at least as a matter of experiment.

5—Maintaining a high spiritual state within the school as both a reflex and a cause of a similar state within the church.

6—The establishment of a suitable mailing list, so that the friends of the college may share in the plans, the hopes, and the activities of Ashland College.

Let us pray and work for the attainment of these high and holy ends.

The special committee from the Board of Trustees of the College which was appointed at Winona Lake, recently purchased a business block in Ashland known as the Krichbaum building. This makes a sound investment and will yield a very good rate of interest. Those who are giving to the College may be very sure that the funds of the school are placed in the best possible way. This purchase is generally considered among real estate men as the best "buy" for some time in Ashland. Moreover, it will have the very desirable effect of showing the city of Ashland that the College is no pauper or charity affair, but that the Brotherhood is back of it and means business and means it with a renewed enthusiasm.

W. H. Beachler is now in Fremont, Ohio, where he is beginning his campaign.

I misread all signs if this does not prove to be an banner year for the College. It ought to be even so. The war is over and young men are now free to take up their schooling; times are good, and this will react upon school life. The general spirit of unity exhibited at Winona is bound to be felt in the college here. The teachers are able and enthusiastic, and no school can succeed if this is not the case. Pray for the College that this may be a fruitful year.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

THE ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

The Last Lap of the Endowment Campaign

Launched in the fall of 1917, the campaign for permanent endowment has now been in progress for two years. This represents more time than many of us supposed would be required for the completion of the task. And yet, another big, full year lies ahead before the brotherhood will have been covered. So that we consider that we are now just entering the last lap of the campaign.

The Ground Yet to Be Canvassed

By states and districts the work yet to be done is comprised in the Ohio churches, the Maryland and Virginia churches, the churches on the Pacific Coast, several churches yet in Illinois, and several small churches yet in Michigan.

The Result by States and Districts

The following is a statement of the results by states and districts and they appear in order as the canvass was made:

Indiana,	$29,000
Pennsylvania,	40,000
Kanemorado,	19,000
Illikota,	22,500

(With five churches yet to be canvassed in that district).

Michigan, 1,200
With some work yet to be done in that district. This represents a total of endowment raised to date in the present campaign of approximately $812,000.00. It would be indeed ungrateful on the part of the Campaign Secretary if he did not pronounce this a fine record. It is a fine record, to be sure—better by considerable than many of our most hopeful friends expected. And yet, I trust I may be forgiven if I suggest that, good as this report is, it would have been infinitely better if many of our people where I have been who have been blessed with large means would have enlisted for amounts proportionate with their ability. I am now about to give out a bit of information for the first time. I have on my books the names of approximately 2,200 individuals who have given to the cause of endowment in this campaign. These gifts run all the way from one dollar to one thousand dollars. Needless to say there have not been nearly as many one thousand dollar gifts as there should have been. And sad to say there has not been a single straight gift of $2,500 or $5,000. I am sure that it is good to popularize this campaign and seek the greatest number possible of gifts of all sizes. But surely our people of large means must wake up and think in far larger terms when they give to our college if it is ever to command the resources it must have to measure up to the standards set by this age. What I mean is just this: The results thus far achieved are good; but when that list of 2,200 names is taken into consideration, also the vast amount of hard work it took to enlist such an array of people, who will not say that the result should have been much better?

The Program for the Future

The program for the remainder of the campaign will be very simple just as it has been all the way along. It will consist of work and a lot of it. As God gives him strength your secretary will keep right on along the present lines until the last congregation within reasonable reach has had an opportunity to enlist in what is at once the most vital and significant movement ever launched in the history of the brotherhood. That many prayers have gone up to the throne of grace for the success of this campaign there is absolutely no doubt. That those who have been praying for this work shall continue to do so, and that many others may begin praying that God may bless the final drive of the campaign is the humble request of the Campaign Secretary.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

EAU CLAIRE, WISCONSIN

An Appeal to the Beloved in Christ

By this epistle may it be known that a worthy brother and member of the Brethren church, by name, A. E. Baker has been confined to the house and bed for the last three months, suffering terribly with rheumatism, doctoring with our best doctors and receiving no benefit. He is now going to Waukesha, Wisconsin for mud bath treatment. I wish to state that while he could work, he was employed by a shoe factory at rather small wages, and his continued illness has put him and his faithful wife in poor shape to face a long winter. I, therefore, as the one in charge of the little band at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, make the appeal for help from those that the good Lord has prospered for whatever amount you feel to donate to a needy cause, and I assure you that all money sent to the writer will be handed to the proper party. We also ask your prayers in his behalf.

J. A. BAKER,
613 Churchill St. Eau Claire, Wisconsin.

DOINGS AT RED HILL CHURCH, VIRGINIA

Our campaign with Brother P. J. Jennings began the 2nd of August, 1919. We had a very successful meeting. There were thirty-eight converts. Twenty-one were baptized into the Brethren church and one is yet to be baptized. Four went to the Church of the Brethren, two to the Baptist and the others have not yet decided their church relationship. All came to Christ through the Sunday school except four and they are all real conversions and not backsliders revived.

Both the community and the evangelist were well satisfied with the success achieved. The church gave Brother Jennings fifty dollars for his services. We think no one will make a mistake in selecting him for evangelistic work. He is holding a campaign at Garden City at present.

Remember that we are still on the map and desire the prayers of the brotherhood.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

FIFE-LESLEY — On Wednesday evening, August 20, 1919, at the home of Brother and Sister George S. Lesley, west of Flora, occurred the marriage of their daughter, Miss Gladys, to Mr. Lester Fife. Both young people are highly esteemed by their many friends. The bride is an active member of the First Brethren church at Flora. The groom is a member of the Baptist church. The marriage service was by the undersigned. S. C. HENDERSON.

BEVAN-WHARTON — On the 21st of August, at the home of the undersigned, occurred the wedding of Ervin Fae Bevan and Olive Jane Wharton. The groom is a member of the Bethany Brethren church of this place. The best wishes of a host of relatives and friends attend the young couple. GEO. E. CONE.

CRUM-MICHAEL — John H. Crum, and Martha Michael were united in marriage, at the parsonage at Burlington by the writer on the evening of August 21, 1919. Mr. Crum is a popular and prosperous farmer of Clinton Co. Mo., and Mrs. Michael is the daughter of the late Samuel Michael, and a resident of Burlington. Both of these contracting parties have been married before and lost their companions years ago, and this union will afford a fine opportunity for the enjoyment of the accumulations of the past and a happy home together. May the Lord bless them and in their home may Christ be an ever welcome visitor. W. T. LYTLE.

IN THE SHADOW

MILLER — Hester, only daughter of Brother and Sister S. I. Miller of Hamlin, Kansas, died, following a serious surgical operation at her home. She was nineteen years of age, a successful teacher and for a number of years a faithful member of the Brethren church. Funeral services were held in the church of the Brethren at Morrill by the writer, assisted by Brethren Cone and Whitted. H. F. STUCKMAN.

PICKERING — Ruby Edna, daughter of George W. and Elizabeth Pickering (also granddaughter of Elder J. W. Swihart), was born February 8, 1895, and departed this life August 13, 1919, aged 24 years, 6 months and 5 days. She being one of eleven children, leaves to mourn her departure seven brothers and three sisters, besides the grief-stricken parents. At the age of eighteen, Ruby united with the First Brethren church, at Cambria, Indiana, and remained a true and devoted member until at last called to her reward. The funeral was conducted by the writer at the home south and west of Cambria on the afternoon of August 15th. Interment at the Frankfort cemetery. W. T. LYTLE.

EATON — Susan Elizabeth Overholser, youngest daughter of Joel and Mary Overholser and the wife of our beloved Brother George E. Eaton, was born March 15, 1877, and departed this life at her home west of Bringham, August 20, 1919, after enduring two operations and suffering for at least a year and a half with an malignant cancer which during the last fifteen weeks refused to respond to any treatment. Her age was 42 years, 5 months, and 4 days. Sister Eaton has been a member of the First Brethren church of Flora, since November 28, 1908, and her devotion in the church and in her home were the factors that made possible her seeing the whole family brought into the Kingdom. Sister Eaton called for the Elder and was anointed according to James 5, before each of the operations, and she manifested a faith at all times in her affliction that "God doeth all things well." There are left to mourn her departure, the grief-stricken husband, and the two daughters, Mary and Violet (to whose future, Sister Eaton had always looked with great anticipation), the aged mother and one sister, Mrs. Cora Wise, and a host of friends and neighbors. Sister Eaton will be greatly missed in the church, for her desire was always for the comfort and joy of those whom she loved as brethren. While the husband has lost a true, devoted companion and the girls a companionable and compassionate mother, the community has lost a friend. This home with Sister Eaton as matron was properly termed "Pastor's Retreat," both for her and her family during seven years of our ministry at Flora, and we are made to feel the loss of a true friend. The funeral was conducted on the afternoon of August 21st by the writer and pastor, Brother S. C. Henderson.

The interment was in the Maple Lawn cemetery. May the Lord bless and provide for these who sorrow in the Christian home. W. T. LYTLE.

STEWART — Joel Sylvester, son of Wm. and Isabelle Stewart, was born near Ithaca, in Darke county, Ohio, May 7, 1843 and departed this life August 14, 1919, aged 76 years, 3 months and 7 days.

When about 7 years old his parents and family moved to Freble county, near Lewisburg, where he grew to manhood.

On the 3rd of July, 1864, he was united in marriage to Rachel Frame of New Hope, their companionship lasting till death took her from him October 3, 1918.

Being brought up in his father's flour and saw mill business he was well fitted for that work and after several years of study at Verona, Brookville and Gratis. He was a widely known and successful business man, always endeavoring to please his patrons, thereby gaining many fast friends.

Shortly after marriage he identified himself with the Christian church and worked with it until about 1886; when the Brethren organized at Gratis he with his wife united with that body, serving as Sunday school superintendent for a number of years, then as teacher. He was a regular attendant at the church services and derived both benefit and great enjoyment from them, always enjoying the Christian Endeavor work, and feeling it his duty to encourage the young people.

A number of times before passing on he expressed a desire to go home and be with those who had gone before.

His work is done and he is at last garnered as one of the countless sheaves that go to make up the great "Home over There."

C. E. BECKLEY, Pastor.

DIETZ — Martin M. Dietz, son of Elder Samuel S. and Rebecca A. Dietz, was born in Fayette county, Pennsylvania, in May, 1859. His father, a minister of the Dunkard faith, and a school teacher, departed this life in the latter part of the year 1863, leaving the widow with three small children, Martin being the oldest. While yet a small boy, he with his people, moved to Iowa, near Waterloo. His high ideals led him to seek an education and he worked to this end, graduating at the Iowa State Normal, in 1880. He taught school successfully and was also ordained as a minister. Yet the occupation in which he spent most of his years was the hardware business. He was in the hardware business at Hudson, Iowa, at the time of his marriage to Miss Ella Shaffner in 1886, also of Hudson, who graduated in the same class with him in the Iowa State Normal. Two years later they moved to Los Angeles, California. Here on May 15, 1918, the death of his wife occurred as the result of an automobile accident, he himself being badly injured. His grief and injuries caused a complication of diseases which brought about his death, August 8, 1919. He was anointed, August 5th.

He was baptized in the Brethren church by Elder S. H. Bashor, near Waterloo, Iowa. There being no Brethren church in Los Angeles, when they went to California, they united with the Pentecostal Nazarenes, in whose church the funeral was conducted by Rev. E. C. Cornell, assisted by Rev. Andrew O. Hendricks, the pastor.

He leaves two sons, Roger Shaffner and James Harvey; one sister, Mary A. Dietz of Hudson, Iowa; a number of other relatives and many friends to mourn their loss.

KOLB — Mrs. Mabel Kolb passed away June 11th, 1919, after an illness of several weeks. She was born April 20th, 1850, in Philadelphia. At the age of fourteen she united with the First Brethren church at Tenth and Main streets, and became one of its most active workers.

A few years after the organization of the Kensington Mission of this church, Mrs. Kolb and her husband, Louis S. Kolb, came to live in the work, and their zealous and consecrated labors were a great factor in the growth of that mission into the present Third Brethren church.

She was beloved by all who knew her, and will be greatly missed by many with whom she labored in the Master's vineyard. The writer will miss her as she served as secretary to the pastor, and her deep help the loss of her wise counsel and most earnest and willing service.

Funeral services conducted in the Third Brethren church by the pastor, June 14, 1919. J. E. BRAKER, Pastor.

WANTED — Man with machine. Good money for couple hours work in evenings.

Business Manager's Corner

ON TO VICTORY

While the past year has been the biggest year the Brethren Publishing Company has ever had we believe it is just entering upon its real career, and that there are yet scarcely dreamed of opportunities for it to go forward.

For many years the business has been handicapped by the poor location of the plant, and from the time we first entered upon our duties as Business Manager we have looked forward to the time when a better location might be secured; but the prospects seemed poor until last spring when two of Ashland's newspapers combined and a splendid new building was vacated by one of them. We at once began laying plans whereby this location could be secured for the Brethren Publishing Company. The building is practically new and is fifty by one hundred and fifty feet, three stories high. We felt it would be too great an undertaking for the Publishing Company to try to buy the building alone so we took the matter up with the trustees of Ashland College to see if some of the permanent endowment funds could not be profitably invested in this business block.

At a meeting of the Publication Board at Winona last week we presented the matter and the proposition received the unanimous approval of the Board and a committee was appointed to look into the matter immediately, and if found practical to join with the Trustees of the College in the purchase of the block. We then presented the matter to the Trustees in their Winona meeting and a committee was appointed to act in connection with the committee from the Publishing Company with power to make the purchase if in their judgment it seemed a wise investment. According to arrangements the Publishing Company was to secure an undivided one-third interest in the building.

On Monday after the close of the Conference a member of the committee called upon the agent having the sale in charge and at eight o'clock the next morning the committee met to inspect the building and at eighty thirty the purchase was made.

It produced one of the sensations of the season in the real estate world in Ashland, and has been pronounced by prominent business men to be one of the best bargains that has been secured in Ashland in a long time.

The first floor of the building will be occupied by the Publishing House on October first. On the second and third floors of the building are twenty suites of apartments, all rented and bringing in a good income. It seems almost a providential act that we are able to get into such a favorable location in the very business district of the city and at a time when an unusual real estate boom is on.

Like most pastors in the church we have had some experience in moving from time to time, and while moving one's household possessions is no small task, it is only child's play compared to moving the equipment and furnishings of a publishing plant. It will undoubtedly take us a week to make the transfer from one building to the other, and it will be out of the question for us to try to do any printing during that week so we will ask our readers and subscribers to be patient with us and to make no complaint because there will be no Evangelist published that week. We do not like to miss the publication of the paper, but all hands will be needed to aid us in our moving.

The Honor Roll

We do not want to become so excited over our moving that we forget about our Evangelist subscription list, and we are indeed glad to be able to announce the addition of another church to our Honor Roll. This time it is one of our newest congregations, Ardmore, Indiana. We do not believe this congregation has a pastor just at this writing, but Brother A. G. Carpenter sent in the list of subscriptions and we want to give this public recognition of this successful achievement in one of our newest churches. We extend a hearty welcome to the entire list of new readers of our church paper.

Re-Covering and Re-Making to Meet

The World Challenge

A RALLY DAY SERVICE FOR 1919

Sometime ago we sent an announcement of our new Rally Day Program to every Sunday school in the brotherhood. We trust you will co-operate with your school in preparing for the most successful rally day you have ever had. Our program will help you do just that very thing.

The program is planned with a serious purpose running through it and if properly rendered it will entertain and instruct and inspire. It is made to fit into the wonders of the times in which we live. Its timeliness is at once apparent.

The Supplement specially prepared to accompany each order for programs contains full information for those having charge of the preparation of the program and those who take part in it, together with recitations, hymns, exercises, suggestions, etc.

The price of the program with supplement is only $2.50 per hundred copies, just about half the usual charge for such a program. Send your order at once and begin your preparation for the "Big Day."

Some First Year's Lessons in Making a Church Paper

(Excerpts from Editorial Address at General Conference, Winona Lake, Indiana).

The first year of our working together in the making of a church paper is not yet fully gone. It has been a year of interesting and varied experiences in the school of editorship. In this as well as in other vocations, experience is a great teacher, more exacting than the teachers in college or seminary. I have sought to apply myself conscientiously to each new task as it arose, and yet I will not claim myself to be anything more than a beginner in this experience-school of editorship. I am quite sure there are a great many more things yet to be learned than I have thus far attempted. But even in so short a time I could not fail of coming into a partial understanding of certain problems and facts related to the making of a church paper, and in these I trust you will be interested.

In this short time I have learned that the brotherhood is willing to co-operate in making a valuable, original and representative Brethren paper, far beyond my expectations. And I have learned more than I could ever have imagined how necessary such co-operation is to the making of a paper such as will meet the needs of our beloved church. No one man could possibly write the whole paper and few people would appreciate it if he could. No half dozen men, busy as all are at their various vocations, could write all the material that should go into a church paper every week throughout the round year. But if it were possible, it would not make a representative paper. To make the most representative and widely read church paper possible, I am convinced that we must have the largest possible number of contributors. That, I have been seeking to do, and I crave the co-operation of the pastors in enlarging still more the number of persons on whom I can count to write an occasional article for the Evangelist. I have met with the most hearty response thus far in soliciting contributions, and for such response I am deeply grateful. My short experience makes me confident that both ministers and laymen are willing to give loyal co-operation in the making of an original, representative church paper if they are given opportunity. Such opportunity, I am anxious to extend more widely than has yet been possible.

I have learned something of the need of patience in the making of a church paper. Patience is needed on the part of all. The editor needs it. He needs to exercise patience when contributors fail to send their material on scheduled time, when correspondents lay his letters aside and forget to reply, when misunderstandings arise between contributors and both sides blame the editor for favoring the other. The writers need to exercise patience when their contributions are not published as soon as they expect after reaching the editor's hands. We cannot make an original paper by working on a "hand-to-mouth" basis, we must have a supply of articles in reserve constantly. They need to exercise patience when the "blue pencil" is used on an article hastily written and mailed without correction, as occasionally happens. Sometimes we write things that we ourselves would not want published if we should read it after we have had time to think more carefully about the matter. In these and many other instances patience is needed. It is a most necessary as well as a becoming virtue. Everywhere it bears fruit in friendship, success and personal triumph. It is a virtue conspicuous in the life of our Lord. In all his dealings and relations with men he was patient and tender. By seeking to emulate his example we can contribute something to the success of our beloved church paper.

Consideration is a word whose meaning I have come to understand in a larger way as it applies to the work of building a church paper. In all co-operative undertakings, success can only come through a mutual consideration. Rudeness, unkindness and personal thrusts never unite men, never change men's opinions or conduct, never improve conditions in any way, but they result in friction, wounded feelings and division. We sometimes pride ourselves upon the fact that we are "plain spoken," that we never gloss over the truth. And there are men peculiarly along that line. But usually such expressions are mere excuses for rudeness and roughness of speech or written word. When an opportunity comes for giving a harsh, cruel, unkind thrust, we will do it in the name of frankness and plain truth, and then pride ourselves on our courage. In such cases it is not the truth that hurts so much as the cruel manner in which it is expressed. Truth may be expressed either kindly or unkindly, in a Christian or an unchristian spirit. People don't object to truth so much as the unkind putting of it. Cruelty, whether of speech, written word or act, is never a thing to be proud of, and it always redounds far less to our advantage or credit than we suppose. In all our writings, it is both wise and Christian to be considerate of the feelings and good intentions of others.

Charity is a closely allied word that is quite important to our success. There are many ways in which charity may be exercised, but chiefly in the interpretation of articles written by our fellow-workers in Christ, especially the articles of those with whom we have frequent occasion to disagree. What an article means depends very largely upon what we make it mean. And what we make it mean depends not only upon our vision, experience and understanding, but also upon the spirit in which we read it. It is quite possible that what another has written may read quite a different thing to us from what the author intended. There are at least three good reasons why we should be very charitable in our interpretation of the articles we read. First, the inadequacy or ill-selection of words to express the real intent of the author. Even the men of largest vocabulary find that words are poor things to express the real intent of the soul. And if, as frequently occurs, those words or illustrations are unhappily chosen, the meaning that was intended may not be truly expressed. Second, the varied shades of meaning of the same words, make it difficult to get the exact shade of meaning intended. And the meaning which the reader receives may be more offensive or unsatisfactory than that which the writer had in mind. Third, the tendency or common fault of emphasizing one truth related to a certain subject out of all proportion to other truths which must go along with it in order to give forth a fair exposition of the subject is a very fruitful cause of misunderstanding. We are all very frail along this line. We become so very enthusiastic about one phase of a truth that we emphasize it as if it were the only or the whole of the truth with the result that misunderstandings arise. All these considerations make it very necessary that we shall be charitable in reading and judging other men's writings. Let us remember that charity seeketh not her own (opinions and expressions) and is not easily provoked (at the opinion and expressions of others).

May we go just one step further in our reasoning and draw the conclusion to which these considerations lead us. That is, we should be characterized by a spirit of toleration in our regards toward the content of our church paper. This is one of the most important facts that has been borne home upon my mind. Before you thrust me into this position I sometimes wondered why certain things with which I had no sympathy, and possibly thoroughly disbelieved should be published in our church paper. They were not food to my soul and I could not understand how they could be to any ones' else. But I have lost much of that feeling and my attitude has greatly changed, in that I have learned to tolerate to a much larger degree the expressions of opinions with which I may disagree. And I have learned that some things which are not appreciated by some may be real food for the souls of others. And the great desire of the editor is to make a paper to satisfy not one small portion or another, but the entire brotherhood. There is no hope that every one will appreciate everything every week, that would be miraculous if it should occur. But if every one can find something in the paper every week that will be food to his soul, we have succeeded as much as we can hope. We covet your prayers and help to this end.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother W. R. Deeter, the live pastor of the Oakville, Indiana, church writes of his summer work and the kindness of his people. It is always good to learn of such warm relations existing between pastor and people. With leader and church both bent upon "going forward," we are sure of the direction that will be continued.

President Jacobs is well pleased with the opening of Ashland College, as you will see by his "College Notes." Some of the pastors are occasionally paying visits to the college. Last week, announcement was made of Brother George T. Ronk's visit and this week, Dr. Jacobs mentions the visit of Brother L. G. Smith who brought two new students from Conemaugh. We are sure Dr. Jacobs and his co-workers will be glad to have more of our pastors visit Ashland.

The article on the Christian Endeavor page this week selected by Prof. J. A. Garber, who has charge of that department was written by the General Secretary of Christian Endeavor of the U. B. church, who has done great work in that denomination during his tenure of office. He is a friend of our own denominational head of Christian Endeavor, Brother Garber, who has done such noble work among our own young people.

Louisville, Ohio, church is still pushing ahead and we are confident it will continue to do so under the wise and energetic leadership of Brother E. M. Riddle. The Christian Endeavors especially are deserving of creditable mention. In a town where the churches were once lacking in the spirit of Christian fellowship, the young people of those churches, through the initiative of the Brethren Endeavors, have brought about a condition of splendid co-operation and fraternity. For a season some of the valuable young people were away in the service of the country, but now all are returned and are being found faithful to their posts of duty. With such a splendid combination as exists at Louisville now, we are expecting good things to be reported in the future.

Let us all congratulate Brother William A. Gearhart of Dayton, Ohio, upon his election to this new position and opportunity of service unto God, General Missionary Secretary of the Brethren Church, and then let us congratulate ourselves that we have such an efficient and consecrated young man to serve us in that capacity. Our prayers and co-operation will help to make his work both successful and pleasant.

Several expressions of satisfaction have been received concerning the late General Conference. Last week, Brethren Bame, Carpenter and Garber wrote concerning plans, results and prospects in consequence of the success of the Winona gathering. This week Brethren Jones and Deeter write briefly but to the point about it. Brother Deeter's "Impressions" will be read with no less interest because they appear among the church news. They were crowded out of the "General Articles" department.

Brother Morton L. Sands of Seargentsville, New Jersey, states in a personal communication that he has consented to remain with his present charge another year, after being pressed hard by the church to do so. He had already announced his intention to change. It is well to take such a call from a church as a call from the Lord. May it prove to be the best for all concerned. The danger of making our pastorates too short is greater than that of making them too long. In this connection we understood that Brother Witter has been prevailed upon by his people of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, to remain with them yet another year, which will make his eleventh year.

We cannot begin to hint at all the important things contained in Brother G. C. Carpenter's "Home Mission News," but we feel that it is not necessary to urge our readers to read it entirely, for without any reflection on any other writer, we can say that there are none read with more pleasure and profit. He is always finding something interesting to tell us along the line of missions and he cannot come too often.

Two more district conference programs appear in the Evangelist this week, Illiokota and Ohio. The Illiokota conference will be held at Cerro Gordo, Illinois and the Ohio conference will convene at Canton. Both are very good programs and should be carefully studied by all concerned. We cannot urge too strongly that all the churches be largely represented in their respective district conferences. It is here that plans are laid that come closest to each individual congregation. It is here that plans and movements launched at General Conference are adopted to the peculiar needs of the districts and ways and means are devised for carrying them out. And for most of the churches the cost of attendance at the district conference will be only a fraction of that required to attend the national gathering. Everybody loyal to his district.

Brother Beachler is delighted with the start that has been made in Ohio on the College Endowment campaign and when conditions are understood it will be agreed that he has a right to be. The Fremont church, not entirely self-supporting as yet, but struggling earnestly to stand alone in the near future, made the start and a noble start it was. It is not difficult, as the campaign secretary suggests, to explain Fremont's interest in Ashland College when it is remembered that the pastor, Brother Oberholzer is a graduate of the college and loyal to the core, and furthermore that Fremont has two of her sons now in Ashland College. Now if every Ohio church does as well accordingly as this one among the smallest has done, there will be no need to regret the result. The editor is a Hoosier by birth and rearing but has been for several years a loyal Buckeye by adoption, and can sympathize with Beachler's earnest desire to see Ohio make good in this campaign. Every consideration points so strongly to the necessity of Ashland College's home state going over the top, that if for any reason it should fail, it is to be feared that there would be an exodus from the state of all the ambitious and aspiring. But we are quite confident that when the finals have been reported there will be no need of the most ambitious hanging their heads over the result.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Future of the Rural Church. By Freeman Ankrum

One of the frequently discussed problems, or questions in many conferences and associations has been, "What of the Rural Church?" Many of us today have seen the once strong rural congregation finally drift to town. With the moving to town of some of the leading members and the settling of a small nucleus around them, we still find them for a while attending services in the country where they were given their early training in such matters. In the course of time something happens in the rural congregation previously left, then there is a move to build a church in town. Some of the old standbys object but the younger element push the project. A church building is erected and the nucleus in town organize with the younger people of the country and thus the church is no longer known as a rural church. Some of the more conservative members of the once thriving rural congregation find it hard to follow the drift to town, and perhaps may attempt to hold services. After a number of sporadic efforts the idea will be abandoned and we will find them following to town. An empty building will be left standing in the country to be eventually sold.

With some exceptions this has been the history of many of the rural churches. The drift has been unmistakably toward the towns and cities. This is perhaps more true where the church has been located near some village. The younger people will prefer the village church. Realizing that the church must have people and material, the leaders will decide to locate in the village, and then we have added to our list another over-churches hamlet. Another condition has existed that has meant the moving to town of the church. Some who have been the rural leaders and sometime charter members retire from the farm to the village. They who have been so long followers, continue to follow them in regards to a place of worship, and then a church is formed in the town. Better roads and speedier means of locomotion have made it easier to attend services in the town or city. All this detracts from the one and adds to the other. While the road is just as short from the town to the rural church vicinity, as is the reverse, we find the average tendency is to head toward town. These conditions described have been somewhat halted in the past three years since the great European war. More attention has been given to the rural districts than has been paid to them for many years.

We have in our own denomination today rural churches that have withstood the tendency to emigrate to town. Instead they have been favorably situated, not to close to town but far enough away to make them community centers. These congregations have grown and instead of having lost many of their members to the call of the city have drawn them from town to the country. These conditions have been the exception so far and not the rule. But in this case there may be a chance for the exception to become the rule. Conditions are changing faster today than at any time previous. That of which we dreamed yesterday has become the commonplace of today. Perhaps that of which we dream and anticipate today may become the commonplace reality of tomorrow. If not our tomorrow, the tomorrow of the next generation.

The past of the rural church is well known. Likewise the present. To predict the future we have nothing but the past and present. This is a day when predictions realize the unpredicted. Some things of which we dream become true beyond our fondest hopes. With the realization that the influx to town at the present time may be halted; there comes also the knowledge that the farm and rural community come to the front on the stage of life. When almost the entire world was plunged into war it dawned upon us with no uncertain light that much depends upon the efforts of them who make up the rural communities. This looking upon the farm and farm life with such great favor as it is being looked upon today, will draw the attention from town and city to the country, the place where it rightfully belongs. This will also keep in the country church many who on Sundays wend their way to the village.

When the Allied Nations shall have completed their task and the world turns from thoughts of war to the gentle arts of peace, the part the rural community has played in the conflict shall not be easily forgotten. They who thought the country life to be slow and unremunerative will see that they have been mistaken. The rural community will take its place as the leader of life, both sacred and secular. Having attracted the attention from the towns and placing it upon the once neglected rural church, many who had thought that it had served its day will reconsider and instead of moving it townward will lend renewed efforts to the work.

Leaders realizing that the church should be in the foremost community will forget their previous idea of abandoning the country church and moving it to the village.

After the dove of peace has been permitted to go to and fro safely and unhindered throughout the land: when the world begins the Universal Reconstruction and re-organization, so much needed and inevitable, then shall there be rendered unto the rural community its rewards. "The little brown church in the dale" shall become once more the power that it has been. Yes! Surrounded by beautiful valleys, waving trees, flowers and wide prairies, in the God-made country and not in the man-made city, the rural church shall become one of God's great instruments of power and righteousness.

"The New Day a Call For a New Aggressiveness." By Miss Mae Smith

Within the past two or four years at the most there has been much academic discussion in pulpit and press concerning the new world or the new day. Many of us recognize the principle; but we have not stopped to inquire into the facts of the age,—why it is that men everywhere are characterizing this age as peculiar and different. In an article of this length, only the very briefest mention of great outstanding facts can be made but they will suffice to establish reasons why we call it "The New Day."

In the first place nations, which hitherto have remained in the background, must now be considered when we think of world affairs. Never has the world been more interested in China than today. No more remarkable thing in the whole world has taken place than China's winning the world to believe in her determination and ability to become a republic. The world no longer questions China, but we know now that she is in earnest and will marshal every force to make good. China is revolutionizing herself intellectually, politically, and socially. She is breaking forth from the shell of the Chinese past and she is striving earnestly to become a modern democracy. Her great wealth, the strength of her people, her anxiety and willingness to break with old customs and traditions and to launch out into new paths has set a pace for Asia and the world.

Japan comes to be recognized as an integral part of the modern world. When we consider her efficient army and navy, her educational system, her adoption of modern business devices and the reorganization of her governmental life, we know that she is a nation which we must recognize. Within the last fifty years Japan has made as much progress as Europe in five hundred years. Men who know the situation are telling us that the Orient shall go in the future largely as Japan goes.

And South America is being discovered or rather re-discovered. Until recent years South America has been called the neglected continent and aside from a political interest in her there was none. Now she is fighting the problems of popular education, economic justice, and religious liberty. Interest in the nation is no longer confined to her wealth, her great agricultural advantages, of her mining industries; but all the civilized world eagerly reads of her progress in all lines. She is destined to play her role in international affairs when she has discovered herself.

In the second place our age is marked by the decay and decline of non-Christian religions. A careful observer writes that "The non-Christian religions are being stormed at with the shot and shell of western science, and they cannot stand the stress of the present siege." Another writer goes so far as to say that all Asiatic religions without a single exception are tottering to a fall. In India, Christianity is moving forward faster than the missionaries can care for the leadership. She is breaking through her caste system and seeking education, freedom and life. She cannot find it in her Hinduism,—she must turn to Christianity.

When Dr. Jerome D. Davis was returning to Japan in 1871 he left this message: "Have clearly in mind that the issue in Japan today is no longer between Christianity and Buddhism but between Christianity and nothing. Japan has already turned her back upon Buddhism and is seeking for some new basis for faith." Buddhism is losing its hold upon both public and private life. Of course the process of decadence is low but to the watchmen in Japan it is certain.

In China the same situation prevails only on a more acute scale of development. One clear sign of the decadence of her religion is the fact that hundreds of temples are now converted into schools. Another great outstanding fact is the evidence arising from the failure of the recent parliament to make Confucianism the faith of China. The movement was fought by native Christians and the victory for the faith of Christ was won. And the surest evidence arising from any source is the feeling arising on the part of patriotic leaders that China's supreme need is a better religion.

Mohammedanism stands discredited among the enlightened people today. There are no Moslem states. Turkey's political existence has ended and all the others are dependencies of Great Britain, France or Italy.

These facts have a deep significance to the church today. A tremendous challenge confronts us. Is the church ready for the new situation? Do we hear the Macedonian cry of the new age "Come over and help us find the new faith—your faith." "Come over and help us build a new civilization on the foundations of God." It comes as a clarion call to the young people of our churches. Like the call of a nation in the time of war, it is imperative. Out there lies the new world of opportunity. What is to be our relation to it all? What share shall we have in the regeneration of mighty Japan, of ambitious China, of neglected Africa, of troubled South America? The church has never faced such problems in the past. The world has never been so completely in her hands. One thing sure the church is aware of her problem and is engaged earnestly in its solution. Ministers confer on it; religious papers use it as a chief line of thought; the laymen of the church feel the situation and know it demands haste; and plans are being made to promote the Kingdom of God. Practically every denomination is launching a program of world progress and many interdenominational organizations are planning extensive campaigns in every part of the world. The signs are abundant that she has entered upon her task and is girding herself for the future. Her new task demands a new aggressiveness,—a new offensive and a renewed emphasis of the things worth while. Briefly the characteristics of the church for the new era must be the following: (1) If the church counts upon playing her part in the world she must be democratic. The great sower of the seeds of democracy was Jesus Christ himself; and just as his purpose was to raise all men above the distinctions of race, creed and tradition among themselves to fellowship and communion with God, so must the message and the purpose of the church be that. Every individual must know the saving grace of Jesus. (2) The church must be spiritual. The church that undertakes to fit into her niche with only human leadership is doomed to failure. Through his church God is working out great purposes and the church must be on her knees, seeking his divine will and purpose. (3) The church must be practical. Many must go to the fields which are in the process of making. We must have a new army to go over the seas,—an army of nurses, doctors, teachers, engineers, architects, business men and men from every walk of life. Those who remain at home must relate themselves to some definite and extensive Christian movement. We must have a supporting constituency at home. Men must get out of the old time method of routine giving and they must make investments abroad. Foreign missions must be brought into the very center of the life of the church. If John Wesley could say "The world is my parish" every Christian today can say it with double the meaning which he felt then. (4) The church must be a victorious church following a victorious Christ. We must follow the Christ who claimed all authority in heaven and earth and who commanded his followers to disciple all nations.

"Christ the Home of the Soul." By George Cone

Here we have a topic, for meditation, which contains three of the greatest words in any language. They are Christ, Home and Soul. Books upon books have been published upon each of these words in their various phases and meanings. Notwithstanding that fact we are to meditate upon them jointly for a few minutes.

In meditating upon these words as stated in this subject we wish to know where to lay the emphasis. Then we wish to know how each bears upon the other. Home seems to be the word which occupies the central place. The other words will play about this one.

We know that there are certain things which we all find necessary to a home. Not that we are so prone to call a home but a real home. Some of those necessary things are: love, faith, hope, sustenance (food and water), shelter and rest. These are only a few but they include some of the most prominent.

To say that Christ is the home of the soul, we must find from scripture whether he meets these primal needs. The soul has its needs as well as the body. How is Christ or how may he be the soul's home?

In thinking of how Christ furnishes the background of our love, we look to find the passages of scripture which teach of his love for us. We find in John 13:34, "A new commandment I give unto you, that ye love one another; even as I have loved you"; also John 13:1, "Jesus knowing that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the Father, having loved his own that were in the world, he loved them unto the end." If these do not satisfy our minds as to his love we will turn to other passages, very numerous, until we come to Romans 8:35, where it says, "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or anguish, or persecution, or peril, or sword?"

Loving us he has faith in us. Many times have we heard the story of Christ depicting to St. Peter how the plan of salvation is left in man's hands. How he said that if man failed the plan failed. It is merely a story but contains the truth. Christ has faith in us. Ephesians 3:14-17 says that only by faith can Christ dwell in our hearts, and our souls make him their home. Many other passages speak of faith, such as Acts 3:16, 1 Cor. 16:13 and 2 Cor. 5:7, etc.

Christ also is the hope of our souls. Without him we would be "without hope in the world." He possesses the hope also of working through us to spread hope to the uttermost part of the world. Proverbs 10:28 says, "The hope of the righteous shall be gladness," and 1 Peter says: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his great mercy begat us again unto a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." So we have the love of Christ his faith in us and the hope set forth.

We know that the soul, like the body, must have sustenance. So we, in our soul life, as well as in our physical life, depend on Christ for this sustenance. John 14:14 says, "If ye ask anything in my name, that will I do." This I believe refers as much to the soul as to any portion of man's life. Luke 11:9, "And I say unto you, ask and it shall be given you." So our souls rest on these promises and are sustained by them.

Our souls, many times, need to flee to some place of shelter and in the home of the soul, Christ, a shelter has been provided; for in Psalm 61:3, we have these comforting words, "For thou hast been a refuge for me."

There is no other one thing which we look for more in the home than it shall be a place of quiet rest. Christ will give us rest for our souls, for he says in Matthew 11:25-29, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Rest! Precious rest! is to be found there.

Then we conclude by re-stating the topic with a little variation. Christ is the home of the soul and shall always be such if the soul will remain at home.

The Way of the Cross Leads Home. By Grace P. Srack

Judicially we were crucified when Jesus Christ was crucified, but experimentally we are crucified day by day as we let the cross work in our lives.

In the Garden Christ's soul was "sorrowful even unto death," but he was willing for whatever the Father saw best to permit. He had said, "I will delight to do thy will, O God." After the testing in the Garden he was slandered, scourged, reviled and spit upon, but "He held his peace," "As a lamb before its shearers is dumb so he opened not his mouth."

Then our blessed Lord, the Lamb of God chosen before the foundation of the world, went to the cross—the accursed tree—and each stroke of the hammer was a part of that work of death just as much as was the spear thrust. Think of the torture to the sensitive, quivering flesh, besides the ignominy and humiliation to a righteous soul, and still—note the inspired words—"He held his peace." Praise God, beloved, that is what we have to sustain us when the spikes of crucifixion are being driven into the fleshly nature, for remember his words, "Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you." It is not our peace, neither is it our holding, for as the Revised Version margin of 2 Timothy 1:12 reads, "He will keep that which he has committed unto me" and though the revision committee did not put that in the text, it is at least in perfect harmony with the teaching of all scripture, of that wonderful victory through Christ which is the privilege of every believer.

But oh, it hurts! Yes, we all know that self, the fleshly nature, dies hard. None of us could endure it except that "My grace is sufficient." God understood it all so he said, "Thie sacrifice with cords to the horns of the altar." (Ps. 118:27). Why, we cannot even endure being spat upon and reviled. These are but preliminary to the real death dealing blows of the cross. They are the things that strike hard at the most sensitive part of our lives—our pride.

If then we were crucified with Christ, let us go to Isaiah 53 and Psalm 22 and see what things we must needs suffer as we enter into the fellowship of his suffering. And dear believer, remember that we are "heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."

Behold! at the foot of the cross stands the adversary, possibly as an angel of light, saying, "If you are a son of God, come down from the cross; why should you bear such suffering and insult? Take yourself down." And oh, the shame and sorrow of it, how often the sufferer does take himself down before the work is complete, and then sometimes the nail prints must be opened up, and he has to go through it all again, and the next process is harder than the first. So always when we push away the instrument that God would use to perfect us he has to use other and more severe measures to conform us "to his likeness."

For sin Christ suffered, bled and died, and because of the sins of men he was nailed to the cross. So it is because of the sins of others that believers suffer crucifixion, but the Master will not permit a stroke that he does not see is necessary; so take heed that you do not take yourself down. You will be taken down when God sees the work finished.

The very event of torture that wrought death in Jesus Christ wrought life for a lost world; and in the believer. So every child of God who will remain on the cross, that the loving, heavenly Father permits him to endure, to the glory of God, can say with Paul, "So then death worketh in us, but life in you."

Then while we are dying to the self-life, behold our garments, perchance the best we had, robes of our righteousness, are divided amongst the ungodly. We forget for the moment that they are "but filthy rags." Again we look and lo! supreme sacrilege, insult added to injury—our vesture—that beautiful many hued garment, woven in one piece, emblem of high position, bestowed upon us by those we loved, lost to us forever, fallen by lot to one of the rabble! Perhaps in some lives that vesture may stand for position of power and eminence among his fellows; but everything must go that clothes our pride. And still beloved, we must bear it all as he bore it, for we are in him and he still holds his peace.

And again at the foot of every cross of the believer who endures "as seeing him who is invisible" will, we believe, be some one who will say, "This is of a truth a son of God." The heathen women of an African village said to the one person of the village who was a member of "The tribe of God," "We are watching the walk that you are walking, and if we see it is good walking, and the path is a straight path, we will arise and walk with you."

The word of God does not say, when you wade in a little water, I will be with thee, or when the water at the edge of the river ripples over your feet they shall not overflow thee. Neither does it say, when you touch a burning cinder you shall not be burned. The natural man turns back at the waters edge and looks for another easier route. Also at the first touch of fire the flesh springs back to a place of comfort and safety. But Jehovah, our all-sufficient Redeemer, does say, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flames kindle upon thee" (Isa. 43:2).

Today as never before must Christians realize that "we wrestle not against flesh and blood," and that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal." No longer can we even imagine any advance against the foe by dealing with men and conditions in the natural realm, as they appear in the outward.

The position that yesterday we struggled to hold with argument or moral suasion (carnal weapons), we see today was not at all in the real fighting sector.

The battle today is the fight of all the ages since the fiat of God in Genesis 3:15. "The old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan" (Rev. 20:2), has forever and continually, without any vacation, kept his subjects and followers, both spiritual and human, in battle array against Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Seed that should bruise the serpent's head.

To the natural eye it appears that men are attacking the sacred tenets and teachings of the Christian church. The men themselves even think that they are using their superior mental ability to do away with a narrow bigoted superstition of an old obsolete theology. And they actually see no deeper than to believe that they are attacking fellow-men of—probably—inferior mental caliber. Strange, but true, that they seldom waste time attacking one another.

And over against them is the army of the Lord, many of whom do not study their instruction, and a greater number who know nothing of the impervious armor, provided for them. They turn pale with dread and fear, humility or anger, as the case may be, thinking the attack is against them, their intelligence, their sacred Book and their faith.

Often the fumes of poison gas from the enemy will cause them in their mad blindness to turn and fight their own brethren. Oh, the shame and the sorrow of it. When will true Christians learn that their differences are all the work of their common enemy who desires nothing better than to keep God's children at variance with one another to prevent or hinder their doing any actual service for their Commander, whose heel he would bruise whenever possible.

Let us put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to stand and withstand according to Ephesians 6, and get to work in the Spirit against principalities, powers and hosts of wicked spirits in heavenly places.

Brothers and sisters in Christ, you who are fellow-members of his body, men are not fighting you, even though from platform or pulpit they aim their weapons at your heart or head. They are only pawns in Satan's plans to checkmate your work for your Master. Do you catch the vision that the real battle is in the spiritual realm? Satan is making a desperate fight these days for he believes God's Word is all true, and accordingly knows that his end is near.

Mortify the flesh, take up your cross, study to show yourself approved unto God. Believe all that God says and trust his promises. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus," and keep his commandments even as he kept the Father's commandments, through the power of the Holy Spirit, and soon we shall be fashioned anew and appear with him in glory.

Collective Argument for Christianity. By T. Darley Allen

Strong though each department of Christian evidences is, its force cannot be adequately realized except as it is considered in relation to the other branches of the subject, all the evidences uniting into one great argument and forming a connected framework. As Newman Smith has said: "The Christian evidences are so complementary and mutually confirmatory that we cannot do them justice by treating them as if they were detached threads."

For example, when we consider what can be said for Christianity from the grandeur of the spiritual and moral teachings of Christ we find the force of the argument much greater if we at the same time study the evidence showing him to be the perfect illustration of his teachings. Of course, this necessarily follows if our Lord is all that our religion claims him to be. Not only here but in all the evidences of our faith, each separate argument can legitimately be considered as having an intimate relation to the others. Old Testament prophecies fulfilled in Christ, his predictions compared with history, the fruits of the Christian religion, the argument from miracles and many evidences of the divine origin of our faith fail of adequate treatment unless blended into a single argument. But when so considered—when realized to be a connected framework—we have in the evidences of Christianity not merely one joint argument made of many parts, not just a number of arguments brought together, each added to the others, but a series of arguments multiplied, each new proof not increasing the evidence merely but multiplying it.

Ebrard, one of the ablest and most critical scholars that Germany has produced, gave the evidence for the New Testament miracles a very thorough examination and declared them among the best attested facts of history. So strong is the evidence for the divine origin of the Bible from prophecy that the great Chief Justice Marshall was led from skepticism through its study to believe in Christianity. Guizot the historian was an unbeliever until in preparing notes for an edition of Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire his researches convinced him of the truth of the Christian religion.

History tells us of an Earl of Rochester who was converted from infidelity by finding the life of Christ described in the 53rd chapter of Isaiah.

Some skeptics have found in the Mosaic laws such evidences of wisdom as to convince them of the Bible's divine inspiration. To others a convincing appeal comes in considering the fruits of Christianity, its power to change the most degraded men and women into decent and respectable members of society, and to elevate such races of people as the Fijians and the natives of Uganda into a civilization that has surprised all who are acquainted with the facts.

There are many other arguments for Christianity that have great force considered singly; how vastly increased when they are merged into one appeal!

The following from Davison on Prophecy, a book of many generations ago, well illustrates the strength of this joint or collective argument for Christianity:

"If contrivance or accident could have given to Christianity some of its apparent testimonies, its miracles, its prophecies, its morals, its propagation, or (the character of) its founder, there could be no room to believe or even imagine that all these appearances of great credibility could be united together by any such means. If successful craft could have contrived its public miracles, or the pretense of them, it requires another reach of craft to adapt its prophecies to the same object. Further, it required not only a different but a totally opposite art to conceive and propagate its admirable morals. Again, its propagation, in defiance of the powers and terrors of the world, implied still other qualities of action. Lastly, the model of the life of its founder is a work of such originality and wisdom as could be the offspring only of consummate powers of invention, or rather never could have been devised, but must have come from real life. The hypothesis sinks under its incredibility. Each of these suppositions of contrivance, being arbitrary and unsupported, the climax of them is an extravagance."

And after considering all the arguments for Christianity as one, as blending into a single appeal, the wise investigator of the evidences of religion realizes that the only purpose of such an accumulation of evidence is to lead us to God, and so accepts Christ as his Savior and finds, to supplement his studies, the most convincing argument of all; for he now has the evidence in himself and knows by personal experience that Christianity is God's great revelation to men.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Problem of the Christian College

(A sermon preached by Louis S. Bauman, Pastor First Brethren Church, Long Beach, California, August 3rd, 1919.)

Text: "And these words which I shall command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates."—Deut. 6:6-9.

Our text indicates very plainly the tremendous value God places upon his Word. This value is not lessened by the fact that the only begotten Son of God is divinely named "The Word of God" (Rev. 19:13; John 1:1). And, indeed, the Psalmist has said, "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name" (Ps. 138:2).

Jesus Christ and the Word of God (the Bible) have ever been and still are the two real objects for Satan's attack. Satan made his first attack on the reliability of God's Word. "Yea, hath God said!" he whispered into the ears of mother Eve. "God hath said," she replied. "Ye shall not surely die as 'God hath said,'" was Satan's retort. And, then and there, through striking unbelief in the Word of God into the human heart, Satan won his tremendous, but temporary, victory. He is still on the job, playing the same game with the same old weapon,—giving the lie to God's Word.

While the objects of Satan's attack are still the same, the method of his attacks have vastly changed. Yesterday, Satan came to us as an out-and-out infidel. He became incarnated in such men as Ingersoll, Paine, Voltaire, and their sort. Today, the tremendous old hypocrite comes to us bearing the very name he despises in order to gain his ends. He would be known as a "Christian." He makes his polite bow to Jesus Christ. He readily expresses great admiration for him. He assents that Jesus Christ is one of the world's greatest teachers. He covers his horns beneath a cap, and hides his cloven hoofs beneath a gown. Summed up, his message would read like this: "Down with the Bible! Hurrah for Christ! Down with Paulinism! Hurrah for Paul!" The spiritually minded Christian, however, is not received by him. For, have we not been warned that there would come "false apostles, deceitful workers, transforming themselves into the apostles of Christ. And no marvel; for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light. Therefore it is no great thing if his ministers also be transformed as the ministers of righteousness" (2 Cor. 11:13-15).

Prof. Osgood, a Hebrew scholar, stood on the floor of a Baptist Congress at Detroit, Michigan, some years ago, to speak on the "Higher Criticism." He began by saying: "Before discussing this question, I would like to read what I conceive to be a few of the positions that are taken up by the higher critics." He then read off these positions one by one. "Now, gentlemen," he said, addressing himself to the supporters of "The Higher Criticism," "is that a fair statement of your position?" They admitted that it was. "Well, gentlemen," he replied, "I have been reading verbatim from Tom Paine's 'Age of Reason.'" Enough said!

The greatest problem that the church faces today is the problem of preserving the Christian school upon the face of the earth, without which Christian faith could not be maintained, and this world would cease to be a safe or a fit place to live. My own personal problem this very moment is not "The High Cost of Living," or, any other of these problems now worrying the world, so much as it is the problem of educating my girl and my boy, and still preserving in them an unwavering faith in God and his Word.

The simple undeniable facts are that tens of thousands of young men and women are having their faith in the Bible and, consequently in Jesus Christ and the salvation he proclaimed, completely wrecked. If their simple faith were a lie, and that lie were being wrecked by facts, we would stand for it, even though great darkness alone would be left us. But faith is not being wrecked by facts, but by sheer infidel speculation. We object to the right of any man to touch the precious faith in the Bible and its revelation of Jesus Christ as a Savior, by his scientific speculations, that are as variable as the winds.

As an instance of what we mean, we cite you to Tarr's "New Physical Geography," that is used as a text book in whole states in this Union, but against which effective protest has been and is being made. On page 369, chapter 19, we read: "The origin of man is not known, although scientists generally agree that he was developed, by the process of evolution, from some high form of animal. * * * Whatever man's origin, it is certain that in his early stages he lived the life of a savage. * * * Man's ancestry is unknown; but it is generally believed that he has been evolved from some high form of animal. It is certain that early man was a savage."

"Certain?" Nothing of the kind. The most reliable history we possess today is the Biblical record, and it declares our first parents on this earth to be anything else than savages. The most reliable science is probably none else than archeology, and archeology says that the early man was not a savage. Again, we are told, "Man's ancestry is unknown." Our children might just as well be plainly told that the Book which we believe to be the Word of God is a lie. Jesus said to the unbelievers of his day, "Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me!" To doubt the record of Moses is to doubt the authority of Jesus Christ himself. What spirit is it that is back of this attempt to discredit the Bible with that which is well known to be utter speculation?

Canon MacColl once told the story of a friend of his who shared the box seat with the driver of a stage coach in Yorkshire. This friend, being a lover of horses, talked with the coachman about his horses, and about one horse in particular. "Ah," said the coachman, "but that 'oss ain't as good as he looks; he's a scientific 'oss!" "A scientific horse!" exclaimed his friend, "What on earth do you mean by a scientific horse?" "I mean," replied the Jehu, "a 'oss as thinks he knows a great deal more nor he does!"

Modern scientists are especial offenders at "knowing a great deal more nor they do" when it comes to religious subjects especially. A university graduate, writing a series of articles on his religious experiences in college, and publishing them in the Sunday School Times recently, makes this statement as to his professors: "While each man would defer respectfully to the experts in a different branch of learning, each specialist, whether in English, in mathematics, or in languages, considered himself perfectly qualified to pass on questions relating to the Bible and Christian faith." Ah! at this point they all consider themselves specialists! Consider carefully this fact.

As parents and church workers, we must remember if we permit the lives of our tender youth to be permeated with the leaven of unbelief in our schools, the tremendous responsibility will rest upon our own shoulders. Consider the fact that the college takes a life at the most opportune time for its permanent moulding. Up until the usual college age, no one knows quite so much as father and mother. But the youth, at that age, begins to question their teaching and authority. The time has now come when he is going to upturn, over-turn, sift, weigh, and receive his final impressions, and settle down on something, the chances are. The college takes this youth, and begins its work on his life with the tremendous advantage it has in its reasonable reputation for knowing things. Isn't that what he was sent to college for,

—because they KNOW something there, and he is there to get that knowledge they possess? Now, what if about the first thing he “finds out” from a spiritual standpoint is that “The idea of the Bible as an inspired Book was abandoned by all intelligent men fifty years ago?” Listen to this testimony from a university student as to his experience on entering a college,—a college that was not considered of the ultra-radical type:

“When I had recovered somewhat from the shock of the first impact of this new world, and was able to analyze the situation, I found that its most striking feature was the impression everywhere given that the question of a supernatural religion was not something that needed to be seriously argued. There was not so much noticeable an active opposition to the revelation of the Bible as the calm assurance that the question was settled. It was taken for granted that no freshman, much less an upper classman, could seriously accept the ‘Sunday school religion’ of his childhood.”

Weigh the pressure on a young man just in college out of a good old-fashioned religious home, when it comes upon him like that. Talk about a Daniel in Babylon daring to be true! Daniel’s task in standing true to the faith of his fathers in old Babylon was not a whit more hard than is the task of a young man standing true to the faith of his childhood in the atmosphere of the average college today! Certainly, all the brains worth speaking about are contained inside our college halls! Certainly, nothing but ignorance and presumption would dare question the authoritative utterances heard there! “Father and mother were good folks, true blue, splendid! So were all the folks in the dear old church at home! But then, you know, when it comes to knowing,—well,—you understand! You are in college, now, you know!”

Ah! we can never, never weigh the moral and spiritual influence thus exerted upon our boys and girls when they leave the old home and are off for college. Paul acknowledged the power of that influence when, after giving a vivid description of his religious experiences, he called to mind the fact that he was “brought up at the feet of Gamaliel.” Colleges may boast that they aim to “make men think for themselves,” but we notice that somehow men out of the same school come forth with very similar views as a rule. Don’t you be misled, the college to which your boy goes will likely put him in a groove to a greater or lesser extent all the rest of his life. Educate your boy a Baptist, and a Baptist he will probably be. Educate him a Presbyterian, and a Presbyterian he will probably be. This fact alone should convince us of the absolute necessity for a church college of our own, where the distinctive teaching of our church is inculcated. And, permit me to say, that a church without such a school will be a church fore-doomed to failure. There is no future for the Brethren church or any other church that does not train its own ministry. The matter of proper schools for our future ministry is therefore a life and death matter for the Brethren church.

(To be concluded next week.)

OUR DEVOTIONAL

“Letting Our Lights Shine.” By Harry R. Griffith

OUR SCRIPTURE

Then Jesus spake unto them saying, I am the light of the world; he that followeth me shall not walk in the darkness, but shall have the light of life (John 8:12). The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid (Psalms 27:1)? Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path (Psalms 119:105). For ye were sometimes darkness but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light (Eph. 5:8). That ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world (Phil. 2:15). Ye are the salt of the earth; but if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? Ye are the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hid. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven (Matt. 5:13, 14, 16).

OUR MEDITATIONS

In these days when life is moving at such a rapid rate, that people seem to have little time to develop the spiritual side of their lives, we should consider seriously the meaning and purpose of our daily living. We are all so much absorbed with the thought of our material welfare, that we crowd out the things which enrich our Christian experience and help those about us. One point of failure is in “brightening the corner where we are.”

“The Lord is my light”—How real are these words, or should be, to those souls born of the spirit, as they were to the Psalmist who penned them! The spiritual life in Christ is one full of hope, looking toward the golden age which is in the future, and faith in him who is able to keep that which is committed unto him. It does away with materialism and worldliness in which there is no hope for anything beyond the bounds of this life. Poor indeed is one who has no spiritual influence in his life to guide and steady him in his thoughts and actions.

Inxley, the great scientist, once wrote that, “life is a tangled forest out of which no path leads.” The Spirit-filled life is a shining testimony against such a philosophy. Life to such a person, is not a tangled forest but a clear-cut road which grows more distinct each day.

Studying the influences for good in the world and what condition civilization would be in, if Christianity were not present, we could not help but feel and know that Jesus is the “Light of the World” as he said, and the only true Light. He founded the one institution which has transformed, purified, and uplifted society through the centuries; which has been a dominant influence in the history of great governments, like our own, few of which today have not been influenced to a great extent by Christianity. What words can be said to give any estimate at all of the great value of his presence in the world?

But how is all this great work accomplished? Here we must face the fact that Jesus left his work entirely in the hands of his disciples. What if they fail? Who can describe the resulting loss? Every one who names his name is responsible for that work, yet there are many professed Christians who do not consider their lives seriously enough to take care as to the kind of influences they cast abroad upon those about them. As salt, losing its savor, is good for nothing so a Christian life is meaningless and useless in God’s kingdom if it does not bear witness to the Gospel of salvation. Many a life must be barren and in darkness because some one has kept his light under a bushel instead of on the stand, to be seen of men.

How important it is, then, that we should shine as children of light in a world of darkness; that we should be worthy of the great trust which Jesus placed in us as his disciples; that we might be fruitful in guiding others out of spiritual darkness into the great daylight of his presence.

What a crowning glory will be ours, if when our life’s work is done, to hear the words of commendation from the Master—“Well done,” and to enter into the joys awaiting us and find there, souls whom we gave guidance along the way of life.

OUR PRAYER

As a fitting prayer in closing, the words of a song came to me—

“I want to be a beacon light,
To guide wayfarers in the night,
May God help me to lead aright,
I want my life to tell for Jesus.

REFRAIN—

I want my life to tell for Jesus
That everywhere I go,
Men may his goodness know,
I want my life to tell for Jesus.” Amen.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Future Task of Christian Education

By Benjamin S. Winchester, Acting Secretary Commission on Christian Education

(The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America has struck in its Bulletin a most vital chord by the pen of Dr. Winchester; it will supply material for some serious thinking along a line that cannot be ignored by Protestant Christianity.—Editor).

The experiences of the war have given a new significance to the teaching work of the Christian church. On the one hand, the fact has been revealed that multitudes of young men drawn from all areas of society, when brought face to face with the supreme crisis, have been pathetically ignorant of the fundamental elements of the Christian gospel. On the other hand, the very overthrow of the autocratic powers gives new significance and urgency to the task of providing each individual with the opportunity for a genuine religious experience as the only sure basis for self-control and self-direction in a true democracy. It is the task of the Christian churches, through the exercise of their educational function, to build up in the individual a clear conception of the Christian way of life and the Christian ideal for society, while at the same time cultivating a sense of personal relationship and responsibility to God.

I. In view of this responsibility, there are certain facts which ought to give us especial concern:

1. It is estimated that from one-third to one-half of the children of school age fail to receive systematic religious instruction from any agency whatever.

2. Certain groups in the population are particularly neglected: e. g. children of foreign born; negroes and Indians; industrial groups; adolescents; college students; adults; rural communities.

3. A very small proportion of time is set aside for religious instruction, mainly one hour on one day in the week—"not more than 4 percent of the time devoted to schooling."

4. The attendance upon these infrequent class sessions is irregular, averaging not much over 60 percent of the enrollment, as compared with 95 percent often attained in day school.

5. The educational standards are lax, as compared with those of the day school; very seldom is credit given the pupil for anything beyond the mere fact of attendance, or the bringing of the Bible or an offering.

6. The program of the weekly lesson is overcrowded, due to the effort on the part of various church agencies to inject into this one hour a little of every kind of instruction and training that is felt to be desirable. The result is mental confusion, on the part of the pupil.

7. Where different ages attempt to provide an educational program for other times than at the Sunday school hour, these programs, being prepared independently, fail to correlate and supplement each other, not infrequently duplicating each other in part.

8. Teachers, administrators and pastors are inadequately prepared either to teach or to direct others in the working out of a consistent system for the local church and the local community.

II. In order that the Christian churches may discharge more effectively their teaching responsibility, it is suggested that they earnestly address themselves to the following undertakings:

1. A clearer definition of the teaching office of the church. While it may be neither possible nor desirable to attempt to reach an agreement among the Protestant churches as to what constitutes Christian doctrine, it is clearly desirable, and ought to be possible, to come to an agreement as to the fundamental essentials which are to constitute the aim of the evangelical churches and pervade all their teaching work.

2. A simplification of program. Instead of a multiplicity of unrelated programs, vying with one another for adoption by the local church, it should be possible to offer to the community one simple, but comprehensive system or curriculum of religious education, elastic and adoptable, capable of joint promotion by co-operating churches, yet readily correlated with the plans of individual churches, and the program of the public school.

3. As a means to this end, the unification of agencies, so far as concerns educational plans and programs. Upwards of a score of organizations exist, interdenominational or undenominational in character, each one of which has its own independent program for the instruction or training of youth in religion. It is high time for the church, as the parent organization, or the churches unitedly, to take vigorous measures leading to the creation of some joint agency through which the various existing organizations may unitedly build a common system of Christian education for the local church and community. Nothing is more urgent than that the scattered forces of evangelical Protestantism be united in the achievement of their common educational task.

4. A more vital and effective training for leadership. The educational program for the local church is overladen with unnecessary and often unrelated and irrelevant subject matter, the fragmentary survivals of past systems and the complex product of rival theories of education. Nowhere is this condition more patent, or more disastrous, than in the schools which have as their object the training of teachers and pastors. The curricula and methods of these schools need to be carefully scrutinized with reference to the specific requirements of today and radically reconstructed, to the end that those who are being trained shall be able not only to proclaim a clear message, vitally related to the problems of our time, but shall also have opportunity to learn by experience and experiment, under expert guidance, the art of administering a church so that its whole influence shall be broadly and consistently educational.

This is a peculiarly favorable moment for revising and vitalizing the teaching work of the churches. Under the stress of their war experience, there has been a great strengthening of the bonds of sympathy and the spirit of co-operation between the various denominations. In many quarters there is manifest a strong tendency toward integration of agencies and effort. It is highly desirable that the opportunity afforded by these tendencies be fully turned to account, in order that such changes as may take place in the field of education may be broadly conceived and carried out in full consciousness of the requirements of the task as a whole.

The task of transforming a world just emerging from war into a world pervaded by the spirit of Christian brotherhood cannot be accomplished by the mere launching of a campaign, however vigorous. The task involves far more than the working of surface chances—it means nothing less than the transformation of society itself. The presentation and acceptance of a new social ideal, the development of new and larger sympathies, the cultivation of new relationships, the practice of unaccustomed duties and the cordial undertaking of larger responsibilities. It can only be accomplished through an educational process, but we are today more than ever encouraged to believe that the whole nature of society can be thus transformed in the course of a generation, provided churches can work out together clear and definite objectives and unitedly strive for their attainment.

Our Young People at Work

G. C. Carpenter
SECRETARY

The Denomination and Christian Endeavor

By Dr. O. T. Deeve, General Secretary of Young People's Work of the United Brethren Church

There are many wonderful things about Christian Endeavor. It has a wonderful name, C-h-r-i-s-t-i-a-n E-n-d-e-a-v-o-r. Christian Endeavor deals with life at a wonderful age, the age of the greatest possibility for molding character and fixing destiny. Christian Endeavor has a wonderful message pertaining to the deeper spiritual realities of Christian living. Christian Endeavor is founded on some wonderful basic principles, principles that are fundamental to human life, which grip young people at the point of their greatest religious need. Christian Endeavor produces a wonderful result, the spiritual enrichment of youth. Christian Endeavor has had wonderful success, extending into all the nations of the earth; flourishing in torrid, frigid, or temperate zones, being thoroughly at home in any language, adjusting itself to the needs of every race.

Perhaps one of the most outstanding wonderful things about Christian Endeavor is the wonderful way in which it has adjusted itself to denominational plans and programmes. Christian Endeavor was born in the heart of an earnest pastor, and functioned primarily in the local church. But its functions and services have not stopped with the local church. It functions in community and national life. It also functions in denominational organizations and institutions. With wonderful adaptability it adjusts itself to almost any form of organization that recognizes the fundamental principles which undergird it.

In discussing denominational plans and Christian Endeavor I beg leave to refer to my own denomination, which has tested this matter quite thoroughly. We had a few young people's organizations back near to the time when Dr. Clark founded the first Christian Endeavor society. But our general organization, uniting these societies into a denominational unit, was not effected until 1890. The organization accomplished at that time was known as the Young People's Christian Union. While there were a few Christian Endeavor societies in the denomination entering into this Union, the great mass of our societies were not Christian Endeavor societies, and the denomination did not recognize Christian Endeavor in any official way. The organizations were purely denominational. Following the general organization, the young people's societies were united into conference units or branches. In the general organization and also in the conference organizations conventions were held and activities performed without any direct relation to Christian Endeavor.

We continued our work in this way for eighteen years, during which time our societies flourished and did very successful work. In the meantime there was a growing number of our young people who hungered for a larger fellowship and a wider circle of influence. Accordingly in 1908 our denominational organization was changed from the Young People's Christian Union to the Young People's Christian Endeavor Union, and a recommendation was made to all our societies that they become Christian Endeavor societies, emphasizing the pledge and other Christian Endeavor fundamentals, and that they enter into fellowship with the Christian Endeavor interdenominational movement.

This plan has been pursued for eleven years, and has been found very satisfactory. Our societies have prospered just as well as before, and at the same time we have enjoyed a wider circle of influence and fellowship. Our denominational interests have not suffered. Our organization is intact just as before; our conventions are maintained, and all other activities carried forward without any loss. We have received great inspiration; our vision has been enlarged; our work has been stimulated, and our hearts warmed by our affiliation with Christian Endeavor. At the same time we have lent our influence to the Christian Endeavor movement, have rendered some help in its general activities, and have helped to give to the world the object-lesson of Christian unity.

We are not able to understand why all the denominations could not do as we have done. Certainly these is great need that the church of Jesus Christ bring all of her powers in a united impact upon the world of sin.

In dealing with this subject at further length I desire to discuss it under two separate heads. 1. Denominational plans for promoting Christian Endeavor. 2. Christian Endeavor promoting denominational plans.

Denominational Plans for Promoting Christian Endeavor

I have a growing conviction that the denominations are under a definite responsibility to promote Christian Endeavor. Christian Endeavor promotes the work of the denominations, and why should not the denominations promote Christian Endeavor? It seems altogether proper and right that this burden, so largely carried by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, should be shared by the denominations. If you will pardon my referring to my own denomination, I will say that our efforts to promote Christian Endeavor through denominational agencies have been very satisfactory and successful.

Back of our annual conventions have been conference-union organizations with a full staff of officers, who seek to stimulate the work throughout the year. These conference Christian Endeavor organizations plan for promoting Christian Endeavor work in our annual conferences, and see that it is emphasized in conference meetings as well as in their Christian Endeavor conventions and district rallies. They write letters, visit societies, and in other ways seek to build up the Christian Endeavor work. Two of the conferences have recently gone so far as to employ field secretaries for part time.

Christian Endeavor Promoting Denominational Plans

"For Christ and the Church" has ever been the motto of Christian Endeavor. "The church" in the mind of Christian Endeavor does not stand for some intangible, indefinite organizations, but it stands for the denominations. The only churches that exist today are identified with bodies of religious believers. Christian Endeavor has always been a propagandist for interdenominational fellowship and co-operation, but Christian Endeavor has never been an agent directly to advocate or seek to promote church union. Indeed, the tendency and passion of religious leaders today, as typified, for instance in the great Interchurch World Movement, is for interdenominational fellowship and co-operation rather than for organic church union. During all of its history Christian Endeavor has continued steadfast in this attitude.

This being true, it is but natural that Christian Endeavor should give a very large place in its programme to the promotion of denominational interests. That this is true you will see in the following consideration:

In the Local Christian Endeavor Society

Let us consider how the local society promotes denominational plans. Take, for instance, the topics that have been prepared for the prayer meetings. These topics recognize the need for presenting the plans and programme of the denominations. Many of the topics are so arranged that the young people can fill in denominational history, polity, or faith. This is true also of missionary interests. The present plan, I believe, is to name six missionary topics during the year, leaving the other six to be named by the different mission boards of the denominations. Ample opportunity is thus given for introducing denominational features into the Christian Endeavor prayer meetings.

Since the denominations are represented on the topic committee, their interests are cared for. I see no reason why the topic might not be completely set aside in case some special interest being promoted by a denomination needs to be presented. The denomination also has an opportunity in the prayer meetings to present to the Christian Endeavor societies its programmes, plans, etc.

In the Christian Endeavor Conventions

Let us consider the interdenominational Christian Endeavor conventions. Usually plenty of opportunity is given in these conventions for the presentation of denominational plans. If there is no denominational rally in the interdenominational convention, where any special interest may be presented, it is usually the fault of the denomination. Many of the speakers in the conventions are leaders in denominational work, and all of them are identified with the different denominations. Hence the logical result is the setting in its proper place the work of the denominations.

The Need of Co-operation

The war in Europe has taught the world the lesson of the vital necessity for co-operation by the people who have common interests and who are striving for a common cause. We have found that we can co-operate in a great programme without losing our identity and without destroying anything that is vital.—Christian Endeavor World.

A Great Conference--How Made. By George H. Jones

Great occasions are the logical development of three factors, an objective, a desire and a sacrifice. Every climax has been founded upon these facts. They are essential to the greatness of a time or an event. If a conference is great it is the result of these factors. If they are missing, it may be noteworthy, or it may be unusual, but it cannot be a great one. Every great climax rests upon such a conjunction.

First there must be a great objective. Ideals are what uplift men. We rise toward them. They are impulsive and expulsive. A great objective rouses a great enthusiasm, and is so infectious that others are inoculated unconsciously. It fills every impulse, subordinating everything to that object. It is so expulsive that non-essential things are dismissed without a qualm.

Second, there must be an overwhelming desire. Only as a thing takes hold of us, can it take hold of another. We talk of our heart's desire, of the world's desire and many others, but can we subordinate our wishes, our interests and our loyalty to other things, when the supreme ideal is at stake? We must not only contemplate a great objective, but we must be filled with its fullness.

Third and last, we must manifest a great spirit of sacrifice. Counting nothing too small, nor anything too large, we must be willing to pay the price demanded. Measured by this standard was our National Conference a great one?

If numbers make greatness it was great. If interest makes greatness it had unusually interested delegates. If strong characters make great occasions, it was great. For a small denomination there was an unusual number of able men and women. If a strong program makes a great conference, then we ought to have had a great conference. Speakers and messages were great.

Summarized, we had a great objective; we had a great desire, but—was there a great spirit of sacrifice? We must examine ourselves and answer the last question according to an enlightened conscience. Only thus can we designate a conference as great or commonplace.

MISSIONS

Prayer and a Teacher

Word comes from Brother J. A. Rempel who has been in charge of the work at Krypton only a little more than one month that Mrs. Rempel is very ill. Will the whole church unite in praying for her complete recovery? Just a few days before notice of her illness came a letter was received from Sister Rempel in which she stated that she was teaching the school with 27 in attendance and more coming and also that she was in good health. May the Great Physician heal her. There was more than she could do in her home and the community work and the school, and a teacher was needed as was announced at the Winona conference, and now the need is the more pressing as school had to be closed for a time. Where is the consecrated teacher who will say, "Here am I, send me?" No Kentucky license will be required. Write us at once.

Happy

The many friends of Sister Elizabeth Hadix were glad to see her at the Winona conference. Her message on the Kentucky program was appreciated. Sister Lottie Hillegas has again taken up the Kentucky work and is teaching the school at Happy which school is supported by the state funds. It is a great advantage in our work to have a Christian teacher in the public school training and influencing the children of the whole community. She will not fail to give the Bible its rightful place in the school. May the Lord bless this work and lead to victory.

Riverside

Riverside was represented at Winona conference by Brother and Sister Drushal and three children and Sister Bessie Hooks. They brought a splendid report of the work and anyone who heard Sister Drushal's message was convinced that many things were yet needed in the work there. May the Lord who is able touch many hearts that these needs may be abundantly supplied. Our readers will be interested in the following letter which in itself is a splendid testimonial from a government official, Dr. F. G. Ellis, Surgeon in Charge.

Air Unsolicited Testimonial

U. S. Hospital, Jackson, Kentucky.
September 10, 1919.

Rev. G. C. Carpenter,
President, Home Mission Board, Brethren Church,
Peru, Indiana.

Sir: Yesterday, I journeyed to Riverside, Kentucky, to the Institute, and examined the eyes of the pupils in the school there.

I found the pupils exceptionally free from the dread disease, Trachoma, usually so prevalent in the Appalachian Mountains. I found, in fact, but one well-marked case of Trachoma in the Institute.

I did find many, many, fine young people in attendance at the Institute, and it was a pleasure to look into their fine, promising, young and happy faces. And it was a great pleasure to me to meet your staff of teachers and workers there, and to note the great work that they are doing, although needing many things. There is lots of money in this great land of ours, being wasted; lots of money that could and should be spared and sent down to Riverside to properly equip and maintain this institution that is so uplifting to the youth of this great state of Kentucky.

I congratulate you that there is so little eye disease among your young people at Riverside. And I congratulate you, sir, on the great work that you and your workers are doing at Riverside Institute.

Very Respectfully,

F. G. ELLIS, A. A., Surgeon in Charge.

A Welcome Delegation

The Brethren church at Krypton, Kentucky, was represented by Brother L. B. Smith, who is an attorney and railroad agent and one of the leading citizens of Krypton. He is a faithful official member of the church there and has stood faithfully by Brother and Sister Cook through the six years of our work in Krypton, having come to Krypton a few months after the arrival of Brother Cook. The latter brought an encouraging message to conference on Kentucky night and then introduced Brother Smith who spoke convincingly concerning the value of the work of the Brethren church in Krypton and spoke also in the highest terms of Brother and Sister Cook and their service, stating that it was hard to give them up. Brother Smith said that Brother and Sister Rempel were already proving themselves loyal and earnest workers anxious to do the Lord's work in a way pleasing to him. Come again, Brother Smith.

Are Workers Needed in the Mountains?

(An appeal sent to a Presbyterian Home Mission Chairman, taken from "The Soul-Winner.")

Dear Sir: I am writing you to know if you could send me some of your teachers in here. It seems that our settlement is going astray if something is not done. I myself belong to the baptist and don't no what my church will say when they know I have asked this. nevertheless I believe in education, and it is our Christian duty to teach morality.

Our surrounding citizens are engaged in making and distributing whiskey of all grades and it seems they don't fear no evil to come, and I hope by getting some teachers we may moralize them to a great extent. If I knew the exact spot I could visit three distilleries in one hours walk. But dont mention my name on this for if they knew this I don't know what they mite do to me or mine. I will board them if you can send them, and want as many as four if you can send them as the roads are rough and they will have to do a good deal of travel. I am sure teaching will have to be done at some of these houses for some of them would not think of sending to them.

We have no school house in here and they can teach all that will come in my home. Would like to have them by the first of July and stay as long as they can. Hope you will assist me in this time of need. If you ever come to our country call and see us. * * * write me if you can send them. Wishing you success in your work, I am

Yours truly,

The General Missionary Secretary of the Brethren Church

The whole brotherhood will be interested in this announcement. We want to introduce Brother William A. Gearhart of Dayton, Ohio, who was elected at the recent Winona conference to the newly created office of "General Missionary Secretary of the Brethren Church." After the first of October all missionary monies, home and foreign, will be sent to Brother Gearhart, and he will gradually take up the administrative duties that have fallen upon the board secretaries, Brethren Orion E. Bowman and L. S. Bauman, although these brethren will continue in their respective offices. The organization of the home and foreign boards were not changed by the creation of the new office. The fact is that a paid secretary became necessary because of the increasing secretarial duties that were being borne by the above named secretaries and by the writer as Kentucky secretary. After the first of October all monies for the support of the Kentucky missions will be sent to Brother Gearhart. The brotherhood will find this a great convenience when it will be realized that all mission funds, for whatsoever purpose, will be sent to the one secretary. Much confusion experienced heretofore will be avoided. Brother Gearhart held a very responsible position with the National Cash Register Company of Dayton but the call of the church came to him as the call of God and after much prayer and consideration he accepted the call. He will spend some time in the field as the work will permit and this year promises to be indeed our Victory Year in mission work, and if that is realized then we can be assured that it will be our Victory Year in all the departments of the work of the church. Brother Gearhart is one of the most faithful members of the Dayton Brethren church and held the office of deacon. May the Lord bless him and make him a blessing.

A special service of consecration was held at the close of the mission session on Saturday evening of conference when hands were laid upon Brother Gearhart by his pastor, Brother E. M. Cobb, and Brother J. Allen Miller and the writer. Members of both the home and foreign boards were on the platform and stood reverently during the consecration prayer, as did also all of the conference delegates.

$650 Wanted to Light Riverside

Wanted at once—$650 to pay for an electric light plant which will be installed early in October at Riverside under the direction of Amos Fudge whom most everybody in the Miami valley of Ohio knows. This is a second hand plant with a new engine and will be as good as new and cost only about one-third as much as an entirely new plant. This money should be provided by the latter part of October. The plant will be installed soon because it is greatly needed and we have faith in the brotherhood that the money will be forthcoming. There ought to be several brethren who would send gifts of $100 or $50 or $25 as soon as they read this call. Gifts of any amount will be accepted and reported in the Evangelist in the Electric Light Fund. Who will be the first? Send your gifts to the writer until the first of October, then to William A. Gearhart, Dayton, Ohio. Let us start our Victory Year with an enthusiasm that will be contagious. Let us go "Over the Top" in this first call of the year and do it quickly.

That Kentucky Stereopticon Lecture

Brother E. M. Cobb rendered a splendid service in giving that stereopticon lecture on Kentucky missions at the Winona conference. And he has rendered further service in arranging the slides and with them a suggestive lecture which can be used anywhere in the brotherhood if requested. The lecture will be given at the Indiana state conference on Monday evening at Goshen and will be given also at the Ohio state conference. Brother Gearhart will have charge of the slides and he will likely be called upon to give the lecture in many places.

Peru, Indiana.

THE CANDLE

There is need of the tiniest candle

As well as the garish sun;
The humblest deed is ennobled

When it is worthily done.

You may never be called to brighten

The darkened regions afar;

So fill for the day your mission,

By shining just where you are.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

Since arriving on this field June 7th, we have been busy getting acquainted with our people, studying the work and its manner of procedure here. We found a well organized church with an excellent leadership. Every auxiliary of the church is alive and prospering.

The Christian Endeavor work of this town is worthy of mention. The three Endeavor societies effected a union during the past year. One union social has already been held with more than 100 Endeavorers present. There is to be another at Hallowe'en. Then a third during Christian Endeavor week. Besides this, there have been, during the summer, three union Endeavor meetings, one in each church. These meetings were all characterized by good attendance, a splendid spirit and good programs. As a result of these plans the pastors planned three union services one to follow each Christian Endeavor meeting. Thus the churches and Endeavorers had three entire evenings together.

The evening of August 20 was an exception. One hundred and thirty of the members and friends of the church gave a banquet and reception in honor of the returned soldiers. There were ten on our Roll of Honor. The program was spicy and in keeping with the occasion. Lloyd E. Hang was toastmaster. The Verdi Orchestra rendered several beautiful selections, also two soloists appeared on the program with unusual talent. Toasts were given by several of the boys and in conclusion one by the pastor. One toast was a visit "Over there" in pictures. Our boys were all fortunate enough to return. They have resumed their respective places in church work and also in the civil life of the community.

We will report our Sunday school efforts as soon as Rally Day becomes history. Every effort is being made to have a big day.

Seven delegates represented the activities of this church at National Conference.

May his Spirit lead in the future work.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

OAKVILLE, INDIANA

We have gone through the summer slump season in fine shape. The 'Home Coming Day' was indeed an inspirational service for all. The attendance was all we could ask for, and the interest was great. Prof. Garber of the College gave two of his fine characteristic sermons in the morning and evening, which were appreciated by all who heard.

The afternoon service was in charge of the pastor, with sermon on "The Church as a Home." A short sketch of the history of the church was read. This gave the names of the charter members, and the original cost of the building erected in the summer of 1887.

A list of the original contributors, and what they did, also the present membership were posted on the bulletin board in the vestibule. The prospects were given, and the future outlook was shown to be encouraging. The new parsonage is not a reality yet, but the committee is still on the lookout to buy or build new. The church building fund is still growing, and we hope to reach a thousand dollars cash by spring.

We begin our new year's work October first, and our desire that we make a record year is uppermost in our mind and heart. With the continued co-operation of the entire church we shall go FORWARD.

The year's finances are closing in the best shape and we are going to begin the new year with a clean slate. The Budget which is the largest ever, has been made and will be met in a splendid way.

We enjoyed our summer with the church, and all were indeed good to us. We cannot help but mention the kindness shown by many of the brethren in caring for us so generously and thank Brother Bell for the loan of his Ford during the entire summer. Had it not been for his "Henry" we could not have visited as many homes as we did. And we must also thank Brother Clarence Peckenpaugh for the furnished home which was the parsonage for seven weeks, and a home indeed.

We are now back in school in Ashland for the closing year of our four years' work in the Best Christian College in the world. It is indeed an honor to be in a school such as this. The imprint will be indeed a lasting one on our heart and soul, even unto eternity.

W. R. DEETER.

A NOTE OF INTRODUCTION

On the front cover page is presented the cut of William A. Gearhart of Dayton, Ohio, who on October 1st, will assume the duties of a new position created at the late session of General Conference on the advice of the Foreign Missionary Society and the Missionary Board of the Brethren church, and to be known as the General Missionary Secretary of the Brethren church.

Mr. Gearhart is a deacon in the First Brethren church of Dayton, Ohio and for the past eight years has served as chairman of the Board of Deacons. He is a very consecrated young man and highly respected by all who know him. For the past twelve years or more he has served in a position of trust with the National Cash Register Company of this city, at a splendid salary, and it is a sacrifice for him to assume these new duties, but he does so realizing that he is doing a work for his beloved church and something for the Christ that he loves to serve.

It is the purpose of Mr. Gearhart to take over the entire work that was done by Brother Carpenter, Brother Bauman and myself, but, of course, this cannot be done all at one time. He, however will take over on October 1st, all of the Kentucky pledge money and the money for the Home Mission Board and will have charge of promoting and receiving the Thanksgiving offering for Home Missions. It is his purpose to give some time in the field, promoting the cause of missions and I bespeak for him the hearty support of the entire brotherhood in his efforts, and believe that this marks a new epoch in the mission field of our beloved church.

ORION E. BOWMAN,

Dayton, Ohio.

COLLEGE NOTES

The college opened Tuesday of last week with a good enrollment. Others are yet to come in, so that the exact number of students can not be announced at this time.

Rev. L. G. Smith showed his interest by coming to the opening and bringing two students with him. He also spoke very acceptably at the Chapel hour.

Miss Lucille Teeter is teaching some classes in the Academy. This makes it possible for Professor Hendrickson to give his time to the accounting of the school which has become very taxing with the growing campaign of Rev. Beachler. Miss Teeter has taken her A. B. at Ashland and done graduate work at Ohio State University.

The word on the lips of every returning student was "How fine the College looks." And so it does. Mr. and Mrs. Laundry have everything in tip-top shape.

The following clipping from the Ashland Times-Gazette is interesting. It is to be noted that Beachler is on his history-making campaign in the fortieth year of Ashland's history. Certainly Ashland has reached her majority and deserves now to receive her dower.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

FORTY YEARS AGO

Institution On the Hill Began Its Work
September 17, 1879

Forty years ago today the bell on College Hill rang out for the opening of Ashland College. The president of the institution was Elder S. Z. Sharp A. M., professor of mental and moral Science. Prof. Leonard Huber taught Latin, German and French; Prof. Joseph E. Stubbs, was professor of Greek; David Bailey, Mathematics; Jacob Keim, natural science; Mr. Frost was in charge of the commercial department and Mr. Ewing in charge of the department of music.

Seventy-five pupils enrolled the first day. During the two score years of its history, Ashland College has helped to mold the lives of great numbers of people who are occupying places of usefulness in the world.

With the opening of the fall term Tuesday of this week the college enters upon what promises to be a constantly widening career of usefulness. The endowment has been increased and throughout the brotherhood the institution occupies a greater place than at any time in the past. From many states the students come. The outlook is certainly splendid.

MY IMPRESSIONS OF THE LATE CONFERENCE

It might be well for us to refresh our minds as to what a real conference is. A conference is a meeting of two or more persons for consultation and action on matters of common interest; to promote and execute plans of local and general concern for the good of all. The late conference was true to the definition and proved to be a real conference. We are glad to say there was a spirit of unity manifested throughout that would be commendable for any church conference. The unification of the people of God has been a great thing. I have never attended a conference where everything went off so smoothly and where there was such general concern and regard for each other manifested.

I feel that the impressions left on the younger generation which attended here were such as will be both inspiring and lasting. The spirit of unity permeated the whole program, harmony pervaded every session and every action was intended to cause more energetic endeavor along all lines of church work.

This conference has gone down in the history of the church as one where in prayer and praise, in sermon and fellowship, the importance of faith, the need of spiritual growth and the requirement of service were held high.

I think this conference has been a means of grace, not only to those attending as ministers, delegates, and visitors, but to the many homes, churches and communities represented. It will have failed if the homes are not made happier, the churches stronger, and the communities wiser in Christian love. May we continue to grow in brotherly love.

W. R. DEETER.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

I am glad to be able to announce at this time to the readers of "Campaign Notes" the plans for the remainder of the campaign. It has not always been easy to lay out our work. We have to be governed by weather conditions, road conditions, and not infrequently by the plans and conveniences of the local congregations. However, we are able to announce now with a great deal of certainty that the rest of the campaign will be carried out as follows: During the latter part of October, Illiokota will be completed. Then Ohio; then Maryland and Virginia. And the canvass in the Northwest and the Pacific coast will mark the conclusion of the present campaign. It is the ardent hope of the secretary that this may be done by next General Conference.

In the interim between the close of the recent General Conference and the time when Illiokota is to be finished the work in Ohio has been begun. Of necessity there will be a slight break in the Ohio canvass but this could not well be prevented.

In the course of the campaign during the past two years the secretary has heard many expressions which have led him to feel that the canvass in Ohio would be observed by our entire brotherhood with a very deep interest. There are several reasons why this should be true, chiefest of which is the fact that Ohio is the home of our institution which is being endowed. And needless to say, the feeling is strong among our people in our states and districts farthest removed that Brethren people living under the very shadow of Ashland College should be among its most generous supporters.

Conscious therefore of the interest which centers in Ohio at this time, and myself being a "Buckeye" by birth (a fact in which I take no little pride) I confess that it was with no small amount of anxiety and concern that I proceeded to "thrust in the sickle" in Ohio. But the work has begun. The first Ohio church has been canvassed; and I am glad to say that my anxiety and concern has been considerably allayed, and I am feeling better. I have come to believe strongly that a good start goes a long way in assuring a good finish. I have made a good start. The first Ohio church to be canvassed has set a high standard for every other Ohio church. And I believe it is a good omen: I believe it augurs well for a great and successful canvass in the home state of our only and greatly beloved college.

Fremont was the first church visited. Our church at this place is not large numerically but it is large in loyalty and consecration. Brother H. M. Oberholtzer is the earnest, hard working pastor of this little flock. It was on quite short notice to the Fremont people that I went there. Besides, their own program locally at the time I was there was very full. But Fremont kindly said, "All right, come ahead, and we will do our best." Just why I wanted to start at Fremont might be a little difficult to make clear to my readers in limited space; but I wanted to begin there. And in the light of the fine result I am very glad now that I did start there. And now I believe it will be conceded that I picked a good starting point, and I further believe that all of the Ohio churches will sit up and take notice when I announce that Fremont, small though it is, and great as has been its struggles, went $933 for permanent endowment. Nor would it surprise me if Brother Oberholtzer were to go right on and push the result up to an even $1,000. Now I want to assure my readers that this was a splendid result for Fremont, and it could not have been possible if the membership generally had not got under the proposition. Besides, the Sunday school, which has as its faithful leader Sister Barringer, enlisted in a substantial way, as did also some of the organized classes. Thus I can say I feel greatly pleased and encouraged over the result at Fremont.

Fremont is the home of our beloved Brother, Elder S. M. Loose whom I have known for many years. He is really the father of the Fremont work. It was my privilege to visit him and his good wife in their home. Fremont is also the home of two of our young men who are now in Ashland College preparing for the ministry. I refer to Brethren Charles Anspaugh and George Walton. Fremont is proud of these young men and by a very simple process of reasoning one can see the connection between Fremont's interest in Ashland College and the fact that two of her sons are there preparing for the ministry. Investing money in Ashland College gives one an interest there; but investing boys and girls in Ashland College makes that interest still more keen and vigorous.

Our Goal: 200,000; We Can and We Must

COLLEGE

I want to thank Brother Oberholtzer for the tireless co-operation he gave me in putting the canvass across. I also want to thank him and his good wife for the kind hospitality I enjoyed in their home. Thanks also to the Specks, and the Legacies, and the Clays, and the Deckers for their kindness. And especial thanks to Brother Decker for the service and assistance he gave us with his Buick. I covet good things for Fremont and a lot of them.

The next report will come from Bryan.

The semi-annual love-feast will be observed at the Loret Brethren church on Monday evening, September 29, 1919. All members are urged to be present and a cordial invitation is extended to all others who can to come.

C. A. STEWART, Pastor.

Turn your mind often to the blessings you have enjoyed, to the graces which Jesus Christ has given you, to the better thoughts with which he has inspired you, to the sins which he has forgiven you. Count up your blessings!—Fenelon.

THEN LAUGH

By Bertha Adams Backus

Build for yourself a strong-box,
Fashion each part with care;
When it's strong as your hand can make it,
Put all your troubles there;
Hide there all thought of your failures,
And each bitter cup that you quaff;
Lock all your heartaches within it,
Then sit on the lid and laugh.

Tell no one else its contents,
Never its secrets share;
When you've dropped in your care and worry

Keep them forever there;
Hide them from sight so completely
That the world will never dream half;
Fasten the strong-box securely—
Then sit on the lid and laugh.

THE NEW BRETHREN CHURCH

At Teegarden, Indiana

THIS CHURCH WAS DEDICATED FEBRUARY 16, 1919, BY DR. W. D.
FURRY AND DR. G. W. RENCH, ASSISTED BY THE PASTOR, BROTHER JOHN CLARK

When the dedication was reported the picture sent us was too imperfect to make a good cut. Just recently the good people of Teegarden sent another picture from which we are able to present a very good likeness of their beautiful little church. The Teegarden Brethren are proud of their new church and they have a right to be.

Christianizing the Political Order

Christianity is like leaven extending its uplifting, ennobling and satisfying influence until the whole is leavened. So long as there is a vicious or unredeemed corner in the land it rests uneasy and will continue its struggling until it has overcome every opposition and brought all into submission to him who is to be Lord of all. We are to recognize no part of life as being excluded from the rightful domain of Christ's rulership. Even the political order is to be brought under and made to yield willing obedience to his righteous will. And so long as it is not thus surrendered, it is a challenge to the church of Christ, the instrument for the extension of his sway, to secure it for her Lord. It is therefore every Christian's concern how the political world goes and it is every Christian's responsibility to do all in his power to see to it that politics and governmental policies are regenerated and made to conform to the spirit and genius of Christianity. Here are a few examples of the church's responsibility.

There is a very widespread propaganda daily growing to make universal military training a part of the permanent policy of our country. It would hardly seem to be necessary to assert that this is a matter of vital concern to the church and every Christian, yet, if we are to judge from the indifference that is exhibited towards this propaganda, there are many who take the attitude that it is none of their business. Either this is their attitude or else they believe everything that transpires is the inevitable fate and anything they might do could not possibly change it. Neither of these views can possibly hold if we believe in the teachings of Jesus regarding the brotherhood of man and that God answers prayer. We cannot as true Christian men and women stand idly by while men of the old school out of which the plague of Prussianism had its rise force upon our land their policy and ideals. We must not be deceived into thinking that a plan that bore the fruitage of war, devastation and brutality in Germany will bear peace, contentment and human concern in America. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" is as true in respected America as in dishonored Germany. It was the seed of militarism fertilized by the philosophies of the superman and the superstate that made Germany a menace to the world. Whether we consider Germany's philosophy or her militarism the original evil, they are not found separate, and whichever we take to our bosoms will give offspring that will prove to be the companion evil. We must not be blind to the prospect of evil that it holds before us, nor must we supinely submit to the fastoning of such a policy upon us.

There is a great conflict being waged in our land between the old school of politicians who believe in an international policy of selfishness, self-sufficiency and isolation and the new school which holds that we as a nation should be as unselfish, sympathetic and brotherly in our attitude towards other nations as individuals are commonly expected to be towards other human beings. Added to this is a great deal of partisan spirit and personal animosity on the part of men too little to represent a great and magnanimous people. These and other petty considerations are being allowed to halt the processes of world peace. Men who would prevent the world from being relieved from a state of war, or would throw it back into the throes of battle again, or would risk the defeat of the very principles for which the awful war was fought by repudiating the best peace that could be secured under the circumstances, because they were not in the lead at the time, or because they wish to humiliate the one whom the sovereign people had selected to be the leader at this critical time, such men are too small for the great tasks to which they have been delegated and their constituents cannot help being disappointed in them. There is one consideration that gives hope in times like these and in dealing with such self-willed, short-visioned men as are jeopardizing the League of Nations and the world's peace,—these men are always watching which way the wind blows, they are quick to detect the direction of public sentiment. Let the people arise and express themselves in no uncertain way on such tremendous issues as are at present involved and every representative, even the men who have been obstreperous and obstinate, will hasten with meekness to do the will of the sovereign people. This is the time when the Christian people of the land should make themselves heard and should speak forth the sentiments as souls attuned to the will of God. The responsibility rests upon the Christian people; in their hands is the balance of power. Let them speak now in behalf of the great Christian principles at stake, or they must forever bear the burden of defeat, if defeat should come. Especially should Brethren people who have ever held closely to the peace principles of the Christ show themselves alive to the situation and exercise their influence with all Christian zeal. If we hold our peace in this hour, how would we dare in the hour of conflict ask to be excused from the fray. We rightly hold dearly the liberty of conscience in religious matters, but we must also bear the responsibility of making our religion felt in times of peace-making as well as in war-making.

There is nothing of abiding worth that is not gained at the price of blood.

It is better to be a doorkeeper in the house of God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness; but if the servant that could live near his Lord prefers the doorkeeper's place it must be because he likes to be as far away from his Lord as possible and yet escape the danger of the tents.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK; IT IS MOVING WEEK.

Prof. J. A. Garber visited the Denver, Indiana, congregation last week to deliver an address upon the occasion of the graduation of a class in Teacher Training. Brother L. A. Myers is pastor of the congregation and doubtless will favor our readers with a report of the event in the near future.

It is a pleasure to have a bit of news from Brother D. M. Brower, pastor of the little flock at Ashland, Oregon. He reports two baptisms recently and we note that he is keeping on the lookout for Brethren or other people interested in Brethren doctrines, who stray out west. It is well for Brethren desiring to locate in new sections of the country to steer their course toward a Brethren community.

Hoosierdom, take notice! Your conference secretary is calling your attention to Goshen. Every church ought to have a large representation present at the state conference. The Goshen people are expecting you, your conference officers are expecting you and may it not be that your Lord is expecting you, too? Read Brother Grisso's conference reminder among the church news.

It was with genuine sadness that we heard during Conference week of the death of Mrs. Catharine Benshoff, the mother of our Brother W. C. Benshoff. Any one who has made a contribution such as she has to the Brethren church is deserving of reverent mention at the time of passing from this life. Our sincerest sympathy goes out to the entire family, and especially to Brother "Bennie" Benshoff, our classmate in college.

There is nothing more worthy of your careful attention in this week's issue than Brother Snyder's report of the plans thus far laid by the "Committee of Fifteen." Read it and then heed the Committee's call for prayer in their behalf. We are expecting them to have worked out for us a great and challenging program for future endeavor next year. But in the meantime we must buckle down to the task of completing the Four Year Program in the best style possible. Much work remains to be done; let us make this year count for God.

Brother Roberts writes for the Third church of Philadelphia and from his letter we see that this youngest church of the city is in a very prosperous condition. They were not affected by the notorious "summer slump," the attendance at the morning worship is commendable and the people are praying for their messenger of the Lord. What a wonderfully strengthening influence it has upon a preacher to know that his people are holding up his hands as he preaches! May that custom increase.

Our Goshen correspondent comes to us with an interesting letter concerning the work at that place and he seems not to be at a loss for things to write about, as he himself says. But why should he, in a big hustling church like Goshen, with such a live pastor as Brother McInturff is? We notice that Goshen is "fixing up and getting ready for company," and no doubt when the Indiana conference is history, the visiting brethren will be glad that they had an opportunity to go to Goshen. We are looking forward with delight to a visit there.

The Christian Endeavor page is overflowing with good things this week. It looks as if the Young People under the leadership of Brother Garber and his increased number of efficient co-workers were going to raise their standard of attainment this year. It is to the Christian Endeavorers, as strongly as to any others, that Brother Bame appeals in the Four Year Program department this week. We venture a guess that there will be no need of prodding them another year, judging from the way they are getting started. Especially encouraging is the report from the Los Angeles Juniors, whose picture appears on that page. We congratulate you, Brother Neher, and your grand little Junior band.

Dean J. Allen Miller and President E. E. Jacobs attended the interchurch conference at Cleveland, Ohio, last week. They report a great conference with great plans for the advancement of the Kingdom's interests. It is a notable thing that the churches are getting together on plans for world-conquest since the war as they never did before. The Allies won the war against Prussianism when they got together and fought as one nation; the churches of Christ will win the world-conflict against all the hosts of sin when in all sincerity they are willing to go to the attack with unity of purpose, harmony of plans and in concerted effort. This does not mean the relinquishing of denominational pleas and special functions, but it does mean co-operation, strength and success to the great Christian forces in the world. We hope to give our readers something from the pens of these men concerning this great movement.

Under the anonymous signature of "A Brethren Preacher" appears an article containing some suggestions that are worthy of consideration. It is possibly fair to say that the Brethren churches generally are giving more serious attention to their pastor's salaries than ever before. Almost every news letter has brought word of some pastor being retained with an increased salary. This is the thing that ought to be done—the giving the pastors a fair wage—and we are glad to note that many of our churches are taking this matter seriously. But there are still some that need to be awakened to the seriousness of the situation. In the interest of this and other considerations suggested by our brother, we are running the article, yet we feel that it is due the best interests of The Evangelist to say that anonymous articles are not to be encouraged. There are occasions when unsigned articles may be advisable, but they are very rare. This is the second article we have published under the above signature, and we feel led to make this suggestion at this time, lest an unwise precedent be established. It is in the kindest spirit that we make this statement, for the writers of both of these articles are friends whom we esteem very highly.

Every loyal Ohioan will rejoice to see the splendid way in which the Bryan congregation got into the Endowment Campaign and it will be noticed that Brother Beachler, true "Buckeye" that he is, is mighty proud of it. Of course Bryan did well; why shouldn't she? She has a loyal Ashland College pastor, has had a number of students in Ashland College and one of her faithful members, Brother Melvin Kerr, was for some years one of the college trustees. We would have been disappointed if she had done any less. She would have spoiled the splendid record that Ohio is going to make if she had done any less. She would have reduced the chances of Ashland College making her goal of $200,000.00 permanent endowment if she had done any less. But she didn't, and we are rejoicing with her that she didn't. And we feel sure that if the other Ohio churches will follow the counsel of their pastors and respond to the appeals of Brother Beachler, there will be none to do any less. Every church in the state should get on her toes ready to start at a moment's notice, just as Fremont and Bryan have. We have heard no one suggest a goal for Ohio, but we have heard some mutterings to the effect that the result will not be entirely satisfactory if it does not come up to the mark set by Indiana, especially in view of the facts that she had to start the campaign and Ohio is the home of the college. Why not go still better and make it $30,000? WE CAN DO IT, IF WE WILL; WE MUST DO IT, IF WE CAN.

THE COMPANY'S NEW HOME

Yes, we really have a new home. All we lack is getting into it, and next week is moving week. We are going to be established in the very heart of Ashland, just about two blocks from the main business street of the city. We will be housed in the large new building recently purchased by the college. It was built for publishing work having been recently vacated by one of Ashland's newspapers and printing establishments. There is nothing that can equal it in Ashland and it will afford an opportunity for growth in ways that have not been possible in our present location. We will present you with a picture of the new plant in the next issue, also detailed descriptions and other matters connected with the publishing interests. In fact, we are intending to make the next a "Publishing House Number." It will be of interest to the brotherhood because the Publishing House belongs to the brotherhood; it is your concern. We believe you will have reason to be proud of it. If every family in your church is not getting The Evangelist, suppose you send in an order for enough copies of that particular issue to go around and then as you put a copy in each home make an effort to get a subscription. The church can afford to make a special investment for this issue. Send your orders by return mail with complete list of names and addresses and papers will be mailed as directed. Or if preferred, the entire bunch will be mailed to a single address.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

THE VICTORY YEAR

Ready Go!

Are you and your church off for the race? Nearly a month has already passed and a month's record has already been mostly written. Does the start portend a victory year for your church? How much better than last year is the church, for a good start! So far as I can know, all have gone from our last conference with a fine feeling that augurs for success and victory. We have no signs of a gasless Sunday and if we keep ourselves calm and restful and unafraid in the Master's protection, we shall not have the "flu." What a mighty outlook for a good and great year. But remind yourself that you must make the record as the months come and go and dare not wait till next winter to make a good start.

What to do Now.—PLAN

Right "off the bat," as "Billy" Sunday says, you should have planned a great revival. If you plan it without money and time limit, you can have it and have it anywhere. Get a good evangelist or a good singer—one who knows about good campaigns and you can not fail. It may cost a few hundred dollars, but what are dollars now? A merchant told me only last week, that it did not make any difference what price he asked for a thing now, he got it; it is not a question of selling stuff, but of getting it. Money is the cheapest thing in the world, today. Everything else is dear. That's why men trade away their money so easily.

How Will You Trade?

That is a good question; well meant in this connection. How will you trade your money this fall and winter? For the things that perish or for the things that abide? Where will you lay up treasures? In the bank where moth and rust corrupt or in the heavenly treasure house where thieves can not break through and steal? Here will be the great test this year. Let us all strive to have the biggest revivals this year we have ever had.

"For a Time Like This"

Mordecai said a great thing to Queen Esther when he asked her, "Who knows but that thou art come to the kingdom for a time like this?" Sure enough she had, but who knew until she had put her life on the altar? Who knows but that we have come to the world for a time like this? True Brethren all believe that we have a message unlike that sounded forth from any other platform; they also believe that the time is coming—perhaps too fast for us—when we shall come to our own as sure as the stars are in the heavens. Our day is coming as sure as the Word of God is true. Out of the "new religions," schisms of Christendom, man made, Christ-rejecting systems will emerge the glory of the Cross and the Impregnable Rock of the Holy Scripture as the one foundation for future hope. That foundation has been and is this year more than ever, our message. For a few years we ourselves have been defining and casting about, but not this year. We are agreed. We stand before the world this year with a more unified message than we ever have. All the movements, roughly obtained sometimes, of the last few years have been toward unification and solidification. "FOR A TIME LIKE THIS," if we take hold of the opportunity. Let us use the time.

How's Your Prayer Meeting?

Lay members, it is up to you to make good in the prayer meetings this year. The preacher is not to blame. It is you. You are the Jonahs. You ought to be ashamed of yourselves to make the preacher beg and coax and then go home and fret because you have not helped to make his heart—and yours—happy at the prayer meeting. Now, do not kick and say it is not worth while. It is. Jesus had to pray and if you are a Christian you do too. Don't kick and say the preacher does not make it interesting. This is not his service, alone. He ought to be held to making the best possible sermons; he ought to be as good a pastor as he can; but you must remember that a prayer meeting is just that and not a place for entertainment. If you are a Christian and not just a church member, you will love to be in the prayer meeting, just because there is there the meeting with Jesus and the spirit of prayer. This goal has a low standing and needs great attention.

How's Your Communion?

Did you get your 75 percent present at the tables of the Lord last year? No? Well, then have as many as you need to get them there this year. Not 75 percent but 100 percent ought to be the goal for the year. At least 95 percent. But we put it low so that it would be possible and probable and attainable. Make special efforts this year by every-member announcements, so that we shall attain.

How's Your Sunday School?

Did you reach the standard last year? No? Too bad. Oh, well did you try? Some of the smallest churches have the best chance to reach these goals. I hope that they will not be the ones to fail. If you do not know what are the standards that must be reached, get in touch with Watson or Trent of Johnstown, and see that you are on the road to Front Line this year as to Sunday school. How about Teacher Training?

Did You Budge It? Well, then you will want to BUDGE IT. We shall all have to budget our church expenses this year if we come out right in this VICTORY YEAR. It is the easy way to run your church and why not? No reason save that perhaps, "we never did it that way before." Get out of the ruts and run smooth.

Ladies! Ladies! Your standing among the 16 goals surprises me. I did not expect that you would ever come away down toward the last of the column in your standing among the goals. I thought the ladies were always ahead in the Christian race, but you need only to refer to the secretary's report (which will soon appear, I hope) to remind yourselves that you are among those who will need to get busy this year. Your standards are not too high to be reached with the right effort and you all are trying to put forth the RIGHT effort.

Y. P. S. C. E. "Tail Enders" that's what you are. Isn't that too bad? Last but not least in energy. Where did you put your energy? What is the matter with the Christian Endeavor societies? That is the question of questions. The biggest save one; the best organized and with the most extensive helps with the real folks that have the "pep" and what do they do with it? Will you allow the old folks to put it over you this year? NO! NO! NO! Is that what you say? Well, then prove it. Show off your "pep," youngsters. If you do, though, it ought to be at the Christian Endeavor hour. Do not make that the hole in the day's services. Make it the one the old folks will want to be in. You can do it. We ought to hear a lot of protests against the standing you have made in this 16 goal contest. Why does not some thriving society challenge some others to equal them? C. E. folks, show up.

Victory Year

Say it loud and say it long.

Sing it joyfully in song.

The time is ripe, the day is here.

VICTORY YEAR! VICTORY YEAR!

We dedicate ourselves anew

We pray for consecration true.

The time is ripe; the day is here.

VICTORY YEAR! VICTORY YEAR!

BAME.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Learning and Religion. By Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

There need be no conflict between learning and religion. When such conflict does arise, it comes from a lack of an understanding of fundamentals. Genetically, religion is older than learning. Man has ever been religious; he is but recently learned. Long before he had any concise idea concerning the world in which he lived, and before he even dreamed of the worlds beyond his ken, he looked up and worshipped. He doubtless had a stirring within his breast even before he had a name for the Deity. Man is said to be "incurably religious" and so he has been at every stage of his existence.

But after the lapse of centuries, he strove to know as well as to believe. And there came the rub. He had for so expressed himself in art, crude drawings, picture writing, and the like. Then came the widening vision of the Assyrian, Chaldean, and Egyptian learning, followed by that of Greece, Rome and then modern Europe,—all these dipping even more deeply into the facts of the world. But religion would not be gone at the accumulation of facts and of scientific investigation, for the very simple reason that religion does not rest upon scientific investigation.

Now what is to be done? Renounce facts? That was tried with both Galileo and Copernicus but somehow it failed signally to bring results. Or shall we surrender religion as an early experience of the race, an experience which has served its purpose, and now is useless, unscientific, and only lingering because some from very ignorance will not bid it goodbye? But happily, this is not merely a dilemma for there are more than two ways out. At least three common paths are open, two of which lead nowhere, one leads up to life and light.

The first method is to refuse to consider facts. This is commonly known as the pooh, pooh, method of argument. Some new fact is brought to light, what shall we do with it? Oh, pooh, pooh it to be sure! This is the laziest way out for it takes no large amount of mental cogitation to pooh, pooh a fact. But let us note that overlooking a fact does not at all remove it. What if the world is round after all, does our ridiculing it make it any less true? This path leads nowhere but into the darkness and serious minded men will be put off with nothing less than an honest consideration of facts.

2. But a second method, fully as lazy, is to deny facts. Just say, "I do not believe." This too relieves one of all investigation, for to go over all the evidence, familiarize one's self with all the details, go back and get the genetic viewpoint, why all this causes a great weariness of the flesh, and why should one do it when easier methods present themselves. Unmistakable evidence has been found that the northern hemisphere was at one time covered by an ice sheet. One method is to deny this in toto. Evidence points plainly to the electron theory of matter. What shall we do with the evidence? Why, deny it, to be sure! But we must remember that facts are stubborn things and denial only gets us in the wrong direction. A Galileo may be made to deny, but still the world moves just the same.

3. A better way out, is to accept facts, after a careful review of all the evidence, and then MAKE THE BEST OF THEM. Now if we are sure of our postulate that God is, and that certain facts are, then there must be no conflict between them. There can be no variance between any parts of God's universe. So we do not need to have the slightest fear that the discovery of facts, can ever undermine, destroy, or minimize religion. It is primary both genetically and in point of importance. And so all the accumulated wisdom of all time can not touch even the outer fringe of the garment of religion and God in a destructive way.

Now what is the duty of a Christian college here.—a college that must maintain a decent standard regarding the intellectual on the one hand and hold firmly to its denominational religion on the other? Plainly the duty is to make no SURRENDER on either hand. And this, blessed be God, is wholly possible. And in so doing one need not whittle away the sacred, inerrant, and inspired word at all. There are many, many Christian men now who are making no such surrender at all and there are some colleges too, which hold to a like view, and Ashland, under the good graces of God, has been, is, and will continue to be, such a college,—one that does not give way before learning divorced from religion.

At the recent General Conference of the Brethren churches, held at Winona Lake, Indiana, the Board of Trustees of the College, as is well known, adopted the following statement:

Doctrinal Statement

The Trustees of Ashland College, accepting the statement that: "The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as originally given of God, are the infallible record of the perfect, final, and authoritative revelation of God's will, altogether sufficient in themselves as a rule of faith and practice" set forth the following statement as the basis of the teaching of the Seminary of the College:

1. The deity and virgin birth of Jesus Christ the Son of God;
2. The fall of man, his consequent depravity, and the necessity of his new birth;
3. The vicarious atonement of Jesus Christ through the shedding of his blood;
4. The resurrection of the body of Jesus Christ from the dead, the earnest of our own resurrection;
5. Justification by faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, of which obedience to the will of God and works of righteousness are the evidence and result;
6. The personality of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter and Guide of the members of the body of Christ;
7. The personal return of Jesus Christ, King of kings, to this earth;
8. The Gospel principles of non-conformity, non-resistance and non-swearing;
9. The ordinances of the Gospel,—the baptism of believers by trine immersion; confirmation; the washing of the Saint's feet; the Lord's supper, the communion of the bread and wine.

This statement of the basis of teaching in the Seminary ought to give assurance to the most exacting that Ashland means to make no surrender of what is regarded as of prime importance in its religious teaching. So much for this element.

Now the fact that Ashland conforms to the highest standards for the intellectual training of her teachers, ought to give as much assurance on the other hand that it has correct scholastic standards. I could warm the heart of every reader of this paper, if I had the space, with testimonials from the best universities and colleges of this country regarding the work of our school. Such standards are necessary, for religion apart from learning leads to bigotry and learning apart from religion as surely leads to infidelity and other like undesirable philosophies. It will never do for religion to scoff at learning or for learning to scoff at religion. The man who in this late day would see clearly, must not overlook the great importance of both these elements in racial progress. It is only a pity that certain men of deep religious conviction should hold learning so lightly and it is as deplorable that certain men of great learning should despise religion. The duty of the denominational college is just this,—to make no surrender of anything that is best and sound in learning and at the same time hold firmly and consistently to the highest historic fundamentals of the denomination which conceived it, and which today gives it its support.

An Optimistic Outlook on Life. By L. A. Myers

To many folks, an outlook on life is like the report of the spies viewing the land of Canaan. The rich soil, delicious fruit and green fields were all pleasing to the eye but the sight of the mighty giants produced a fear and caused discouragement from which they never recovered. It is likewise true in viewing the great field of life. There are many things to inspire ambition, hope and vitality, but the sight of the giants make one tremble with fear. A right attitude toward the whole panorama of life is the most needful thing. Caleb and Joshua had the secret. They said, "We saw the giants but we can overcome."

An eye that has been trained to see the darkness can discover shadows more easily than rays of light. Many times the imagination will create a cloud where no cloud exists. An eye whose nature is to discern light will always find the light where it is and even under unfavorable conditions will cause light to shine out of darkness. Such a disposition has much to do in sweetening life and discovering the paths that lead to success. But whether the disposition is dark and shadowy or bright and cheerful depends upon the individual.

To have an optimistic view of life one must have the necessary confidence and determination to apply himself courageously in the places and to the tasks where he is needed. He must also have a living and abiding trust in God as Father and Caretaker.

Confidence in one's self is a large factor and goes a long distance in directing his or her career and in securing happiness. The mood in many instances is strongly influenced by the present feeling. Some persons become the victims of restlessness, worry and even death because they do nothing to stimulate self-confidence and make no effort to feed their souls upon the fact that God did not make them the victim of circumstances but the sovereign, and intended that they should be king of their own dominion—their lives. Many a dark day could have been made bright by the individual giving himself in confidence to earnest effort in the direction of success and victory. We must all remember that whatever we are, we make that state of being. God has placed all things at our disposal and tells us to use them even to the extent of his own personal energies and life. But if we have not ambition enough to move out of the dark valley we will always be in darkness. Optimism is a condition of the mind that commands the whole being. The pessimist who will not change his mind will die for the want of inspiration and life. The fount of contentment must spring up in the mind. Paul says, "Whatsoever state I am in I have learned therewith to be content." This is a lesson full of practical meaning, worthy of us all.

It is often too true that we are unwilling to receive consolation and cheer. The comforter is met with a passive contrary mood that refuses to act in the direction of sunshine but turns toward the sunset and replies, "Oh, I can't." Many causes of worry are purely imaginative. The real one never did exist. A single act to restore confidence would have revealed the truth and forever opened a fountain of ever-flowing life. But too many lack the energy to apply personal ability to the task that awaits them. Why not accept the task of life with confidence in self that makes one glad and hopeful while he performs the duty relative to his own obligation?

There are those who fret and worry because some one else is larger and better equipped along the line of their work than they are. Happiness comes through the acceptance of the God-given task regardless of who we are and who or what our neighbors may be. No man can do another's work however big he may be nor can he add one cubit to his stature or make one hair black or white. The eagle was made to soar and see, the lark to soar and sing. Neither troubles itself about the size or task of the other. By not troubling both are happy. If the eagle has the advantage in size the lark makes it up in singing. This law of compensation holds in both great and small. If an eagle does the eagle's task and a lark be a doer of the lark's task and both are happy with their individual lot, why should not human beings learn a lesson from the birds and be cheerful and happy?

Then a living trust in God as Father and Caretaker of us all is a fact too great to leave out of our consideration. One can not see life in its real nature without seeing God as the great generator of real sunshine when the dark shadows of a gloomy day becloud the pathway. The world without God is absolutely unnatural. When one man does not know God, he can not know the world in its true light, nor be happy. God is comfort, joy and life to a soul that recognizes God's care in the world and sees something to do for him. Elijah was out of his natural realm when he came down from Carmel and could see nothing to do for God. It was then his pessimism was about to take his life. He could neither see God nor any of his people. When he saw God and knew of 7,000 comrades who were ready to do the will of God, the shadow of the juniper tree was no longer his station. But with life and inspiration he went with real joy and energy to continue his marvelous career. Paul said, "I can do all things through him that strengtheneth me." A real optimist must be a God-centered individual. Whatever direction his life goes it finds its starting point in God. The heaviest cloud may appear and the darkest day may dawn but the ever-abiding trust that God is above the darkness makes one look for the light to break forth at any time to banish every shadow and dispel all gloom.

God not only exists but is the Caretaker of us all. Jesus talked much of God the Father. He embodied in his talk the Fatherhood of God. He said to the disciples, "I will pray the Father and he will send you a Comforter." Again, he said to the disciples, "In my Father's house are many mansions." The parable of the "Prodigal" pictures the interest, devotion, sympathy and care of the heavenly Father. He not only gives a ring of adoption and a feast of the celebration but a home where there is protection and safety. The parable of the "Ninety and Nine," portrays more vividly the love, care and compassion of the Father placed under the figure of a shepherd. He leaves the entire flock to go out into the wild barren mountain for the sheep that needs special attention. God cares for us; therefore, his providence, smiting the rock in the desert, shall bring forth living water. God cares for us; therefore, in the wild and stormy night, he shall come walking on the waves, bidding the storm be still. He dwells in the very realm of restfulness. He abides above all fear as the eagle above the arrow's flight. Then let all our thoughts and feelings sing as an aeolian harp to every strange wind. Let us put away care and anxiety and cast out all fears because we are the children of Providence. We shall be the children of hope and trust.

God cares for us, therefore, may we live a trustful, tranquil life, meeting the storm with calm, adversity with fortitude, defeat with faith and death with the hope of immortal life.

A Vision and An Appeal. By a Brethren Preacher

As I sat dreaming of the great present and the greater future of our beloved church the present loomed up in large proportions. I saw in it grand possibilities. It also held before me grave dangers. That vision is still before me and I am greatly moved by it. In the present I can see that there is great need of action, concerted action, along many lines. A great program stands out. In it many lines of activity are outlined. These are the lines of activity of chief importance. This program has had a short but very fruitful life. It still has one year in which to live and come to full fruition. What will that final fruition be? No one can, with precision and accuracy, predict. The vision I see in it—the dream shows me that that year shall be a very fruitful one, if—That "if" is the point where work, prayer and much earnest thought, on the part of every minister and layman should be applied. That is where concerted action on the part of every worker in every field should be had. That is where all must co-operate.

Two things stand out very clearly in the dream. One is the great possibility for work at home and abroad with the imperative of now or never. The other is, How are the laborers to be secured and strategically located now.

The first of these two was brought into the focus of vision anew by the late National Conference and has worked itself into our dreams. Anew we see, with David Livingstone, "the smoke arising from a thousand villages as yet untouched by the Gospel" and this expands until these villages contain one thousand millions of souls as yet untouched by the Gospel. Then I see six hundred fifty millions who will die without the Gospel this generation if we do not do our share in God's plan to give them the Glad Tidings. At home, in North America, I see approximately sixty-five millions who are as yet not even nominal Christians. I cry out in my dream, What shall be done? Why are we so inactive? Why are we dabbling on the surface when Christ has said, "Launch out into the deep and let down your net?"

When the vision turns to its second part it falters, then slowly proceeds. It shows the task to be difficult but not impossible. They will not be secured by presenting an easy task or rather a hard task clothed as though easy. These things are very plain. Another thing is that these new recruits will not be easily enlisted nor even drafted, if the ones now prepared, or partially so, are not aided in serving fruitful fields where their talents may be used in God's vineyard for the harvesting of souls. Those who are fitted to preach the Word should not longer be cumbered with the serving of tables. The apostles found that serving tables and preaching the word did not prove the most effective. Our vision shows it to be the same today. The tables must be served and the preacher of the Word should see that they are, but should be spared the detail work of the service. The apostle, the good minister of Jesus Christ must be about preaching the Word.

ing and active, sessile and inactive because they have no pastor or shepherd of the flock. Also we see worthy men, who have given time and careful thought and prayer in fitting themselves for the shepherding of flocks, engaging in secular work because they have not been aided to a worthy place or because the places they have are not providing for them sufficiently. We see men going to other denominations for the very same reason. Brethren these things ought not to be. May it not be that we are sinning away the day of grace God has given us by not being prepared to seize our opportunities? The vision shows the possibility of workers being in the proper fields doing wonderful work for the Master and winning recruits. This could be done if churches and pastors alike would make their wants known. The dream shows the evangelist as the very best instrument to be used for this purpose. The list of churches marked "vacant" is shown to be diminished by this method and the amount of names dropped from the Ministerial list is found to be less. Whether the vision is extravagant or not, we see a rapidly increasing number of brilliant young people giving themselves over to training for activity in God's work at home and abroad. We see a continuous stream of well trained workers abundantly able to "feed the flock" streaming from the walls of our beloved college. All this may come true if we will give God his rightful place in our lives. If we will let him rule in business, education, social activities and religious life. All these will blend into one complete whole and we will use God's methods of stewardship, mental growth, fellowship and spiritual upbuilding.

If we will but do this, and it must be done if we wish to ever accomplish much, the transformation will come. The vision will no longer be vision but actuality. The ideal will become the real. Then all the churches will be well supplied with well supplied men. The fields of labor will be no longer vainly calling for workers but will be supplied. Men everywhere will be battling evil and replacing it with good. Perfection will take place of imperfection, "Righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." A voice cries in the dream, Will we do it? Will we do the simple things at hand that the more complex may be simplified and accomplished? It can be accomplished. God lays it upon us to do it now before it is too late.

Why I Believe In the Tithe. By Miss Mabel M. Maus

It is without doubt that Jesus lived in obedience to God and the laws of his country. Giving the tithe was one of God's laws from the beginning, for he knew that it would be for man's good that he should return a certain portion of his increase to him. There are evidences which show that Jesus approved of the method. In speaking to the Pharisees, he said, "You give tithes and this ought you to have done," and again in regard to the tribute money, "Render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things which are God's." There was a tribute to be paid the government according to the law and also a tribute to be paid God according to his law. The Jews of those days gave much in tithes, offerings and sacrifices. Since Jesus and the apostles were Jews, and were never accused of not paying the tithes by the criticizing Pharisees, we would naturally conclude that he paid it, and since he is our example we should follow him in this matter. In other words, because Jesus approved the tithe and doubtless paid it, we should do so too.

Tithe giving is a means of helping us to remember that God is still owner of the world. He furnishes all the capital and gives us the opportunity of using his wealth and possessions as we will, the use or misuse of which depends upon our obedience to this law of giving. We are his tenants and as he has indicated, the tithe is the debt we owe him. God's business requires system and co-operation in its financial management and program. Partnership with him implies faith and interest in the advancement of his kingdom.

The greatest principle in tithe-giving needed by every Christian is that of putting God first. This is a habit we need to establish in our lives for our own benefit. We are in danger of becoming so engrossed with self, business and the pleasures of life, that we shall forget our debt to God or perhaps give only part of what we have left, to his worthy cause. It is a principle by which God plans to get not only the tithe, but also the tither. In the missionary program it is doubly important because the tither sees and realizes his responsibility and is willing and ready to do his duty toward helping those other children in darkened lands who are appealing for a knowledge of Jesus and his love. When calls are made for finances for the spread of the Gospel the needs would all be met, all necessary funds would be secured, if every Christian could realize his duty and privilege in the matter of tithing. It has been observed and proven that those who use this method of giving whether from large or small income, as a rule, give with a cheerful and sincere motive because they have laid by in store as God hath prospered them. Giving becomes a joy and a privilege and the blessing of the Lord is theirs, and the giving has not been without its reward.

Denver, Indiana.

We do not argue that it is possible always to be in the same spiritual mood; to always have the same religious temperature of soul; but we do contend that it is possible always to live the Christian life, to be alive unto God and have the ear open to his directing voice.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Life and Its Possibilities. By H. S. Myers

TEXT: "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come."—I Tim. 4:8.

The important question that this subject suggests is, What is life? I once heard an aged and learned physician say, "That no man knows what life is," but life is defined as a state of being animated or living; it is spirit and has its fullest manifestation in God, who is Spirit and who is Life, who has revealed himself in Jesus Christ, who is the life, and the life in him is the light of men. In the text there are two phases of life named. First, the life that now is. Second, the life that is to come.

Notice the present life as to its characteristics; first, its origin; second, its brevity; third, its uncertainty; fourth, its importance.

First, Human life has its origin in God. "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them" (Gen. 1:27).

The apostle Paul in his great sermon to the Athenians based upon the inscription on their altar, explained to them the "Unknown God," that he was the Maker of all things and is the Lord of heaven and earth, that all people in him live, move and have their being."

Second, Its Brevity. Though life may be lengthened to seventy, eighty or one hundred years, yet comparatively it is but a few days.

Third, Its Uncertainty. No one knows the time of his passing, hence all "Should seek the Lord for he be not far from every one of us."

Fourth, Its Importance is great beyond measure because of its relation to the life that is to come.

The life that is to come. First, it will comprehend man's entire being; spirit, soul and body. Second, It will be purely and entirely retributive—"Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Third, It will be unchangeable and eternal. Glorification with Christ fixes the eternal condition and dwelling place of every believer. The condemnation of the wicked is their "Everlasting banishment" from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power.

Possibilities. The possibilities and achievements of this life lie in our grasp and power. I love the statement of Paul in Philippians 3:13-14, when he says, "I count not myself to have apprehended." That means that he had not yet attained, neither was already perfect. Why? Because there is no absolute perfection in this present life. "But this one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press towards the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. When this is attained then shall he be like Jesus and see him as he is, for he and every saved person shall have a body fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body, they shall be kings and priests and shall reign with him on the earth. Glory to his name!

There are three words that express everything, that go to make a life of approval, a life of influence, a life of power in this world, and if rightly directed, develop a character that is fitted to fill the highest destiny that God has purposed for a human soul in the life to come. Each of us has but one life.

When Gambetta sailed from Genoa in 1869 to deliver Sicily from its oppressors he took with him one thousand volunteers. They landed at Marsala almost in the face of the Neapolitan fleet. When the commander of Marsala returned to the port and saw the two steamers he gave orders to destroy them. Gambetta having landed, looked with indifference upon the destruction of his ships, and cried exultantly to his soldiers, "Our retreat is cut off, we have no hope but in going forward; it is to death or victory." So every day as it passes destroys itself, cutting off retreat.

Notice the main question about our life is not what we think of it, but what God thinks of it; so the most important question is, how may I make the utmost of my life? I answer. First, By having before my mind a high standard or ideal of life. Second, By the vigorous use of my powers and energies in measuring up to that ideal. Third, No shirking, no retreat, no surrender, but a determined persistence or perseverance in the putting forth of my energies until the goal is reached. There can be no achievement when there is no ability to conceive a great ideal and no force of will to reach it. The scripture that I am using brings before us one who did make the utmost of his life, and what an accomplishing life it was! What made Paul's life so wonderful, so noble, so accomplishing? Simply this, his life was urgent with these three principles without which a noble life is impossible; these are, ideals, energy and perseverance. Everything must be the outcome of an inner ideal if it comes to anything. What is a building but the externalizing of the architect's ideal? So a true life is the expression of the true ideal of life. If you would have advancing life, you must have advancing ideals. Notice in the case of Paul his ideal—Christ in you the hope of glory. In 1 Corinthians 2:2, he writes, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." Then forgetting the things that were behind and reaching forth, he pressed on for the prize. Listen! First, Energy towards ideals implies decision—"I am determined." Second, Energy towards ideals implies singleness of purpose—"This one thing I do." In 1863 General Grant was in command of the Army of the Southwest. He laid siege to the city of Vicksburg, many people of the North were dissatisfied, some impertinent President Lincoln that General Grant was too slow; the President notified him. General Grant replied, "I will fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." President Lincoln then said, "I now have a general." Grant changed the course of the Mississippi river, at the end of forty-seven days Vicksburg surrendered. Singleness of purpose made him General over all the armies of the Union, twice president of the United States and the foremost citizen of his time. Third, Energy towards ideals implies the casting away of hindrances—"Forgetting the things that are behind."

Fourth, Energy towards ideals implies training. How noble this sounds in this scripture—"reaching forth," "pressing onward." Fifth, Energy towards ideals implies refusal toward distraction. The one thing shines and entices. Sixth, Energy towards ideals implies a refusal of discouragement. "Forgetting." Do you know that energy towards ideals involves the gathering of energies when they lag? I still press on. Perseverance—this one thing I do. I keep doing it.

O what a life and experience this will be if it be signalized in even some measure by ideals, energy and perseverance. "Add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness charity. If ye do these things you shall never fall, for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" (2 Peter 1:5-11).

But, it is also a life and death matter for the church as to whether the church college properly represents the church. The trouble with most church schools is, they stand ready to claim the brains of the church, and work with a feeling that it is the mission of the college to mould and fashion the church. And in their zeal, they sometimes woefully misrepresent the church. We had illustrations of this during the recent war, when some colleges connected with churches which have always stood for the doctrine of non-resistance, presumed to permit the art of war to be taught upon the college grounds! College trustees and college faculties should remember that they exist, not to determine the position to be taken by the church and its future ministry, but to represent and maintain the position that the church has already taken. The college is the servant of the church. We do not presume to dictate to the conscience of any teacher. But, we need to secure teachers who can conscientiously maintain the standards of the church.

A Brethren college, then, should be utterly true to the position that the Brethren churches of the United States have taken, and declared before the world. This means that our college must, first of all, be true to the distinctive ordinances of the denomination. These ordinances are so well known we need not mention them here. It also means that they (the teachers) should properly interpret these ordinances. The greatest injury ever done to the ordinances of the Brethren church has been done through an improper interpretation of them. God pity us, when we can see nothing in feet-washing but a social feature, and fail to see the symbol of the constant cleansing of the believer in his walk which comes from the great High Priest in the heavens, who stands before God with better blood than the blood of bulls and goats. A Brethren college must stand like flint against the spirit of compromise among churches that is everywhere manifest these days. Looseness, even in non-essentials, if God has spoken, is where apostasy begins. It is in what the world calls "non-essentials" that men begin to be a law unto themselves.

Again, a Brethren college must be true in word and in practice to the position the church has always taken as to the oath. The fact that local congregations are not always true to the historic position of the church matters not. We can no more be true to our plea of being a "Whole Gospel Church" and cast aside the plain command as to the taking of an oath, than we can be true to our plea and cast aside the teaching of John 13:1-17 (feet-washing). We cannot be honest, and cling to Matthew 28:19, and cast carelessly aside James 1:12.

A Brethren college must be true to the well-known position of the church as to the doctrine of non-resistance. Apart from the coming personally of the Prince of Peace, there could not possibly be any hope for the world's peace apart from the church taking a definite stand against the righteousness of war, or its necessity under any circumstances. It is time the church shall strongly protest against teaching our children from playing with the tools of war. Especially is this necessary now, when our own nation threatens to plunge into the error of Germany, and make every American a trained soldier through universal military training.

A Brethren college must above all be true to the position the church has assumed before the world as to the inspiration of the Scriptures. At Dayton, Ohio, on June 8th, 1883, at her first organization, the Brethren church as a distinct denomination of believers, adopted "The New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ" as her sole creed. The church has constantly heralded before the world that her creed is "The Bible, the Whole Bible, and Nothing But the Bible." Our fathers would never have taken such a position save with the understanding that they took the Bible without question to be the sure Word of God, absolutely final as authority in all matters of faith and practice. No one will deny that those men had unflinching faith in the Bible as the inspired and infallible Word of God. This position has been re-affirmed from time to time by the church. In 1916, at the National Conference, the following reaffirmation of that faith was made:

"Resolved: That this Conference of Brethren churches, without attempting to establish a creed, desires to bear testimony to the belief that God's supreme revelation has been made through Jesus Christ, a complete and authentic record of which revelation is the New Testament; and, to the belief that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as originally given of God, are the infallible record of the perfect, final, and authoritative revelation of God's will, altogether sufficient in themselves as a rule of faith and practice."

So far, so good. All this sounds well. But the enemy of the inspired Word now lifts his head in another place. We are now being told that every man has the supreme right to interpret "the infallible record" according to his own fancy. Nor will we deny any man that right save within the sanctuary of the church itself. The matter of interpretation was not a matter to be seriously considered by the founders of the denomination. They presumed that to be-

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Our Heavenly Guest. By Josie B. Wogaman

OUR SCRIPTURE

"And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me; because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you" (John 14:16-20). And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us (1 John 3:24).

OUR MEDITATION

During the Master's sojourn on earth, he was a guest at the home of the rich, poor and the outcast. But when he ascended to be with the Father, he became "Our Heavenly Guest." I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you. "Because I live ye shall live also." The worshipper should prepare his earthly temple for the admittance of this "Abundant Life," promised by our Lord. The home, wherein the soul dwells, is a palace, if it is purged and washed clean by his love.

But merely an entrance of "Our Heavenly Guest" is not sufficient, he must abide. "Now ye are clean through the word, the word which I have spoken unto you. Abide in me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me" (John 15:3-4).

Let us then permit him to abide in our hearts, that we may be prepared when he summons us to him.

"Thou Life within my life, than self more near,
Thou Veiled Presence infinitely clear;
From all illusive shows of sense I flee,
To find my center and my rest in thee."

OUR PRAYER

O heavenly Father, the Author and Fountain of all truth, send, we beseech thee, thy Holy Spirit unto our hearts, that we may be filled with thy love. Help us to enter into secret communication with thee. Bow our spirits in reverence before thee, that we may receive thy blessing. Lift our thoughts up to thee in heaven; make us realize that all things are possible to us through thy Son, our Redeemer. Amen.

lieve the Bible was to take it for just what it plainly says. That meant nothing but reasonable literal interpretation. If the Bible says "Ye ought to wash one another's feet," why, that, just THAT, is what it means. Likewise, if the Word of God says "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air,"—why, that, just THAT, is what it means. The only deviation from this rule is where the context of Scripture makes it absolutely certain that some other than the literal interpretation is meant.

Now, then, if we are to abandon this position as to interpretation, one of two things must happen: either, the Brethren church itself must interpret the Bible which is its creed, and declare plainly what it believes the Bible to teach; or, leaving every man within to be a law unto himself in matters of interpretation, the church will become Babylon so far as her doctrines are concerned. If we are to abandon the literal interpretation of the Scriptures, then we MUST fall back on a written statement of our position as to what the Scriptures teach. We prefer the former; but,—rather the latter, than Babylon.

Now, comes the question. What are we going to do about it? There is but one thing to do. We must once and for all determine that it is worth while to give our very lives for the preservation of one church wherein may be believed, taught, and practised, the fulness of the teaching of Jesus Christ and his apostles. It is worth your life to preserve such a church for your children's sake. And be it forever remembered that in that battle, compromise is utterly out of the question. The moment a pure faith compromises with error, it ceases to be a pure faith, and we have lost the battle. "Tis an ill bird that fouls its own nest."

The inspired Word of God and the so-called "Higher Criticism" are exactly opposites. They are as antagonistic to each other as light is antagonistic to darkness. You cannot cling unto them both. You will have to yield the one or the other. The "Higher Criticism" says that man is saved by character, which he, himself, must form. The Word of God says, Man is saved by grace through faith, and not of himself; and, that character is the fruit of the salvation which is the gift of God. The "Higher Criticism" says, Man is on the up-grade, and will become like God through ages upon ages of slow development, or, evolution. The Word of God says, Man is on the down-grade, and can only be saved and become a child of God through the new birth. The "Higher Criticism" says that man naturally has healthy instincts and divine potentialities, and will work out his own salvation, reaching the ultimate good some day when he comes to himself. The Word of God says that the natural man is at enmity with God, that he is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. The "Higher Criticism" says that the human heart is fundamentally sound. The Word of God declares that the human heart is deceitful above all things and is incurable. The one is the way of Cain; the other is the way of Abel. The sacrifice on the altars is utterly of different sort. You cannot be honest and kneel before them both.

The time has come, therefore, when the Brethren church must either declare herself for the literal interpretation of the Word of God, or, she must begin the business of interpretation. And especially is this true of our schools. They must tell us exactly what the teaching is that we are being called upon to support with the Lord's money. They must tell us exactly what they are going to teach our children when we send them off to college. WE HAVE AN ABSOLUTE RIGHT TO KNOW, AND TO KNOW EXACTLY. The college does not have to wait for the church to begin the work of interpretation, if begin it she must, to tell us what she is going to teach our children when they go there. Let her tell us, and tell us now.

There is a story of a colored servant, who was to row his master across a large lake. The master pointed out the North Star and ordered the negro to row directly toward the star. Then the master fell into a doze in the other end of the boat. By and by the colored man became confused and turned about and called to his master, "Massa, Massa! Wake up! Gimme 'nuther star! I'se done sailed past dat one!"

When men sail past this Book,—when men think this old Book, the Bible, is out of date; when they would have us believe that it has been left behind in the onward march of human knowledge and progress, it only proves that their own brains have become muddled, and that they have lost their bearings. The old Star (the Bible) still shines, the one unerring and unchangeable guide out of this world into the next, out of time into eternity, out of sin into holiness, out of death into life!

Getting Results.

In a day of efficiency programs and experts people want results. "Deliver the goods" is their great demand. Any plan that does not yield speedy returns is soon brought into question. The examination usually proves that the plan succeeded because of a person or failed for the want of a person. Dr. Deever, to whom we are indebted for the splendid article of last week, became secretary of Christian Endeavor in the United Brethren church five years ago. During his tenure of office 500 new societies have been organized and the membership has been increased from 86,000 to 106,000. An excellent achievement! But it is extremely doubtful if the same results could have been achieved apart from Secretary Deever and the splendid group of associates with whom he has surrounded himself.

Field Work WORKS

Not a few of our Endeavorers feel that we should have a full time secretary who would devote all his time and energies to the promotion of Christian Endeavor throughout the church. There is no doubt about the need, but it seemed impossible to provide for it at this particular time. Partial provision was made, however, in the selection of voluntary field workers. Some doubting Thomases wondered if we would ever hear from them again beyond the announcement of their names. For the benefit of such and others of little faith let us indicate that the field workers are working.

By J. A. Garber

South Bend Visited

In announcing the names of the field workers we challenged them to enter the work with a view of making the first report. Whether she read the challenge or not, the honor goes to Miss Cora Culp of Nappanee, president of the Northern Indiana District. She visited the South Bend society, conferring first with the Executive Committee. An announcement in the Sunday school helped to increase the evening attendance to about fifty. There is promise of new Junior and Intermediate societies. It was discovered that this society, for some inexplicable reason, had no Four Year Challenge, and provision was made for a copy. Now, isn't such practical assistance eminently worthwhile?

Another Hoosier Message

The next mail brought a letter from Brother E. A. Myer, National Tenth Legion superintendent and president of the Southern Indiana District. Referring to the account of activities at Winona, he says: "The plans for the future appeal to me, especially the idea of field workers. I had been thinking along that line, and am willing to do whatever I can. If it were possible, I would give all my time to field work, for that has been one of my ambitions." While Brother Myer is an energetic young farmer he seems to find time for church work. He plans to visit the societies of his district, and the presidents should arrange to have him come at an early date. Delay will defeat the plan.

Ohio Too

Brother E. A. Rowsey is a student at Ashland and pastor of the Mansfield church, but he expects to find time for field work. Already he has arranged to meet with the Columbus society on October 3rd and then go to Washington Court House for Saturday evening and Sunday, 4th and 5th. The latter church is without a pastor and he will conduct the regular services on Sunday. Good reports may be expected.

District Conferences

Next week several of the district conferences will convene. These will afford opportunities for field workers to meet representatives from the various societies and make appointments for a visit to the local church. Most of the programs recognize Christian Endeavor; yet, the recognition is most scant in some. In either or all cases the Endeavorers will find it helpful to arrange a get-together meeting at some hour when the conference proper is not in session. Certain of the workers testify that they get the very best results in this manner. Every society should be represented in the district conference. Miss Bracken, secretary of the Pennsylvania organization, has sent an appeal to the societies of the state, urging them to send delegates to Johnstown.

October Schedule

Enlargement and Enlistment continues as the service theme. It calls for:

1. New Societies: Young People's, Intermediate and Junior.
2. New members for these societies.
3. New Patriotic Servants—Good Citizenship Day, October 17th.

From a Banner Junior Society

Los Angeles, California,
September 1, 1919.

Dear Juniors:

We are giving you here a picture of a truck load of Juniors from the Brethren church of Compton Avenue, who won the State Banner at the State Convention held at Long Beach, California, June 28 to July 2, 1919.

It seems that our Christian Endeavor Societies as well as our Sunday schools are up to such tricks for our church walls are all decorated with banners.

About one month before the convention we began to plan, work and pray, especially for this occasion. We had twenty-nine enrolled in our society at that time but had increased to fifty-six by convention time. There were about sixty-five (not all Juniors) to go to the convention in the big truck, which was furnished by Leo Polman, one of our wide-awake young men from the Intermediate society.

A few weeks after the convention the county superintendent came to visit our society. She said she wanted to see the society, that carried away the banner, in its regular services. The following is a letter received from her a few days after her visit:

July 14, 1919.

Dear Mr. Neher:

You have one splendid Junior society! We are proud of them and are praying that by careful guidance they may go on in the same spiritual way. My, it did seem so good to see those boys there! Some big boys too.

Would you please send me that boy's name who played so well? Does he play that way all the time? How old is he? This information may come in useful at a later date.

It is good to know so many had joined the church and to see so many there, too. They must know what all that means—work, and have a knowledge of what they are undertaking when they stand up for him. The sentence prayers are from their hearts, I know. It pleased me so when so many boys took part in prayer.

It takes a lot of work to be a superintendent but it is worth while 100 times over, isn't it?

That verse saying "A chapter a day keeps the devil away," that was good and their banner song also.

May God bless and guide each boy and girl and may he guide those directing them. Hoping to hear from you before long, I am,

Yours in the Master's Service,

Bessie H. Speir,
County Junior Superintendent.

JUNIORS OF COMPTON AVENUE CHURCH, LOS ANGELES

A few weeks ago our Juniors helped the other societies of our church in a program given at the county hospital.

Two weeks ago the Juniors had charge of the choir during the morning church service.

We ask an interest in prayers of all the Juniors who read this letter.

A. E. Neher,
Superintendent.
G. C. Neher,
President.

Note—It has been a long time since we have read a report such as comes from the Junior superintendent of the Compton Avenue church of Los Angeles. And it would be hard to find another society that has made such a commendable work. There seems to have been none among all the denominations represented at California state convention to equal it. I wonder if there are any among the Brethren churches of the entire brotherhood. But what these Endeavorers did and are doing is possible for many another Junior. Perhaps there are other Junior superintendents who would like to tell of the good work their societies are doing. If so, we invite you to use these columns.

A woman in a tenement house kept talking to her neighbors about the people who lived across the way. Finally at the suggestion of a friendly visitor, she cleaned her own windows. "Who'd have thought it," she exclaimed, "that cleaning the windows would make such a difference in the looks of folks?"

MISSIONS

The Stewardship of Missions. By Miss Mae Minnich

When we take the name of Christian through obedience to God's word which faith brings about, we become through Christ free from the power of Satan and sin in our lives. That power was broken on the cross when Jesus gave his life to save the life of every one who trusts him for salvation, so that the glorious privilege is ours to yield ourselves as instruments of righteousness to the glory of God.

But the great blessings found in our Savior do not end with the fundamental fact of freedom from the power of sin. There also is found in Christ another great heritage. The promise of all things necessary for the temporal life is to those who have found the Kingdom. And if these things together with the choicest of friendships and rare advantages of life are not ours, it is because we are not by faith laying hold of the promises of our God.

And yet in addition to the power of Satan broken in the life and the promise of temporal things, God manifests himself, his presence and his power to his followers as a loving Father, calling us "my friends" with Christ as elder Brother. And God values our fellowship with himself far above all we can do for him or all we can give to his cause.

And in addition to all these things, God in his wisdom has intrusted to us a stewardship over the things that are his. He has given to us many things that are for our individual use and stewardship. There are lands, cattle, merchandise, money and various business enterprises. We frequently speak of these as our own. It is a rare person who speaks of these things as belonging to God or considers them as gifts from the Lord. And the Christian is rare who realizes stewardship to the extent of carrying on business with and for the Lord, setting aside any portion for the work of the Kingdom.

At creation God gave man dominion and stewardship over all other created things. But it is to man's discredit that he has used this power to his own downfall. He has been cruel where he should have shown mercy; wasteful where he should have economized; and he has taken life where he should have saved life. He has used the power God gave him to the very dishonoring of God. He has forgotten that "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."

But to come back to the true followers of Christ, we have not been intrusted with the mere things of life but though so weak we be, and such poor followers of him, he has intrusted to us the stewardship of his very Word. It is one of the mysteries of our God that he should intrust his Word to such erring creatures as we. The secret is, God cannot trust man when left to himself but he can trust Jesus in any man or woman. O, that we could realize what a blessed privilege is ours not to mention the rewards of a faithful stewardship over a lost world,

There is a story called "His Plan." It is a supposed conversation between Christ and Gabriel during which Christ tells Gabriel that his plan is to make known to the world his death for sinful man is through Peter, Andrew, John and the other disciples. Then Gabriel asks Christ what will be done if Peter fails, and John just does not tell others. And if their successors away off in the edge of the 20th century get so busy about temporal things that they do not tell others. What then? To which Jesus replies: "Gabriel, I haven't made any other plans—I'm counting on them!"

This mere story is a good illustration of the Bible fact that Christ is counting on us. He has no other plan for this age than to work through us. If we fail him, souls die in darkness, and on us falls the consequence of unfaithful stewardship. To all who seek for high positions in life I would suggest that the greatest position or commission possible to mortal man is that of taking the message of Christ to the lost at home or abroad. For "whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher?"

One of the best ways to exercise stewardship over God's people is to dedicate one's own life to God. "I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice," says Paul. A full surrender to God always leads into a happier and more fruitful life. One writer has said: "Give your life to God and God will use your life." However humble, however obscure, however insignificant it may seem to you, God will surely use it for his glory. Give your life to God as best you know and give it without fear. You can trust him to bestow in fullness upon you the riches of his grace and love."

If the lives of all Christians were dedicated to God all would not be sent to foreign fields but more would go than are now going and the world would contain more "salt" and "light." And many young men instead of having been blown to pieces on the battle field of Europe would be "living sacrifices." The church should constantly appeal to persons young and old for the dedicated life and for missionary material. None of the "New Era" church movements can be carried out without dedicated lives. God's program calls for it.

God may not call all to go but what saith the Scriptures? "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers unto the harvest." And so we become stewards of prayer that laborers may offer themselves and that money might be given to send them into the needy places. He toils most who prays most. The church or person who forgets to pray just as soon sees a fruitless toil. When the Brethren church or any church comes to a proper prayer life unbelievable good things will come to pass in its missions at home and abroad, for God answers above what we ask or think. Therefore let us give ourselves to a life of prayer.

"And how shall they preach except they be sent?" This is God's question to us. So in our stewardship we must dedicate life, we must pray, and we must give gifts to finance the plan. And thus we find ourselves being held as stewards over the money the Lord has intrusted to us. When will Christians learn that nowhere in God's Word does he say: "Make for me ice cream suppers, strawberry festivals, and box socials that there may be meat in my house through the appetites of such hungry stomachs as will not otherwise contribute to my treasury that I may send the Gospel of my Son to a lost world." Neither does the God of order and method say, "When you feel like it contribute a little to my cause, but I love a cheerful giver, so if you do not feel like it do not give anything." How abominable such methods must be in his sight. How he must pity such giving. God's Word gives no other way to finance his cause than through his true followers going down into their pocketbooks. The Lord can use consecrated money and he blesses the giver. He has so plainly painted out the attitude of the heart in giving; "So let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity: for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver." "He that giveth let him do it with simplicity." "If there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath and not according to that he hath not." The method of giving that God commanded his people was the tithe system and then free will offerings above the tenth. Christ reaffirms the tithe system in Matthew 23:23 and Luke 11:42. The tithing method is a regular and constant way of pouring money into the Lord's treasury, a method of regularly and proportionately giving to him as he gives to us.

God says of this method: "Bring ye all the tithe into the storehouse, that there may be meat in my house." Giving the tenth not only brings meat but it keeps bringing meat so that there is meat. And I believe the promise that follows holds good for any local church, brotherhood, or individual: "Prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open to you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it." And that is the testimony of every true tither.

I am told that tithing is at the bottom of the successful church extension of California. I believe it would be found to be at the bottom of the Easter Offering of Lost Creek, Kentucky, which gave more than some churches supposed to be helping to support, that mission. It helps to pay the preacher without the burden falling on the three or four faithful ones; it eliminates debts; and it sends out missionaries. It is a method that works, therefore a safe method; it is suited like to rich or poor, therefore a just method. It creates a desire to give free will offerings far above the tenth. The grace of giving grows by tithing. It has grown in William Colgate until he gives nine-tenths. It creates cheerful giving and willing giving. It is cause for rejoicing that the younger generation in the ranks of the Christian Endeavor are organizing Tenth Legions throughout the brotherhoods and thereby training the young in the stewardship of money.

There are those who perhaps object to tithing. But you would not favor giving to the Lord less regularly than your income, or less than a tenth, would you? So allow me to show you some examples for you to follow: One is the poor widow who cast in of her want, even all her living. The Lord honored such giving in the Word. And another worthy example to follow is the Macedonian church to whose grace of giving Paul bears record saying that they first gave themselves to the Lord, a gift in which God most delights, and then out of a great trial of affliction and deep poverty they entreated Paul to receive their gift which he says was beyond their power. It is indeed an acceptable gift when so touched by the love of Jesus we go beyond our power. But these rare instances are nothing against regular, proportionate giving.

When Christ had completed the work of redemption he left the earth for a season having first given this command with its promises: "All authority has been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I commanded you: and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." And in giving this command with its promises of his power and presence, he left us the way to carry it out, by our dedicating to him a life to serve on the field, a life dedicated to prayer, and by the dedicating of a portion of our substance. It is his blood-bought plan. It is depending on us. The doors to all nations stand open. May we be faithful stewards. "He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied."

Dire Need In Bible Lands

A commission of American editors and Sunday school leaders has just returned from the Near East after an experience which they describe as "Exceedingly illuminating, but well-nigh heartbreaking." This commission of 18 was appointed last winter by the American Committee for Relief in the Near East to visit Bible lands, make a survey of conditions, and report the needs of the suffering thousands in Western Asia. Some returned by way of Copenhagen on the S. S. "United States," and the rest on the "Saxonia" from London. They have brought with them many hundreds of pictures and stories of intense human interest, which reveal the present situation in the Near East with dramatic impressiveness. Their return at this time is especially significant by reason of the present interest in Armenia and in America's obligation toward that persecuted nation. The Commissioners have visited the actual places where the massacres and deportations occurred and have talked with thousands of the victims and survivors of those unspeakable cruelties. They declare that the reports current in America, many of them given in detail in Ambassador Morgenthau's story and in the Blue Book of Lord Bryce, have not been exaggerated, but that the half has not been told.

They state that by conservative estimate there are 250,000 orphan children still to be provided for, many of whom do not know their names because they were separated from their parents when they were too young to remember. Some have been wandering about like animals. There are also no less than 50,000 Armenian women and girls (possibly 100,000) held as captives in Moslem houses in Syria, Mesopotamia and Turkey. Many of them have been rescued; they are branded on the face with the horrible tattoo marks which indicate Moslem ownership or the captivity of the girls in a harem. The release of these unfortunates could be greatly hastened, say the Commissioners, if the proper kind of Refugee Homes were speedily provided. A good beginning along these lines had been made, but every day counts in a matter of this kind and it is no wonder that the Armenians are pleading for greater haste in securing the freedom of these captive women and children. Many of the latter are forgetting their own language and are being alienated in religion and in spirit. Others are enslaved and tortured in various ways.

The American Committee for Relief in the Near East took over all the work of the American Red Cross throughout Bible Lands on July 1, and its orphanages, rescue homes, hospitals, refugee camps and industrial centers are proving a great blessing to many thousands of needy people. The young American men and women who have volunteered for this difficult and often dangerous duty are for the most part serving without salary, only their expenses and outfit being provided. Wherever the British Army has gone throughout the old Turkish Empire, its officers and men are co-operating fully with the American relief workers, and at many places they are supplementing the good work by grants of money and food. The Commissioners speak in the highest terms of the British Tommies and their unflinching courtesy and kindness in assisting them all through that region. It ought to be said moreover, that even today the Americans are not safe anywhere in Turkey, except where the British Army has gone or is making its moral influence felt for the protection of life and property.

The American Committee is doing excellent work in meeting the problems of immediate relief, which at some places remains acute. Among the refugees in the Russian Caucasus and in parts of Central Turkey women and children can be seen eating raw grass in the fields, and the only bread to be found in some places not yet reached by relief workers is a hard block substance compounded of straw, seeds and a little millet. It is no infrequent thing to see people lying dead from starvation in the streets or starving along the roadside, or to meet ragged and emaciated children begging for bread. In the Caucasus, to which some of the Commissioners came within three weeks of the retreating Turks, they found that conditions are frightful, the Turks having taken all the food and no crops being planted this year. In Armenia thousands of homes are in ruins, and refugees come back to find their homes and sanctuaries destroyed. The method adopted by the Turks in Syria proved as barbarous as their plan for the extermination of the Armenians. Large imports of food stuffs are required there, as Syria does not produce enough, even under normal conditions, to sustain its population. By closing the ports and other channels of trade the Turks doomed the people of Syria and the Lebanon mountains to slow starvation. Careful investigation shows that over 100,000 perished there, and in many sections one-third of the houses were dismantled and marketable parts sold to buy bread. Over 20,000 dependent orphans have been found in that section alone.

In addition to the supply of immediate necessities the American Committee is now conducting a large number of orphanages, schools and refuge homes, besides assisting in the maintenance of various hospitals and refugee camps in strategic centers. They are also organizing numerous industries in communities where industrial activity had broken down, especially in promoting agriculture and thus helping to meet the problem of the future food supply. In every way they are encouraging the speedy repatriation both of adults and children, and aiding in the reconstruction of houses where such assistance is necessary for the re-establishment of family life.

Apart from the need for physical relief and an increasing and alarming spiritual destitution which the religious forces of America should meet, it is the conviction of the Commissioners that the basic need in the Armenian situation, after all, is the establishment of a just and stable government. They say that all gifts of food, clothing and shelter will be only temporary expedients if such a government is not established. The outstanding fact in the Near East, they declare, is that the "terrible Turk" has never been soundly punished for all his crimson crimes. Jealousies between the great powers have always prevented the infliction upon the Ottoman government or the Turkish people of their just deserts, and the Turk is even now expecting that by some hook or crook he will once more escape serious punishment, and thus be enabled to repeat the infamous massacres and orgies of lust and rapine which have outraged mankind. On the market places and elsewhere threats are being made against the defenceless Armenians, and the boastful Moslems are declaring that next time they will "cut to the cradle."

A massacre was prevented just a few weeks ago, for example, in the Mesopotamian city of Ourfa, because the British commander sent for airplanes, which the people of the Turkish stronghold had never before seen. The aviators shot off their guns and dropped colored lights, and the Turks were thoroughly intimidated. Prominent citizens were heard to say in the streets that "only fools would be willing to fight against people who could walk through the air."

At Jerusalem the Commission divided into five groups, to make a more intensive study of the entire section where so many Armenians and Syrians were done to death. The territory covered extended from Port Said, Egypt northward to the Caucasus and from Constantinople eastward beyond the Euphrates River, almost to Lake Van. They are returning therefore with a comprehensive view of almost the entire devastated section.

The members of the American Committee include: H. C. Jaquith; M. S. Littlefield; C. H. Boynton, A. Duryea; Geo. H. Trull, and G. Bayard Young, of New York; Paul S. Leinbach, W. Edw. Raffety and C. E. Wilbur, of Pennsylvania; Geo. E. Huntley and Wm. I. Lawrence of Massachusetts; R. M. Hopkins, of Ohio; M. H. Fout and Wm. E. Carpenter, of Indiana; J. E. Miller, of Illinois; R. E. Magill, of Virginia; E. B. Chappell of Tennessee, and S. B. Bartlett, of Toronto, Canada. They will assist in conducting a great campaign throughout the United States and Canada for the most liberal Christmas, or near Christmas offering, yet given for the work of the American Committee, which is so imperative for the saving of many precious lives and for the rehabilitation of the new Armenia.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

GOSHEN, INDIANA

There is continually something stirring in the Goshen church. There have been a number of confessions and several by relation received since last reported. The church had taken up the matter of putting the Evangelist in every active home several times in the past two years but never until of late really attempted the task. It took work, but only shows what can be done when there is a will to do. There was quite a number who were able and cheerfully paid for the subscriptions of those who were not able to pay for their own and thereby got the greater blessing (It is more blessed to give than to receive). The Brethren Evangelist now goes into two hundred homes in the Goshen church. Now since this has been accomplished, we must put forth the same effort to keep it there. When those who had not been reading our paper, read it awhile, they will be like the writer—cannot possibly get along without it.

There have been some needed improvements made about the church of late, and there are yet some to be made. The woodwork of the church, parsonage and garage all received a new coat of paint, which adds to the appearance and durability as well. The trustees are also looking after the needs of the heating plant.

The Goshen church is looking forward to a very good and well attended conference. We think the spirit of hospitality among our people sufficient to take care of all who may come. We hope the churches of the state may be well represented. Sunday, October 5th, will be a special day at Goshen, for our church and Sunday school are planning to raise a much needed fund for improvements. The church here is noted for doing big things on special days or going over the top, as it is expressed these days. There will be some good news that we may give in our next. It is not a wedding, either, though that too may happen. Usually it means a fee and fine eats; that's what makes "Mac" smile.

Mr. and Mrs. Kesler left today for a trip to Zion City in response to invitation by Mr. Kesler's brother who is connected with that church. The Sisterhood girls are packing a barrel for our mission in Kentucky. The Ladies now known as the W. M. S. are planning and working hard to be in readiness for the coming conference.

Our former pastor, Brother Kimmel, was in the city on business, and remained over Sunday and preached for us. It seemed good to hear our brother after being absent so long.

Come again, don't wait for a special occasion. The funeral of Brother Isaac Cripe of Elkhart took place at our church on Thursday of last week.

About sixty from here were at Winona the week of the National Conference and if our memory serves us right we had about fifteen delegates there. All who were there speak in high terms of the conference. We hope that the spirit of getting together more unitedly through the Word and the spirit of Christian forbearance will prevail in all our conferences.

M. E. HORNER, Corresponding Secretary.

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER

Mrs. Catharine Benshoff, of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, widow of the late Benjamin Benshoff, passed to her reward September 6, 1919, at the age of 82 years, 8 months and 12 days. Her's was a busy, useful life; many were her contributions of loving service to others. She was the mother of fourteen children, all but one of whom grew to maturity. Besides the care of a large family she found much time to devote to the work of the church.

Mother was, from her youth, a devout Christian. Faithfully she performed life's duties. For more than fifty years she stood by the side of her husband in his many conflicts, calm, patient, loving, trustful, heroic. We can look through the mists of the years of toil, and allow our imaginations to call up the scenes that must have transpired, the battles which were fought and the victories won, until her life becomes fairly sublime. We who have known her in her graceful, cheerful, beautiful old age can well imagine with what delicacy and tenderness she ministered to others in their needs.

Her influence in the home is seen in this that her seven sons and six daughters embraced Christianity and became members of the Brethren church. What a blessing to a family of children is a Christian mother. We, her sons and daughters, tried through all her twelve years of widowhood to pay back in kind the love and devotion and tender care which we received from her when we were children. But at the close of her life we find ourselves much in arrears. It is a debt of such immense proportions that it can never be paid. Her interest in others won for her many friends. She was a woman highly respected, because she, without pretense, possessed those qualities which commanded respect.

The passing of mother to the home beyond, means the breaking up of a home which has been in existence for sixty-three years. She is survived by six sons, five daughters, forty-eight grandchildren and forty-one great grandchildren; also one brother and two sisters. Funeral service was conducted by her pastor, Brother J. F. Watson, assisted by two former pastors, Brethren George H. Jones and W. S. Baker.

W. C. BENSHOFF.

RESOLUTIONS OF SYMPATHY

To Brother W. C. Benshoff and Wife:—

Inasmuch as it has pleased Almighty God to call Mrs. Catharine Benshoff, mother of our beloved pastor, to her mansion in glory, having left her to live long past the allotted time of his creatures on earth, and realizing that her beautiful life and Christian character were an inspiration in her home, her community and especially to our brother: Therefore, be it resolved that we as a congregation and as a people extended our sympathies to all who mourn her departure and especially to our pastor. May her memory ever survive.

First Brethren church, Altoona, Pa.
L. Z. REPLOGLE, Moderator.

THIRD CHURCH OF PHILADELPHIA

There is no page in the Evangelist that I enjoy more than the one that contains the "News from the Field." But I thought that if they all did as we were doing the page would soon be one of the things that "has been," so I will say for our little work, that God has been blessing it wonderfully this summer, and the much dreaded "Summer Slump" has not made its appearance, at least, not in the morning services (I preach elsewhere in the evening) but I do not think that it has in the evening services—either.

The largest congregation that I have had was a few weeks ago in the heat; indeed, I think any preacher would be excusable if he should be a little proud of so faithful a congregation. I attribute it to my insisting upon their praying for me, as well as the meetings, in their private devotions and at both appointments. We have the first prayer for the messenger and the message, and I am happy to say that I have felt its uplifting power wonderfully. Indeed, we preachers are about what our congregations make us. Pray for us and we will all be eloquent.

The Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and prayer meetings have been well attended all summer. We have a vision of large things for Christ, and the church for this winter. The church lost a valuable worker in the death of Sister Kolb, wife of our Sunday school superintendent. She has entered into a well earned, and large reward.

Our Junior choir is one of the good things we have. I doubt if there is one anywhere that can sing better.

E. E. ROBERTS.

NEW PARIS, INDIANA

We are indeed very glad to extend to all of the Brethren a hearty invitation to attend the rededication services of our church on October 5th at 2:30 P. M. Also, at this service our new minister, W. I. Duker of Goshen, Indiana, will be ordained. This shall be a happy day for the New Paris people and we hope to have as many as possible share the day with us.

We are planning a big year and ask the prayers of the brotherhood.

C. C. STRYCKER,
Sec. of First Brethren Church,
New Paris, Indiana.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

Already we are made to feel that a splendid momentum has been created in the Ohio canvass. It seems quite apparent even at this early stage of the work that Ohio has squared herself and is ready with a fine determination to meet the challenge of the hour.

From Fremont we came to Bryan and began the campaign on Sunday night, September 14th. As with Fremont so with Bryan—we went there on short notice. But the results at each of these places would indicate that there is not a whole lot in the length of the notice beforehand. It is a case of getting down to business when the signal is given, no matter when it is announced that the Campaign Secretary is coming.

Bryan is one of the oldest congregations in the Ohio Conference. It has had among its membership in the past some of the very first and most loyal supporters of the Brethren church. Brother G. L. Maus is the pastor and he and his automobile (I can't spell the name of his car, so I will say automobile) all ready for the fray. Being a busy time for the farmers, we did not have a strong attendance from among the country people at our evening services. But we made the best of it and went right ahead. We worked very hard, but that is part of the process; and when the results are right we forget the hard work.

The Bryan result is "right." Bryan has gone over the top. She can look her little sister at Fremont right in the face with a clear conscience. Bryan has placed the standard for Ohio churches up at a good, healthful altitude. When Bryan hit, the bell rang. When we closed the $2000 mark had been reached. To be exact the result was $2013. I don't like that "13," but when the finals are in from Bryan it ought to be well beyond $2100. So that is Bryan's answer to the call for permanent endowment. And thus Bryan has proven that her loyalty in the past to Ashland College has in no sense waned. In the past Bryan has sent students to our college, and she will continue to do so. In the course of this campaign I have addressed no finer lot of high school students than in the Bryan high school. Our church has its fair proportion of young people in high school at Bryan, and I have the assurance that as those young people finish their work there, they will give our own school a fair and just consideration.

Brother Maus is a great running mate. He refused to spare either gasoline or effort in the matter of putting across the canvass in his congregation in the best possible way. I heartily thank him for the royal co-operation he gave me. Moreover I am indebted to him and Sister Maus for the splendid home they gave me in the fine new parsonage property. Bryan has certainly provided a fine dwelling for their shepherd. In the course of our work we were also shown the kindest hospitality in the Henricks home, also the Kerr homes (both Joe and Melvin), also in the Eberly, Brown, and Erlsten homes. Many other doors were open to us but limited time compelled us to decline the invitations. I congratulate the Bryan people on the splendid investment they have made and I covet for them in their work for the Master God's richest blessings.

While in the northwest corner of Ohio I also went to Pioneer. Our church here is in the country. There has been no preaching here for quite a long time. I shall have more to report about our work at this place later. For the present I want to report that I preached twice here, and though the membership is small I raised for endowment $265. This is not the finals yet for Pioneer. Thirteen years ago I held a meeting for this congregation and had not been back since. It was a pleasure however to meet in the homes again those whom I had learned to know so long ago. I have in mind the Martins, and the Kanauers, and the Yagels, the Boyces, and the Eberlys, and the Stambauchs.

Fair Haven next. The mercury now stands at $115,000.

WM. H. BEACHLER, Campaign Secretary.

THE COMMITTEE OF FIFTEEN

The late General Conference at Winona Lake created a new committee which will be known as "The Committee or Fifteen." And to this committee was delegated one of the most important tasks which confronts the Brethren church. Next year the Four-Year Program upon which we have been working will be completed, and a new and larger work must be undertaken. To study the field and consider our needs and possibilities and formulate a program for the future, is the task assigned the committee of fifteen. During the coming year the committee will undertake to do this work and be ready to report to the next General Conference.

The committee of fifteen consists of the following men: C. A. Bame, W. H. Beachler, J. A. Garber, H. H. Wolford, Norman Statler, J. Allen Miller, H. V. Wall, L. G. Wood, Horace Kolb, G. W. Rench, Orion E. Bowman, A. V. Kimmel, G. T. Ronk, W. S. Bell, Miles J. Snyder. A temporary organization of the committee was effected by the election of C. A. Bame, chairman, and Miles J. Snyder, Secretary.

Some preliminary work was done by the committee before leaving Winona. It was the consensus of opinion and judgment that the next program presented to the church shall have fewer goals than existing conditions necessarily required in our Four Year Program, and that the efforts of the church should be concentrated upon big, comprehensive, essential things. For the present at least, five great fields of activity were decided upon for study, and sub-committees were appointed as follows:

- On EVANGELISM—Kimmel, Bell, Wood.
- On EXTENSION—Rouk, Wolford, Rench.
- On STEWARDSHIP—Snyder, Wall, Statler.
- On RECRUITS—Garber, Beachler, Bame.
- On MISSIONS—Miller, Bowman, Kolb.

The plan is for these separate committees to investigate and study the designated phases of church activity, and then after several months the entire committee of fifteen shall meet and go over the entire field together, with a view of formulating a program that will challenge the best efforts of the church and be worthy of its highest endeavor. In order to do this work well the members of the committee of fifteen need, and earnestly solicit, the united prayers of our people that heavenly wisdom may be theirs as they try to do the work assigned them by the church.

MILES J. SNYDER, Secretary.

ASHLAND, OREGON

The band of believers belonging to the Brethren church at this place were made to rejoice when the husband of our pianist and father of several of our Sunday school scholars, confessed his faith in our resurrected Lord and was baptized and initiated into the church by the laying on of hands and prayer at the close of our morning service yesterday. He is the second man to be baptized and united with us this season. The other man was a stranger to us, one whose parents were members of the Brethren church in Michigan by the name of Swihart, but who had moved to Oregon and were under my ministrations at the time of their death, I having administered the rite of anointing during their sickness. This son had heard of us and as he passed this way on a visit to his brother and sisters on this coast and stopped a few hours with us, was baptized and went on his way rejoicing. After receiving him into the church we put him in touch with the brotherhood by telling him where and how he could get the Evangelist and we doubt not but that he is a reader of its columns. We praise the Lord that we can be used by him in leading the wandering ones to the savior.

D. M. BROWER.

ON TO GOSHEN

Again the time has come for the Brethren of Indiana to meet in our annual state conference. For several reasons this should be the greatest conference in the history of our state work.

The program has been arranged with a view of reaching every phase of the churches activities. The conference church is centrally located among our larger churches, is easy to reach, and we are urging upon pastors and church leaders, that they begin at once to see to it that their church has a full quota of delegates present.

Blank credentials have been mailed to all the churches. If, however, some have been missed, we will gladly supply you yet if you will notify us.

Now Brethren, we should be present at the very first session on Monday evening for the conference sermon by Brother C. A. Bame and also for the stereopticon lecture on our Kentucky field which will follow.

I might add further concerning the program that Brother G. S. Baer of the Publishing Company and Dr. Jacobs of the college will be with us on Tuesday evening.

The pastor of the conference church informs us that lodging and breakfast will be furnished in the homes free of charge to all who come. Dinners and suppers will be served in the church basement at a reasonable price.

We are still urging that if any person whose name appears on the program finds it impossible to be present that you inform us at your earliest convenience.

C. C. GRISSE, Secretary,
North Liberty, Indiana.

SMITH-KNOTE—Mr. Harry B. Smith and Miss Esther L. Knote, both of Altoona, Pa., were united in marriage August 23, 1919 at the home of the bride. Ceremony by the writer.

GODFREY-PARKINSON—At the home of the writer, Wednesday, September 10, 1919, Mr. George Godfrey and Mrs. Florence Parkinson were by me united in marriage. Brother Godfrey is a successful business man, and one of the most useful members of the Third church, Sister Godfrey also is an earnest, devout and useful Christian. May our heavenly Father's richest blessings rest upon them is the prayer of all that know them.

E. E. ROBERTS.

ALBERT-SEIBERT—On Wednesday, September 17, 1919, at four o'clock in the afternoon at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Seibert, in Berlin, Pa., the undersigned united Mr. Chester E. Albert and Sister Mary Louise Seibert in the holy bonds of matrimony. Miss Seibert is a young woman of education and accomplishments and is the only daughter in the home. For some time she has taught school. Last year she was principal of one of the schools at Conemaugh, filling the place with such skill that she was desired to continue. Mr. Albert is a young man of worth and ability, and is at present the Secretary of the Y. M. C. A. in Conemaugh. Immediately after the ceremony they went to Conemaugh where they will live.

IN THE SHADOW

SPAHN—William Edward Spahn was born in Germany and died at his late home in Altoona, Pa., in his seventy-third year. Brother Spahn had been for a number of years a very active member of the Brethren church, but of late years was hindered on account of illness. He is survived by his widow, four sons and three daughters, and a host of friends. Funeral service by the writer, assisted by Rev. Sherman of the Methodist church.

W. C. EENSCHOFF.

HEIN—Annie Liver Hein was born September 7, 1857 and died August 27, 1919, aged 61 years, 11 months and 19 days. She was the sister of her brother, where she became as one of the family, until her marriage to Nicholas Hein which occurred February 1st, 1885. To this union there were born ten children, nine of which preceded her in death, there being left to mourn her departure one daughter, Mrs. Hilda Woodward and one adopted daughter, Mrs. Cory Graham. She was a member of the Brethren church of West Independence. Her funeral was held at the home of Brother Freeman Krabill, Fostoria, Ohio, conducted by the writer. Interment was made in West Independence cemetery. In her last words, she referred very touchingly to Brother Hazen and family and Brother Krabill.

M. S. WHITE.

LYTER—George F. Lyter was born in Branch county, Michigan, June 25, 1862 and died at Guthrie, Oklahoma, September 12, 1919. He was married to Miss Viola Mae Lambaugh, and to them were born eleven children, four of whom have gone on before and seven remain to mourn the loss of a father. All the living children are members of the Brethren church, having joined in 1887. Brother Lyter was a member of the Brethren church and lived in the blessed hope. Funeral was conducted by the writer at the Church of the Brethren, and burial being made in the Mt. Hope cemetery.

D. HARADER.

He is not wise who discards a happier tomorrow for fear lest it be taken from him on the morrow. Let us wait until the hour has been sounded. Till then each one do his work. The hour will sound at last; let us not waste our time in seeking it on the dial of time.—Maeterlinck.

Re-Covering and Re-Making to Meet The World Challenge

Sometime ago we sent an announcement of our new Rally Day Program to every Sunday school in the brotherhood. We trust you will co-operate with your school in preparing for the most successful rally day you have ever had. Our program will help you do just that very thing.

The program is planned with a serious purpose running through it and if properly rendered it will entertain and instruct and inspire. It is made to fit into the wonders of the times in which we live. Its timeliness is at once apparent.

The Supplement specially prepared to accompany each order for programs contains full information for those having charge of the preparation of the program and those who take part in it, together with recitations, hymns, exercises, suggestions, etc.

The price of the program with supplement is only $2.50 per hundred copies, just about half the usual charge for such a program. Send your order at once and begin your preparation for the "Big Day."

Seeing and Receiving the King

Recently while making a trip to attend the Indiana Brethren conference in company with Dr. Jacobs, we were compelled to stop over in Toledo three hours between trains. On entering the city our train was held up for what seemed to the impatient passengers an hour before being allowed to pull in at the depot. When finally we were there we discovered that the special train carrying the king of the Belgians had pulled into the station ahead of us and for that reason we were detained. At the railroad station flags and bunting of Belgian and American colors were everywhere to be seen. Upon inquiring of an employee at a confectionary stand what all the decorations meant, we received the reply, "We are receiving the king of the Belgians today." The entire city was gay with the flags of the two countries, marching throngs, band playing and speech making. It seemed that everybody was taking a holiday to "receive the king of the Belgians." That is, everybody except us and a few others who were not identifying themselves with the city's life and celebration.

The situation was interesting not only because of the demonstration that was being entered into by the masses, but also because of the presence of an opposite element which refused to be identified with the city's pride in being the host of a king for an hour and would not unite in doing honor to him who was the leader of the immortal Belgians. Those of the opposite element looked upon the demonstration but did not become a part of it. They took advantage of the opportunity of seeing the king, but did not co-operate in "receiving him." They observed him half curiously, half critically, but felt no warm admiring heart-beat toward him. They recognized the fact of his presence, but put forth no effort to welcome him. Was it strange? Was it unusual?

It was not strange, neither was it unusual. Nor should this distinguished personage have felt himself aggrieved if he had observed the coldness and indifference of some to his presence. A greater than the king of the Belgians has encountered that same spirit when his presence has been heralded in town and country. Jesus, who was hailed as the King of the Jews, was refused in his own town, ridiculed by his own kinsmen and scoffed at by those to whom he had come to do honor. "He came unto his own, but his own received him not." They looked upon him; they knew he was present, but they had no word of welcome for him; their hearts did not go out to greet him. And thus are men treating him today. Their eyes behold the unmistakable evidence of his presence, but their hearts are not open to receive him. And what shall it profit a man though he see all the grandeur of Christian civilization, but have lost the incalculable privilege of receiving the Christ of the ages into his heart. The deciding question in the day of final testing will not be Did you see the King of the Jews? but Did you receive him?

Go Work Today In My Vineyard

These sound like strange words to many of our good church people today. There is so much "waiting and watching" that we forget to work while we wait and watch. There are so many people whose principal conception of the Christian life is that of "rejoicing in the Lord," being religiously entertained and resting from their labors, that the few who are really busy about their Master's business are overburdened. There are so many who are "at ease in Zion" that a host of things that ought to be done are being left undone by the church of Christ today. Not only is there a tendency to rest from our labors when we ought to be at work, but there is a real disinclination to hear anything that savors of work. I was speaking in a church on one occasion when one of the shouting fathers in Israel arose and abruptly left the church. I had been speaking of the importance of real genuine labor for Christ and the church accompanying the faith we so vehemently express, and I learned from the pastor of that church afterwards that the man who left the church was very spiritual and rejoiced much in the thought of God's grace and the greatness of faith, but that any admonition concerning works was very repugnant to him. I had been bringing the counsel of James' Epistle strongly to bear upon a spirit of religious inactivity in that community, and found that at least one man was so determinately averse to or so densely ignorant of the wholesome counsel of the elder of the sons of Zebedee that the very mention of it offended him. He must also have been uninstructed concerning the whole teaching of Jesus, or else he had become hardened to the repeated injunction of the Master to "go work today in my vineyard."

It is a fine thing to rejoice in the grace of God and to cultivate a great faith, but after all, the faith that is truly great and worthy is that which is accompanied with correspondingly great efforts in behalf of Christ's kingdom. "Faith without works is dead" said one to whom we have reason to give heed. He who has not love enough to do the Master's bidding has not life enough to lay hold on the Savior's grace by faith. Generally, any unconcern about the gospel of work is due to a lack of any real vital religion. Not infrequently there get into the church those who are there primarily for what they can get out of it, and not for what they can do for their Lord and their fellowmen. They like to share in the advantages of church membership, but do not like to bear a Christian's service. They like to eat the fruit, but do not like to cultivate the vines.

They prefer to sit by and talk over the prospects while the Master sends other men to work his vineyard.

A wealthy Vermont man who became very active in church work, was asked what led him to devote himself so industriously to the work of the church. His reply was very significant. He said, "There are so many ready to eat the grapes that I thought I ought and he who takes it to heart will hunt his hoe and use it. The to help hoe the vines." There is food for reflection in that answer, church—each and every church—is a vineyard, and the field is ours to cultivate and render fruitful. If the vintage is to be adequate, each member must be interested and active, sowing, cultivating, and harvesting. There is work for each and every one. Too many are ready to eat the grapes, but too few are using their hoes. Remember the words of Jesus, how he said, "Go work today in my vineyard."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

OUR PUBLISHING HOUSE NUMBER

We promised our readers a special number in which a picture of our new building, together with other pictures and special features would appear. To convince you that our intentions were good, we want to say that the entire paper was put in the forms with cuts and all ready for the printer when it was found that the new press which is necessary to the printing of this special number would not be in operation in time to print this paper. Then we were compelled to take out much of the material and put in new. Our special number however will be run just as soon as the new press is in operation, and we hope you will not have to wait long.

This issue is considerably late, but the lateness is not due to this necessary change in the make-up of the paper, but to the fact that it was impossible to get even the old press ready for operation any sooner. We trust our readers will be patient during this straightening-up process, for it may be that unavoidable delays due to getting machinery re-located may occur for a short time. But just as soon as possible we want this publication to be mailed regularly not later than Wednesday night of each week.

Christian Endeavorers should not fail to read the messages by Brethren Garber and Whitted on the Christian Endeavor page this week.

The second installment of the California Bible conference minutes appears in this week's issue, the former having appeared some weeks ago. It is hoped they will receive due attention.

On the Mission page you will find Brother Gearhart's first message since taking up the new work to which the mission boards and General Conference called him. All will want to read it carefully and get acquainted with him. Then let us get back of him in his effort to make this a "Victory Year" in all lines of missions.

Brother Platt reports for Manteca, California, one of the youngest congregations in the brotherhood. The work is in a thriving condition there, new members are steadily being added to the church and young people are being lead to consecrate their lives to his service. May God cause them to prosper still more this coming year.

At Bryan, Ohio, Brother G. L. Maus is pastor; there are also some mighty fine laity there. These pastor and people are doing a good work for God in their field, and it was they who broke the second ground for college endowment in Ohio. They not only did a noble thing for permanent endowment, but received a great blessing from the visit of Brother Beachler in their midst. All the various departments of their work are being kept up to a very high point of efficiency.

Brother Carpenter comes to us with another report of the Kentucky support fund. It will be interesting to read the report and find your name there as having paid your pledge. If you have not yet paid it your remittance will enable him to make another interesting report later. However, it may be that the next report will come from the pen of Brother Wm. A. Gearhart of Dayton, Ohio, the new MISSIONARY SECRETARY of the Brethren church who is to receive all funds for all missionary purposes. Brother Carpenter has been very faithful in reporting and while he may not make so many financial reports as formerly all will be delighted to have him continue his spicy missionary items from time to time.

Brother Z. T. Livengood, the church correspondent of Lanark, Illinois, tells of plans for a great Rally and Harvest Home Day and of the success attained. Notwithstanding the fact that rain interfered somewhat, yet the day's program went forward successfully, and in like manner will the work of that church and school, we dare say, go forward during the coming year under the leadership of their energetic pastor, Brother B. T. Burnworth.

The Business Manager's Corner is of more than usual interest this week because the thing that inspires Brother Teeter to write is a very unusual happening. The enthusiasm with which he writes is but indicative of the happy spirit that pervades the entire publishing house force since locating in their new home. Our readers will appreciate our rejoicing over this move after they shall have the opportunity of comparing the pictures of the two buildings.

Dr. Jacob's college notes, though brief, are yet very interesting, especially the item disclosing the distribution of the student body among the several states. Those states that are not represented or are poorly represented will want to bestir themselves another year in order that they may show up as loyally in the supplying of students as they did in the giving of endowment. The attendance this year is greatly increased over last year's and the spirit of the school is fine.

The work at Falls City, Nebraska, has suffered a loss by the Mathers family moving to Lincoln, but on the other hand, it has been strengthened by introducing some new material into the work. The various departments of the church's work are in splendid condition, and it is not difficult to see that Brother Stackman is greatly loved by his parishioners. Long pastorates pay in most cases for God often has a work to do that requires time and intimate knowledge to accomplish.

The faithful and hard working secretary-treasurer of the missionary board, Brother Orion E. Bowman, gives what seems to be his last report as collector of funds for that organization and makes a summary of the amount he is turning over to the hands of the new missionary secretary, Brother Gearhart. We are certain that we can speak for the brotherhood when we say that Brother Bowman's faithful attention to the secretarial work of the missionary board in addition to the many other services he has rendered to the church is greatly appreciated. While he still retains his position his work will be greatly lightened by the establishing of this new office of general missionary secretary.

The Ashland church and Sunday school under the leadership of Brother J. A. Garber, as pastor is being kept busy with special features and the spiritual interest is becoming increasingly active. On Sunday, September 28, Promotion exercises were held in the Sunday school and Convocation services in the church when President Jacobs preached a masterful sermon. October 8 was Responsibility Sunday when the pastor in a remarkable sermon drove home to the minds of all present the importance of every one doing his part and doing it well. October 12 was Rally Day when a splendid program was rendered and an attendance of 180 and an offering of over 36 dollars was had. October 19 was Entertainment Sunday when all the students of the college were entertained for dinner in the various homes of the church members. October 26 will be Communion Sunday preceded by a week of preparatory preaching services.

The College Endowment Campaign is still going ahead at full steam. And the closer Brother Beachler gets to Ashland the more interesting the canvass becomes. The Fairhaven congregation, whose canvass is reported this week, gives a good account of herself and shows by her gifts that she greatly appreciates Ashland College. And why should she not? The live-wire pastor she has now is a student in Ashland College, and all through the years she has been supplied with the best student preachers that the college afforded. She has frequently sent her children to be educated at Ashland, and even now she has an Ashland College trustee among her membership, Prof. E. Glenn Mason. And so we are not surprised when we learn that Fairhaven went "over the top" in endowment. We would have been disappointed if she had done less, with all the college enthusiasm with which she has so long been surrounded. But as she did so well, her long line of former ministers will be proud of her. God bless her. She and others like her will secure Ohio's reputation in the endowment campaign. Brother Owen is the present pastor who helped Beachler put a campaign across.

The Possibilities of the Tithe as a Means of Financing the Kingdom

BY F. E. CLAPPER

Whether or not, we as individuals, believe that the Scriptures teach the practice of tithing as an obligation and privilege that every Christian ought to assume, there are some facts relating to the "Financing of the Kingdom" which are self evident. There can be no doubt but that the bringing in of the Kingdom has been retarded from the early days because the church has been inadequately financed. Because Christians have not fully learned that beneficence is an essential part of the Christian life, many churches have tried to procure a goodly part of their current expenses by indulging in pink teas, bazaars, chicken and noodle suppers and even minstrel shows and lotteries. Some profit has been realized from these many strenuous efforts but because the underlying principle is wrong these have all been failures as a means of financing the Kingdom. It is evident that the great drives are being made among our many denominations to provide funds for forward movements will give only temporary relief. Which thoughts bring us to the need of some solution for all of the financial problems of the church.

Let us notice some of the possibilities of the tithe as a solution to our difficulties.

The tithing system will encourage regularity of income for the church. This will make possible the meeting of all fixed expenses as they fall due and will give a "good credit" standing to the church.

The tithing system assures equality in the distribution of the responsibilities of the work among each individual member whether he be rich or poor. It guarantees a "square deal to every man." In other words each member makes a like investment in the stock of the Kingdom and therefore all can share alike in the earnings or blessings that it brings.

The tithing system assures stability in the church's income from year to year. It precludes the possibility of the "seven good years followed by seven years of famine." It makes possible a definite program for the growth of the church and the extension of its operations and widening of its influence from year to year.

The tithing system will conserve the time and energy of the members of the church as it will eliminate all need of resorting to dinners, bazaars, and festivals, as a means of financing the kingdom, thereby making it possible to divert that time and energy into channels of real Christian service.

This is the day of "big business." There never was a day when there existed so many large successful commercial enterprises. There never was a day when so many of our young men were attending schools of commerce pursuing studies in economics and the fundamentals of business. Because of the application of sound business principles we have the many large corporations today. The application of some of this common sense to the financing of the kingdom will work wonders. The King's business is the biggest business that we can conceive of. It is so large that all other organizations are insignificant by way of comparison. Its capital comprises the whole world. "The silver is mine and the gold is mine saith the Lord of hosts." "For every beast of the forest is mine and the cattle upon a thousand hills." "For the world is mine and the fullness thereof." As directors or stewards we Christians have been somewhat lame on organization and co-ordination of interests. Because of our selfishness "we have turned every one to his own way." We have hindered the King's business because we have not provided reasonable remuneration for our ministry in action and for those on the superannuated list. We have hindered because we have not provided ample accommodations and equipment for our churches and Sunday schools, sufficient endowment for our educational institutions, generous provision for the sending of the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth.

The King's business is of prime importance. It requires haste. It requires concentration. God did not leave us ignorant as to the method he wished employed in financing his Kingdom. Let us look into his Book and learn his way of financing his work (Mal. 3:10).

The Choir—Its Contribution and Responsibility. By Fred C. Vanator

When one deals with a subject such as this, it can readily be seen that enough material presents itself to fill a much larger space than has been allotted to this article. In view of this fact we will have to be as brief as possible and at the same time cover the ground.

In the first place, when we consider the choir, we should give a little space to its personnel. Let us ask the question, "Who shall occupy the choir seats?" Not how many sopranos; nor how many altos; nor tenors; nor bass; but who is worthy to occupy the position accorded to the choir? To me there is but one answer to the question and that is this,—These seats should be occupied by those who are closely enough related to the work of the church to be in spiritual atune and accord with God and his Kingdom aims. In other words, it is those of the church membership who are in tune with God's plan, and being in tune are able, not simply to bring forth melodious sounds that tickle the ears of the audience, but who are also capable of singing the message of Jesus into the very hearts and lives of men. No, do not misunderstand me and think that I am belittling harmony. No one appreciates good music more than I. Yet I do say that it is far better to have a choir of consecrated voices, who are able to touch the heartstrings of the audience, even though they cannot sing an anthem with all the flourish of the trained singer, than to have a highly trained chorus made up of those who make it a business of singing God's praises (?) on Sunday and Satan's throughout the remaining six days of the week. Coming down to the very crux of the whole matter, here is what I am trying to say. The primary business of the choir is to preach the Word of God through the medium of song, even as the preacher proclaims it in word. Consequently it is just as essential that each member of the choir be completely consecrated to the work as it is that the minister who sends forth the call from the sacred precincts of the pulpit be so consecrated. When the choir is so consecrated then and then only will the best results be obtainable.

What then is the contribution of the choir? Good, whole hearted, gospel singing. Music is as essential to the church service as is the message which follows it. How long would a music loving public endure a church that was utterly devoid of the most beautiful service of song? Few indeed would be its days and limited would be its entire field of service. As sings the choir, so sings the congregation. And this is no idle sentence either. I have watched the effects of the choir singing on the audience time and time again and almost without exception the same expression is to be found upon the faces of those who occupy the pews as is found upon the face of the choir. We might well say then that the choir contributes the very life of the service.

Now as to its responsibility. Facing the audience as most choirs do and thus being placed in a position of prominence it becomes in most cases a very trying position. Little things are seen that cause anyone who is prone to see the funny side of life considerable difficulty in sustaining the proper decorum. Having myself been a member of the choir for a number of years I can truly testify to this difficulty. But nevertheless it is absolutely necessary for those desiring to be overcome to a very material extent if one wishes to be of the very best aid to the pastor and the people in helping to extend the influence of Christ's kingdom through the channel of song. Therefore one can readily see that at the very beginning of the church service there falls a responsibility upon the choir member. Truly when the choir chants that old song, "Someone is looking to you," it is striking deeper into self than it thinks. Especially the young people who occupy the pews are looking to the members of the choir as examples as to the conduct of worship. If the choir is noisy and whisper back and forth, mark my word, in a very short time many in the audience will be doing the same thing. If on the contrary the choir quietly take their seats and listen attentively as the organist sends forth the quieting notes of the prelude the only sound that breaks the stillness of God's house is the throbbing of the melody. We might well say then that first of all the choir is responsible for the very decorum of the church service. But outside appearances are not all. Dr. John McNeil, that good old Scotch preacher, had occasion to speak of the work of a choir. In speaking of its relative merits he said in that Scotch brogue of his which no one can imitate. "There was trouble in the choir. And sure where is there a choir that does not have trouble? The fact is that there is so much trouble in the average choir that it has very aptly been called the war department of the church." What a reputation. But again, how true. Internal strife has been the undoing of many a nation. Internal strife in the choir (which by the way is mostly the result of misunderstandings which arise and which no one in particular takes the trouble to adjust) has likewise caused many a promising choir to be rendered absolutely useless to both pastor and people. This has been going on for years and will still go on until those who occupy the choir seats learn the real purpose of the service of song. How I wish I might burn this sentence into the heart of everyone who sings in the choir:—"YOU ARE GOD'S MOUTHPIECE IN SONG." When choirs once come to realize the tremendous responsibility of their work, then will the choir become the greatest asset the church possesses. Choir member, sing the songs, but first of all LIVE THE LIFE. Today deeds, not mere words count.

Let us come to the conclusion of the whole matter and say that it is no small thing to be chosen as a member of the choir. It is a consecrated task. It is a task that carries with it a heavy burden of responsibility. While the task is not light in the end it brings its own reward, for he who sings God's praises out of the fullness of his heart finds in time that his labors are not in vain, for God has said in his Book, "So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: IT SHALL NOT RETURN UNTO ME VOID, BUT IT SHALL ACCOMPLISH THAT WHICH I PLEASE, AND I SHALL PROSPER THE THING WHEREUNTO I SENT IT" (Isa. 55:11).

This in closing. You who are members of the various choirs throughout the brotherhood, take your task seriously. Let the choir leader, instead of being compelled by force of circumstances to be the Secretary of War, become, rather, the Secretary of Agriculture, so to speak, and assist him in planting seeds which have been tested and proven to be living, throbbing, pulsating, germs of life. Prepare the field in order that when pastor and people seek a place for reaping they may find there growing and ripening the seeds of the Gospel as planted by the choir.

Church Advertising. By J. C. McBride

Much of the need for "Church Advertising" lies in the inability of the local church to properly elevate herself to the high standard of Christian fellowship. Each individual church is surrounded by a community in which personality is the same as it ever has been, but in which environments change. "Church Advertising," therefore, should be drawn upon from the environment with which one has to deal. In these strenuous days of commercialism, "Church Advertising" should be of the type of publicity which will suit your particular community best.

The churches in the larger cities are becoming more and more convinced each day that actual display space in the leading daily papers is of great value as a "selling force" to reach hungry people. The fact that large stores use whole pages to herald their goods on special sale is evidence that people read the bargain sales, and the advertising pays. The same reasoning will apply to the church,—when specials are to be offered, why not use advertising space in the daily or weekly papers? No, I don't mean oyster suppers, socials or other forms of financial relief, but rather such rare special occasions as a sermon on Church Doctrines, A Risen Lord, Infallibility of the Holy Word. These are indeed rare occasions with some preachers, so why not put on a series of special features and use your many advertising abilities?

Don't overlook the window card and door hanger or handbill in advance of your series of evangelistic meetings. Then when the crowd comes in, don't give them so much hell, but rather a little bit of heaven. A church with a lot of hell in it will not be much of a paying proposition no matter what their plan of publicity.

The personal workers are the best assets to any church and they are best suited to carry on the campaign for church advertising.

-Once a Month

During the coming winter months, try to work out a series of special features with special programs, similar to the following: The mayor of your city, if he be a Christian; a prominent judge or lawyer; a county school superintendent; a leading layman; a series of stereopticon pictures or a number of other big features along the same lines; then back it up with your prayers, and all work together for the ultimate success, and I know from experience that you will be surprised at the great success of the undertaking.

For the smaller churches, I would suggest annual roll call for a set date in each year and then notify every family to be present. The spirit of co-operation will abide as a matter of fact and a new inspiration will take a hold upon the community which will result to the successful means of church advertising.

Live the religion you preach and be "not ashamed of the gospel of Christ." Perhaps your community at large is looking to you as the standard of your preaching—a poor standard perhaps, but it is all they have until you have sufficiently advertised your church that it will stand or fall on its merits rather than on its theology.

Did you ever figure the cost of souls saved on a percent basis? I feel perfectly safe in saying, the more money judiciously spent in church advertising, the greater will be the percent in souls saved into the Kingdom.

The above plans have nearly all been tried out in the Dayton, Ohio, church and I have seen it grow in the last fifteen years from a mission, supported partly by the mission board, to the largest church in the brotherhood, and I know that the many campaigns of the advertising committee had much to do with the ultimate success.

Dayton, Ohio.

It may be a very little thing for you to say to a young man the few words that turn him from the way of ruin, and win him back to life and hope. It may be a very little thing to you; but it is everything to him.—John B. Gough.

The Need of the Family Altar. By M. V. Garrison

I believe there is more need of the family altar today than ever before. Our boys and girls never hear us pray or return thanks at the earthly board, and if we as parents do not teach our children to pray whom do we expect to teach them? A great many people of today if you were to ask them why they do not have the family altar in their home, they would make excuses like this, we have not the time, or they could not get the family together, or something of that nature. And for these excuses all I can say is, God pity them. Too busy collecting this world's goods that will soon perish and fade away to teach their children to pray! What a shame! And it is not only the laymen who have not the family altar in their homes but ministers as well. This is a great weakness. In many instances people will come to the minister and say "What can I do to save my children? Can you help me?" The very best advice he will be unable to give if he has not an altar in his own home. At least that is my counsel to parents like these,—erect a family altar in your home and teach your children the right way in their young days.

Our American homes today are in great need of the family altar, in fact, it is the most needed thing in the world today. And if each Christian home had the family altar in it there would not be so much vice and sin in the world today.

Now I would say to the young husband and wife who are just starting in life, Erect a family altar at once and bring your children up at the altar and at the foot of the cross. Proverbs XXII-6,—“Train up a child in the way he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it.” At least, if they go wrong, it will not be because they never heard father or mother pray. What an awful thing it will be to come up to the judgment bar of God and have our children point the finger of scorn at us, and to hear the Master's condemning voice saying depart from me. Oh, parents, I plead with you, as one who loves your soul, erect a family altar and do it now.

There is just as great need of the family altar today as there was for the erection of the altar which Elijah erected to convince the children of Israel that God was the true God. Today we need the family altar to teach our children that God is the true God and that Jesus Christ is his Son who came into the world to save them from their sins; not to save them in their sin, but from them. And until fathers and mothers arouse to the fact that they must guide their children in the ways of all truth, sin will continue to reign in this world and in the hearts of men.

We a Christian people do not realize the great need of the family altar as we should. And we as ministers do not preach it as we should. It is just as necessary to preach the family altar, as it is to preach tithing. We cannot run God's business without money, neither can we without Christians. And it is necessary to teach our children at home the way of the cross, if we would have them to be soul winners for Christ.

Any one can build an altar, but it requires God to provide the flame; just as any one can build a house but we need the Lord to create a home. Now the Christian religion is able to convert houses into homes, to supply the missing fire and to bring an aspiring flame to the cold and chilling altar. The New Testament does not say very much about homes, but it does say a great deal about the things that make them. It speaks about life and love and joy and peace and rest. If we get a house and put these into it we shall have secured a home.

Here there are two houses, in both of them there is no love, no joy, no peace, no rest. There is no flame of geniality and radiant hope. Let us bring the Christian religion into one of the houses and leave it out of the other. In one house all of the tenants will kneel before King Jesus. They will be one in purpose, and they will strive together with common mind and will. What shall assuredly happen? With absolute certainty that house will become a home. That is a glorious proven fact in the history of the Christian faith. Where Christ has been enthroned, and every member of the family becomes a worshiper, there steals into the common life a warmth of affection which converts even trivial things a token of love.

What do we find in the other home? Sin reigns. Pass forth, mark my word, in a very short time numerous of the mult and unrest. What shall we do? Call upon Baal. Call upon the gods of this world. God forbid. It would be a fruitless prayer.

There is nothing for it but the grace of Christ and almighty God. God changes houses into homes. May he be your God, and reign in every home in the Brethren church, and may all find time to worship God at the family altar, is my prayer.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Sovereignty of the Holy Spirit in Christian Service. By W. J. Barnhart

Expository Text: I Corinthians 12, 13, 14; with Ephesians 4:11-16

My thoughts are not your thoughts neither are your ways my ways. As the heavens are higher than the earth so are my ways higher than your ways and my thoughts than your thoughts (Isa. 55:8, 9). In many respects these words of God by the prophet are proven in human experience but I desire to especially emphasize that they are woefully true when applied to the present day Christian experience and church activity, in view of the Scripture testimony about the SOVEREIGNTY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT in all Christian experience and service.

In all God's dealings with his covenant people there has been manifest two phases of his will, which we may designate as DIRECTIVE and PERMISSIVE, the one representing the BEST and the other the SECOND BEST. This represents a contrast and a conflict between the Lord's way and man's self-will or choosing in matters of service. God's directive will is that in which lies the Divine choice and plan for his children, the path of fullest blessing, richest experience, largest achievement, in religious service. His permissive will is that in which he allows his children because of free moral agency to go the path of their own choosing but which choice he does not approve or bless with his presence or power, except to lead back to the right path by protective or corrective providential measures. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, each went down to Egypt for help in a time of trial and need, whereas God's contract with them pledged blessing in the land of Canaan. Not prosperity but disaster was the outcome of their choice, though it gave a temporary and material benefit.

The church today is living too much on second-best, unwilling to surrender self-will sufficient to get the best. It is not a question of moral principle or sin in the broader sense, not unholy carnality and worldliness but the old question of those who with some degree of zeal and devotion—fine folks often—are trying to do and be good, but in their own way, not thinking it necessary to consult the Lord, being deceived by the old fallacy that “the end justifies the means” and “just so the heart is right (i. e. satisfied) all is right,” anything will do because done in a religious spirit. The fruitage of this kind of reasoning and service is typified by the period of the Judges in which Israel's experience was characterized by temporary gains and successes only to be again overwhelmed by defeat and oppression and the secret of which was "Every man did that which was right in his own eyes" (Judges 17:6). In the same spirit Saul in behalf of and in agreement with the people, reserved the spoils of the Amalekites for sacrifice through the reservation for any cause was expressly forbidden, and yet he professed to have loyally obeyed the Lord, but the Lord refused to recognize the sacrifice. David in a spasm of religious fervor essayed to bring the ark of the covenant up to Jerusalem and loaded it on a new Philistine ox-cart—a bright idea copied from the Philistines—but the Lord had commanded that it should always without exception be transported on the shoulders of the priests. The Lord refused to bless the project and David was angry but later confessed that it was his fault. So today in professing Christendom there are many Saul's sacrifices brought to the altar and many enthusiastic drivers of Philistine oxcarts are on the road to Jerusalem; every denomination in Christendom is afflicted with these things. "But let every man take heed how he buildeth thereupon, for other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ. Now if any man build upon this foundation gold, silver, precious stones, wood, hay, stubble; every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. If any man's work abide which he hath built thereupon, he shall receive a reward. If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss (i. e. of his reward for service): but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire (1 Cor. 3:10-15). Saved as Job says "with the skin of the teeth," saved but unrewarded for service because the service was in self-will and choosing. Alas there is a lot of so called religious activity and Christian service in which Christian professors are spending a great deal of zeal and energy but which service will go up in smoke because God never asked it of his people, or it is in form and manner out of harmony with his revealed will in his inspired Word or the leading of his Spirit. We hear much today of "pep," "punch," "system," "efficiency" and there is much merit in these slogans but why is it that after much strenuous application of these ideas, churches and individuals are still impotent in the things of power and victory that belong to the kingdom of God. It is evident in this, that we fail to recognize deeply the distinctions that mark the secular from the spiritual and fail in knowledge in practice as well as profession that Jesus Christ is the absolute Lord and Master of our service, the head of all things in the church and that the Holy Spirit is the sovereign agency of his power and no project however beautiful or plausible can prosper without an embodiment of these facts as the very heart and soul of the enterprise. The apostle Paul exemplifies this truth in his service (Acts 16:6-10). "Now when they had gone throughout Phrygia and the region of Galatia, and were FORBIDDEN OF THE HOLY GHOST TO PREACH THE WORD in Asia, after they were come to Mysia they ASSAYED to go into Bithynia: but THE SPIRIT SUFFERED THEM NOT. And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, saying, Come over into Macedonia and help us. . . immediately we endeavored to go into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the LORD HAD CALLED US TO PREACH THE GOSPEL UNTO THEM." This much in application of the principle to what we commonly call religious or Christian service. But is it not true that our common idea of Christian service is too much confined to the sphere of public worship, church activity, etc? "For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge . . . that he died for all that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves but unto him which died for them and rose again" (2 Cor. 5:14, 15). This text tells me that Christian service is as extensive as life in all its manifold issues and intricate details; in other words from the same apostle, "whatsoever ye do in word and deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus and whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (Col. 3:17; 1 Cor. 10:31). Therefore absolutely every activity of the regenerated life is looked upon by our Lord as an act of service to him and if there is anything in our every day experience that cannot be so constructed by him it has no legitimate place or part in our life. This it seems to me sanctifies and glorifies the common things as well as the great things of life far above our usual conception of piety and lifts them at once out of the sphere of the secular into the heavenly, and really to the Christian there is no secular sphere, all things to him have a vital spiritual setting in view of his redemption call. It is said of Stonewall Jackson that he remarked to a friend, "I never as much as lift a cup of water to my lips without a thought of praise or worship to the Father." So it matters not what may be the issue in life: performing our daily toil; choosing life's calling to merchandise, medicine, law or the mechanical trades or whatever; choosing a bride or a husband; selling or buying a home; changing our place of residence; entering college; investing our money, or any other affairs or detail of life, JESUS CHRIST IS MASTER OF OUR SERVICE, THE HOLY SPIRIT THE SOVEREIGN AGENCY OF HIS COUNSEL AND POWER IN OUR TEMPORAL AS WELL AS OUR SPIRITUAL SERVICE. Nothing is left of SELF-WILL and HUMAN JUDGMENT alone. HE RESERVES THE RIGHT TO DETERMINE THE "WHAT, WHEN, WHERE AND HOW OF OUR ENTIRE SERVICE AND EXPERIENCE, TEMPORAL OR SPIRITUAL. BEST or SECOND BEST, which will we have?"

II. The Sovereignty of the Spirit in Distribution of Spiritual Gifts for Service.

The sovereignty of the Spirit over the Christian life-service is first manifest in the distribution and bestowal of spiritual gifts of enabling and ability and power. There is no such thing in God's economy, in the church, as a truly new-born life without any ability or task, with and in which to serve his Redeemer. "But unto EVERY ONE OF US IS GIVEN GRACE ACCORDING TO THE MEASURE OF THE GIFT OF CHRIST. . . THE SELFSAME SPIRIT DIVIDING TO EVERY MAN SEVERALLY AS HE (GOD) WILL. God never saved a soul whom he did not expect to be and do something for him and with the expectation bestowed the ability to do it and the power in proportion as the gift is accepted, used and developed to his glory. There is no such thing as a "dummy director," "silent partner," "figurehead," a "vote by proxy," or service "by substitute," in the church of Christ. Every saved soul is "conscripted, registered, drafted, mustered in, mobilized" for service or placed on the SLACKER LIST in the divine records.

The Lord's distribution of gifts for service is very often in contradiction to our natural judgments and estimates. We aspire to have the brilliant, the popular, the rich, the spectacular, the naturally talented to come into the church with less thought of their salvation and absolute conversion than of the supposition that they "would make such fine members or raise the standard of prestige and popularity for our church in this community," forgetting the apostolic declaration, "For ye see your calling brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God has chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world and things that are despised, hath God chosen. . . that no flesh should glory in his presence (1 Cor. 1:26-29). Moses "mighty in words and in deeds" and schooled and skilled in "all the wisdom of Egypt," the coming man, the rising star in the court of Pharaoh, essayed to deliver his brethren and failed in spite of all his natural brilliance and ability. He lacked just forty years of training. Mighty in words and deeds now in the estimate of the Egyptian court, but forty years later he says to God, "I can't do it, I can't talk." But when fully surrendered God consecrated, sanctified all his natural ability and gave him a lot more of a new sort and made him do and talk in the Lord's might. Gideon an obscure man of an obscure family was called to a great service; Ehud a left handed assassin; Shamgar, a backwoodsman with an ox-goad; Samson a long haired Nazarite; John the Baptist, a desert recluse and hermit; Peter, a cursing fisherman; the sons of Zebedee (Sons of Thunder), selfish, fanatical aspirants to power; Paul, a brilliant scholar and philosopher, but a murderous bigot and legalist; such were the men and their natural endowments, with whom God upheaved the moral world and blazed new trails of destiny for peoples of the earth. Naturally what would we have seen in these men that could induce us to have sanctioned their appointment to the great service where unto God called them. Natural talents they had in a greater or less degree but their disqualifications were even greater. With all due allowance for the value of natural gifts and allowing no premium upon ignorance or mediocrity, these men from the least to the greatest were what they were in God's service not because of what they were but because of what they received of God in addition to what they had. No one will question that an individual of splendid natural qualifications when fully surrendered to God can be of more use to God than the same person without such qualifications. When God wanted a man for the most stupendous task of the age he chose Paul, the most brilliantly endowed man of the age in things directly bearing upon the project. While this is true such a type of man may be outstripped in certain lines of service by the other type, i. e., one who has meager natural talent but whom God has endued and endowed with tremendous spiritual gifts and enableings.

It is not wise or just to laud or deprecate either type of the Lord's servants by comparison but attribute all to the sovereign dispensation and ministration of the Spirit for without this neither would be of any use in God's program.

In some respects our Christian teaching and discipline in church, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, etc., has traveled in the same rut, with the same blunder as our system of secular education of the recent decades; i. e., attempting to run all learners and workers through the same mold in preparation for life's work without due allowance for the individuality and the divine call. In a secular way there are certainly some fundamental elements of culture that every student needs for life's service but sooner or later the process must be adapted to the individual. Educators are slowly correcting this in secular training and the church must apply the principle to the working details of Christian activity, because while there are some things in Christian service that are expected and demanded of all Christians, God has set many individuals for many different kinds of service and there must be latitude and adaptation to allow the development of the divine plan. This is the working principle revealed to the church 1900 years ago and will never change. I can make no better comment just here than to add the exact Scripture, "Now concerning spiritual gifts, brethren, I would not have you ignorant. . . Now there are diversities of gifts but the same Spirit. And there are differences of administrations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. But the manifestation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal. For to one is given by the Spirit the same Spirit; to another faith by the same Spirit; to another word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the gifts of healing by the same Spirit; to another the working of miracles; to another prophecy; to another discerning of spirits; to another divers kinds of tongues; to another interpretations of tongues; but all these worketh that one and self-same Spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will. And God hath set some in the church, first apostles, secondarily prophets, thirdly teachers, after that miracles, then gifts of healing, helps, governments, diversities of tongues. Are all apostles? Are all prophets? Are all teachers? Are all workers of miracles? Have all the gifts of healing? Do all speak with tongues? Do all interpret (1 Cor. 12:1; 4:11, 28-30)?"

In the light of this text it is safe to say that wherever God ordains that a local church shall be established, if the members are in all other particulars right with God, he will call unto their number by his ordained processes those who being endowed and ended by the Spirit will make a complete working body to advance his cause in the manner and degree he purposes in that community. You will note that in these enabling gifts of the Spirit not an element or qualification is lacking, for an ideal working body, in the distribution of gifts for service.

If a company of Christian professors are not growing, not prospering or ceases to perpetuate themselves as a Christian witness in the community we may look for one of two reasons or both combined, e. g., either the church is not right with God in some vital particular or in the sovereign judgment of the Spirit its testimony is finished in that field. In the first case it is futile to "pray the Lord of the harvest to send laborers into the field" until the church, as it is, gets right and in the second we can only accept without complaint the dispensation of Divine decisions. I believe without exception our dead and dying or discontinued churches can find the secret of their present state in these two reasons noted.

III. In the Exercise of Spiritual Gifts There Is Individual Responsibility and Co-operative Interdependence.

The very nature of the gifts and the fact of their distribution, one or more to each and not all to all precludes a self-centered salvation and selfish service. Salvation from sin and death is a tremendous fact to the individual but salvations UNTO SERVICE is an infinitely greater fact from God's viewpoint, the biggest end of his project to him. We are saved for service as individuals but the objective is not individual except in a secondary way. The redemption plan and the church as its propagandist are greater in their requirements and better in their achievements than any individual in it. Nevertheless no individual Christian from the least to the greatest can neglect or refuse to serve according to his ability or "lay down on the job" without loss not only to himself but to the church as a local body and as a brotherhood. This very thing is crippling many churches today. The same attitude and lethargy on the part of its stockholders or directors would send the biggest industrial corporation to the wall in six months. Only an infinite mercy and Divine impulse saves many churches from the same calamity and the marvel is that they last as long as they do.

The Christian service in exercise of our gifts is also an interdependent and co-operative service and the service or neglect of each acts or reacts upon the interest of all. The service of each and all makes the composite task of the church a victorious endeavor while the failure of individuals makes the task more difficult or impossible. Of course institutionally and collectively as the body of Christ, the church is going through to victory but who is going through with it is the sad question. All are needed, there is a place, a service, a part for all and each, none can be spared. This eliminates the "worms-of-the-dust" good-for-nothing, no talent theory and false humility of some modest souls and precludes the "big I and little you" possibilities of more largely gifted lives. Let the Word itself finish the argument. The apostle using the figure of the human body says, "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ for by one spirit we are all baptized into one body, (the church), whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have all been made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member but many. If the foot shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say to the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members which seem to be more feeble are necessary. . . And whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it; or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ and members in particular (1 Cor. 12:12-22, 26, 27).

IV. The Spirit's Sovereignty in Distributing to the Churches God's Gifted Men.

If we have overlooked the serious significance of the Spirit's mastery over individual service it is equally deplorable that the Spirit is often denied the absolute supremacy in distributing God's Spirit-called Spirit-endowed and Spirit-endued men unto the church. "And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of ministering, for the edifying of the body of Christ (Eph. 4:11, 12). In 1 Corinthians 12 the apostle deals with the bestowal of specific gifts of service upon individuals but in the text just quoted, it is a question of distributing the gifted ones to the churches where they are needed according to the Divine wisdom. Too frequently churches are not aspiring to have the Divine choice and judgment as to who shall serve them as pastor, evangelists, etc., but like Israel of old, in Saul, they have an ideal for a leader that is wholly or in a large part after their own judgment, desire, whim, or prejudice. One needs only to recall the comments of various communities and congregations and some official boards of various denominations, to realize how superficial, vain and unscriptural are the standards by which men and leaders are chosen to serve in various capacities of Christian activity. Not only are churches unscriptural and unspiritual in these ideals but also selfish and rebellious in their choices. God and the Spirit know what each church needs and would gladly send them the workers accordingly if they would seriously consult him and ask for his choice and be willing to abide by it when given. Some need an evangelist, some a pastor and teacher, some a prophet, etc., but often we do not want the choice which God knows is best and persist in cutting off the prospects of progress and victory because we won't receive God's man but choose according to our own vain standards. Many a pastor or evangelist has been forestalled, the Lord's work "blocked," "tied up," because some group or the whole church would not receive God's man or his testimony or having received

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Our Divine Teacher. By M. Florence Wineland

OUR SCRIPTURE

Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world (Matt. 28; 19, 20). And it came to pass that as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray as John also taught his disciples (Luke 11:1). For he taught them as one having authority and not as the scribes (Matt. 7:29). Then shall ye begin to say, We have eaten and drunk in thy presence and thou hast taught in our streets (Luke 13:26). And seeing the multitude he went up into a mountain; and when he was set his disciples came unto him; And he opened his mouth and taught them (Matt. 5:12). And Jesus went about all Galilee teaching in their synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases among the people (Matt. 4:23).

OUR MEDITATION

Jesus, our divine teacher, gave us the example of a true teacher nearly two thousand years ago; his principles and methods of instruction were simple, natural and spontaneous. Our modern times find educators endeavoring to give us true pedagogy by laborious, experimental methods, but it is satisfying to know that study of psychology and the science of education are recognizing the principles of teaching that agree with those used by Jesus.

Jesus' teaching was different from much of the teaching of today. He spoke because he had a message to give whether it be in the temple, the streets, the home or by the seaside. He was always ready to teach whenever the pupil appeared.

Thirty years were spent in preparation for his task. He knew the Old Testament scriptures, having spent time in study at home and at the synagogue. His residence in Nazareth brought to him the beauties from the book of nature. The mountains, the plains, and a thousand feet below, the sea, these and many other fascinating and beautiful spots there were with which he was familiar. Jesus also knew God, his constant communion with him in prayer brought to him some of the real experience of his life. No wonder the people said he spoke as one having authority and not as the scribes.

His working and associating with men gave him a knowledge of men. He knew how to approach the humblest as well as the wise men of the synagogue. His trip to and from the feast at Jerusalem gave to him a wide acquaintance with men in all walks of life.

Jesus was a teacher whose example others could follow. No one can be a great teacher, who cannot live his message. And he was a living example of faith, love and truth. This is the miracle of Jesus and the source of his power.

The parables taught by Jesus were always of the simplest kind, the most common things of human experience were used to illustrate spiritual truth. When he taught a new conception of the kingdom he defined the "Kingdom of God" and illustrated his meaning by the leaven, the grain of mustard, the pearl, the virgins, the sheep and the goats, etc.; thus following the law of teaching from the simple to the complex, from the concrete to the abstract, known to the related unknown, so relating the men to the old that it becomes intelligible.

In his teaching the will was appealed to instead of the intellect. Jesus asked first that things be done and in the doing they will be known. "Follow me," "Go and do thou likewise" is the method of Jesus.

Most teachers teach but words, but Jesus taught obedience, action, service, in short, "right living." He never used his superior human powers to make beautiful sayings or win applause for himself. All his efforts were to get a response to the will, to direct conduct, to form character—to live in harmony with God. Obey God and you will know him. Live right and doubts will disappear. Serve humanity in harmony with God's will and the mysteries of the kingdom will be revealed. He lived the life of God on earth and taught others to live that life.

Jesus had no time to listen to compliments and no time to give fine sayings and laws. He had only one thought: How can I get this new pupil to live right. He made his ideas so clear that men should do right and live right that men came to know right.

May we follow our teacher as we teach our congregations, our Sunday school classes and the individuals whose lives we touch daily.

OUR PRAYER

Dear Lord, give us hearts that are receptive to thy teaching. Help us as we study thy method to forget self, and so relate ourselves to thee, that our teaching will receive the stamp of thy approval. Remember, dear Lord, those who have been commissioned to teach from the pulpit, thy sacred Word; give them a vision of thee and a love for humanity as they teach thy word. Grant that thy children everywhere may teach thy ways by living wholly for thee. In his name, Amen.

him unexpectedly refuse to co-operate and let God do the work that must be done if ever they would grow and succeed. Other churches are ever aspiring to a monopoly of the "big guns" and the places equally deserving or more needy though less famous and popular do not get the service they deserve or need. There is no warrant or precedent in apostolic church life or scripture testimony, for tying ministers exclusively by contract or promise to one place of service without liberty to minister to the Lord's children elsewhere if the Spirit so directs. I say this in view of the fact that the minister is first of all called to serve the church universal and whatever his local service or responsibility, he has the right and the duty to devote time as the Lord directs to her interests beyond his local field and under the direction of the Spirit this will always redound to the blessing of the local field. On the other hand this does not excuse or warrant the unscrupulous action of ministers who break their contracts and pledges with congregations without mutual agreement and consideration. Because there is not enough of submission to the when, where, what and how of the Spirit's dictation; there is too much self-choosing of our fields of service for greener pastures, finer church facilities, larger crowds and popular pulpits and fairer prospects while the worthy and needy fields are left without help. Those who are qualified to observe, I think will admit that these conditions on the part of churches and ministers constitute at least one significant cause for so many pastorless churches and dearth of evangelists, even in our own fraternity and for the smaller fraternity it spells increasing disaster and distress unless churches and ministry soon get nearer, even solidly upon the working basis of the Lord's program in these vital issues.

This is a day of stunts and thrills, tonics, elixirs and hypodermic injections by which the churches are trying to urge and forge ahead, to keep up life and vitality, whereas what we need most of all is to humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God and submit to the sovereign dispensations and control of the Lord's will and counsel, clean out the choked channels and allow the electric current of spiritual force and power to flow freely, that instead of having to use a block-and-tackle and some artificial engine the Lord may choose to clothe his church with power, so in the words the Chinaman said about the streetcar, it will be "no pushee, no pullee, but go like blazes allee samee" for the church.

Finally what is the ultimate aim in our mutual service in exercise of our divinely imposed gifts and callings? Read in full the three chapters, 1 Corinthians 12, 13, 14, as the most illuminating section of scripture on this subject. The first we have dealt with. The 13th chapter shows that all this service must be in love or it is useless and vain. The 14th shows that it must be in harmony tolerance, equality of fellowship, decent order, free from fanaticism. It is the application of chapter 13 to the working details of church activity and worship. But for the mission of the ultimate aim of it all, no finer conclusion to this study can be made than that thrilling appeal for a faithful, unceasing, unselfish, large-souled, individual and mutual service for the sake of the church universal, which Paul wrote to the church at Ephesus (Eph. 4:11-16).

But unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. . . And he gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of ministering, for the edifying of the body of Christ: till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ: that we be henceforth no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of man, and cunning craftiness, whereby they lie in wait to deceive; but speaking the truth in love, may grow up unto him in all things, who is the head, even Christ: from whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love.

The Call from Europe's Childhood

The children of war-ravaged Europe are representing one of the gravest post-war problems. A church leader of international reputation from Switzerland writes the following to Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association: "The great problem in reconstruction is not the rebuilding of houses and towns, the replanting of shell-ploughed fields, the manufacturing of tools and machines, important as all this no doubt is. Nobody has been injured more, physically, morally, spiritually than the children and young people. I have made a special study of the effects of the war upon child life in the various European countries and the results of my observations are alarming. We must do more than we ever thought was needed for the coming generation."

Reference is then made to the World's Sunday School Convention, which will be held in Tokyo in October 1920, and the expert observer states "The coming Convention might, in my opinion, emphasize especially two points: (1) The needs of childhood in view of the present situation, and (2) The work of reconciliation. The spiritual conception of the coming generation will remain limited unless we bring the leaders of today to a point where they can view the conflict of yesterday from a higher point of view and gain a better conception of their own attitude and their mutual relations in the light of the Cross of Christ. The coming Convention is to my mind one of the outstanding opportunities for Christianity to do a really great and constructive work."

The Sunday school situation in Germany is pathetic indeed, and is clearly given in a statement made by one of the most active Sunday school leaders of Germany. "Our Sunday school work has suffered greatly during the war for many reasons. Our statistics show a great decrease in teachers and pupils. Through the revolution in our country the socialists have thrown over all of our good plans which were based upon religious instruction. Now we find quite a new situation. The public schools will to a great extent remove religious instruction quite out of their plans. Therefore all religious people, I hope, will learn to lay more stress upon Sunday school work in general. How the former state church will develop it is hard to tell at present. Many plans are discussed, but nobody knows what will be the result. Circumstances are altering continually and we fear that worse revolutions are still coming. All the free churches are not touched by separation of Church and State and they will take up Sunday school work with more energy than ever, for they see in Sunday school work now one of the chief means to fight against the coming heathenism in our country."

The World's Sunday School Association will do all in its power to help re-establish the Sunday schools on the Continent of Europe.

I can not always know and understand the Master's rule; I can not always do the tasks he gives in life's hard school; But I am learning, with his help, to solve them one by one. And, when I can not understand, to say: "Thy will be done."

SECRETARY

The First Call to Patriotism. By A. E. Whitted

These are months of enlistment. If we gain the goals set for 1920 we must not put the matter off until the "20" is here, but must begin now. This Army of Patriotic Service is needed now in these days of remaking even more than it was in the days of devastation. The principles of righteousness are at stake and the church if she would keep her place must act now. I can almost hear you saying, from the east, the west, the north and the south, We are ready. All right then, get busy in your endeavors to make the vision of the world's need plain and the people of God will rally every one.

The United Society has got out some leaflets that will be of great help to you in helping you push in this enlistment and Loyalty campaign. The one that is perhaps the most helpful is the one entitled "The Challenge." It contains the points of the campaign as set forth in Dr. Clark's address, with other matters of interest. You can secure it from the United Society for 3c, or $2.00 per hundred. It's time we were investing in things that will aid in promoting the Kingdom.

Now, fellow-Endeavorers, remember it's time to push. Remember that October 12 is Good-Citizenship Sunday and that you are to plan to make that a banner day for Endeavor, and listen, if you have a good time and succeed in enlisting some boys and girls in this great army let your National Superintendent know about it. It will do him good and he will thereby be able to check you all up. I'm thanking you now.

A Protest.

By J. A. Garber

As General Director and Publicity Agent of the Four Year Program Committee, Dr. Bame, on page three of the last Evangelist, took occasion to review the Program accomplishments as disclosed in the reports of the late General Conference. His observations were keen if not always discriminating. They, doubtless, were made for the purpose of stinging all to greater activity looking toward the attainment of all goals. A worthy sense of responsibility, befitting his most responsible position, would make him jealous for the largest possible achievements. With this explanation, designed to forestall misunderstanding, and without seeming to apologize for the standing of Christian Endeavor, we wish to register a protest which we trust will be read coextensively with the curt dub "Tail Enders." While unpleasant facts force us to plead guilty to the charge we are unwilling to assume full responsibility for our standing. If we are "Tail Enders" it is largely because the Christian Endeavor Society has received the tail-end consideration and support of churches and preachers. Honest now! And is it fair? The Society, as a rule, has enrolled the youngest and most immature of the membership, the children and youth of the church; and yet, these persons in training are given passing attention or left free to work out their own development for good or ill. That is one answer, my esteemed brother, to your men outnumber the men on your church. In a church with a limited number of girls it is exceedingly difficult to have them support two organizations so similar in character. We cite these conditions not to criticize the Sisterhood, but merely to indicate a difficulty, growing out of the presence and activity of the two organizations, which has perplexed us, though unrecognized by others.

We Confess and Appeal

Another explanation of our poor standing is to be found in a blunder of our making. In formulating our Four Year Challenge we fell into a two-fold miscalculation: First the unwisdom of attempting to disclose our achievements through a column of figures and second the mistake of basing those figures on the unreliable statistics of 1915 (much like church statistics). But in spite of these blunders the Challenge has served a good purpose and many societies have made commendable gains, not all of which have been indicated in Four Year Program reports. And letting bygones be bygones, we are going to press forward and attain goals in a larger way. Aren't we, field workers, society presidents, fellow workers? Come on and let us give the lie to that ugly expression "Tail Enders." Make no provision for the "hole in the day," against which Dr. Bame warns us. Plan and conduct your prayer meeting for the group, not a lecture hour or preaching service for the crowd (An instructive fact which some overlook in making unfair comparisons) that it will be as largely attended and enthusiastically received as the church prayer meeting. Measured by both tests on the basis of the relative numbers to draw from in each instance, some of our young people have not "allowed the old folks to put it over them," nor need any of us during this Victory Year. Begin with the Good Citizenship meeting announced by Superintendent Whitted. Follow it up with the meeting about the pledge when you may enroll a number of new members. Remember this is the month of enlistment and enlargement.

Ashland, Ohio.

Question of Questions

But more is to be said. Aside from indifference and neglect, there has been a studied effort on the part of some to crush Christian Endeavor. They have made bold to say that the Society is a superfluous adjunct to the church, an appendix and the sooner cut out, the better. Imagine the discouraging and disheartening influence of such thinking and teaching on the part of those from whom young Endeavorers have a perfect right to expect inspiring counsel and wise direction. The resistance of this devitalizing influence has consumed not a little of the energy, about which you ask and the fight for an existence has required much of the "pep," for which you give us credit. Another difficulty confronting us (And we mention it with extreme reluctance for fear of being misunderstood) was the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. The founders and promoters of this organization never intended that it should become an obstacle to Christian Endeavor, but it has inevitably. Wherever a Sisterhood has been organized in a church our next statistical report showed a shrinkage in membership and offerings. This decrease, obviously enough, was due to the enrollment of the older girls in the Sisterhood and encouraging them to give through it to the support of the same mission field—Kentucky. The girls, it is needless to remark, outnumber the boys in our Society for the same reason that the wo-

The conduct towards others that Jesus here condemns is that unlovely spirit which views unfavorably the character and conduct of others, manifesting itself often in rash, unjust judgments upon them. If we are not ruled by the censorious spirit we may judge the character of others. "By their fruits" we are to know others both for their good and ours. The law of judging is sure. "With what measure ye mete" and its penalty is plainly evident in the blindness and hypocrisy which peers over one's own beam to spy out another's mote.

MISSIONS

Answering God's Call

To sever relationship with an industrial institution such as the National Cash Register Company, with which your humble servant has been identified for about thirteen years, and turn one's attention exclusively to religious work, is indeed a radical change. But when the Lord calls, as we are positive he did, what right have I not to heed the call. It might have meant woe unto me.

We want to assure our dear brethren and sisters, in the entire brotherhood, that our heart will be in the work and most earnest effort will be made to serve you in the capacity of General Missionary Secretary (Home and foreign).

We are indeed very much encouraged in the beginning of our career to have so many of our laymen, pastors and our college officials pledge their hearty co-operation during this "Victory Year" to make it a great year for missions. We are confident that if we have the co-operation of the entire brotherhood we must succeed, for the work is the Lord's and it cannot fail.

We trust there will be patience exercised by all especially until we are more thoroughly acquainted with our work.

We desire at all times constructive criticism and shall be pleased to have you write us often; and do not forget to call at our office when in Dayton.

The time for the big drive for Home Missions is rapidly approaching and we trust there will not be one church which will fail in reaching the goal of 35 cents per member and that many churches will even do much more. Why should we not give $1.00 per member—that seems very small when we consider the need. Won't our tithers please set aside a nice amount for this offering so we will reach the goal and more?

Let us remember that the message of the Gospel must be proclaimed to the world if righteousness is to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and that the crown to be awarded to God's faithful people for services rendered, or money expended for missions, will surely be worth more to us than we can now comprehend.

Just a few words to our beloved missionary saints, both Home and Foreign.

Our earnest desire shall be to make your labor in the Lord's vineyard more pleasant, if possible, and above all please our dear Father in heaven in all our dealings with you. May the Lord bless you richly.

We covet the prayers and co-operation of God's faithful ones and hope that there will be abundant reasons for rejoicing when we meet next year at dear old Winona and hear the reports of our year's work in all the victorious activities of our church.

MAY IT REALLY BE A VICTORY YEAR.

The Electric Light Plant Fund

$650.00 will be needed in October to pay for the Electric Light Plant for Riverside. Lee F. Myer of Flora, Indiana sends $10.00 for this fund. This is a good beginning and we are hoping that the full amount will come in quickly. Let every reader act at once thus helping to send the light to light up Riverside every night. Send all money for this fund to Wm. A. Gearhart, Dayton, Ohio.

Our New Secretary

All Home Mission money, whether for Kentucky missions or for the General Home work should be sent to our new "Missionary Secretary, Brother Wm. A. Gearhart, Dayton, Ohio. No street address will be necessary. Brother Gearhart is now ready to give his entire time to this work and we predict that it will mean much in the work of missions in the Brethren church during the coming year. Peru, Indiana.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

MANTECA, CALIFORNIA

Just a few words from our field to let you know that the Lord is with us and is giving us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Since taking up the work here for full time the Lord has been pleased to add to our number four souls. Among them was my own little son Leland, who was prompted by the Holy Spirit to give himself to the One who had bought him with his own precious blood. It was at the Long Beach conference that he accepted definitely his Savior, and was buried in baptism by Brother L. S. Bauman. It was also the writer's pleasure to baptize and receive into the Manteca Brethren church Mr. George Aksland, brother to our Sister Cora Aksland who is at the present time in Ashland College preparing herself for any work to which her Lord may be pleased to send her. George had seen some of that hard fighting in the Argonne Forest, having been wounded quite severely, and he saved his life for the service which he will now be able to render in helping to build up the work in Manteca. We are always glad to note the real appreciation on the part of those who have been spared from dangers in which many of their fellows met death and injury. Another brother 76 years old was also baptized and one of the daughters of one of our families, Miss Mae Elliott, was also received into our number after having been baptized with others. We thank God and take heart in the midst of many trying circumstances and press forward to the prize before us. We will appreciate the interest of any of you in our work here. We took charge here on the first of April and we are confident that the Lord is using us every day to extend the borders of his church here.

We had a blessed love feast and those present were thankful for the privilege of attending the first meeting of this nature given by the brethren of Manteca. How our Master cemented our hearts together in that service. We shall rejoice for the next time to come quickly.

We are also glad to report that the Lord has made selection among some more of our young people who are waiting for the ordinances to make it possible for them to go to school and prepare for definite testimony for Christ and his saving grace. We thank God that as he calls there are always those who will say to him, "Here am I, send me."

We are interested in the goals of the Four Year Program. As we check up from time to time we see what progress we are making. Our next goal is the Brethren Evangelist in every home.

I am thankful also to report the recent baptism of Miss Alice Stuecky, who came about three hundred miles to be baptized. The service was very impressive as all such are when those concerned show such a great willingness. Her case shows the beauty of holiness working out because of a godly mother's teaching in the home and its later development in her child. God give us homes where Jesus RULES supreme in the body, soul and spirit.

We had a little season of refreshing when our Brother Elwood P. Lyon of Pasadena stopped with us for about ten days. The meeting automatically swung into a union meeting and the Methodist church was used which was pretty well filled every night. The well known male quartette from the Bible Institute of Los Angeles was with us part of the time and added considerably to the interest and the streets were used for several meetings when a large number of people who never go to church had the gospel sung and preached to them. May God bless his word that it shall accomplish that whereunto he has sent it.

We will write again some other time so will close for this time. We rejoice at the news of the splendid General Conference at Winona this year. God willing we will see you there next year.

J. WESLEY PLATT, Pastor.

BRYAN, OHIO

Several months have passed since a report from this place has been given in the columns of this paper. We must of necessity keep on the move whether we accomplish much or little. Immediately upon our return from National Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana, Brother Beachler came on the field in the interest of college endowment. It is needless to say, that Beachler knows how to raise money for Ashland College. For one whole week we labored together in the interest of what we believe the greatest institution of the Brethren church. Night after night he preached the Word of God without fear or favor, trying to interest people in the furtherance of the kingdom of God. I am sure that his work here was very helpful in the building up of the local congregation and making the work of the pastor easier for the coming year. The only regret we have is, that our fall campaign for souls was not planned to start immediately after he closed his campaign here at this place. On last Sunday evening at the close of his inspiring message an invitation was given and one soul came forward and confessed for the first time Jesus as his Lord and Savior. May I say a word to the pastors and churches that are to be canvassed during this fall and winter that you will do well to plan for your campaign for souls immediately after his visit with you. His work here is a matter of history and we feel that the Lord will richly bless all who gave in the interest of Ashland College. May God richly bless and use Brother Beachler for the great work he has yet to do.

This congregation has kept in line with all the endeavors of the general church for larger accomplishments. We have failed in reaching a few of our goals. We lost two this year that we won last year. The cause for this I think can be attributed to the "flu" which closed our work down for four weeks. We hope to gain those two back this coming year and make a strong effort to reach the rest. We have nothing large of which to boast, but we are on the job laying plans. The Sunday school seeks to arouse a deeper interest in her work. This month of September is being used as rally month and the last Sunday of the month will be Rally Day. At this service we hope to have the largest attendance we have ever had.

The Women's Missionary Society is pushing forward with increased interest and attendance. Something different each month at their meetings, and something good, too, has resulted in increased interest. A new corps of officers have been elected and it is hoped that next year will be even better than the year just closed.

The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha has a live bunch of girls who are always trying to make each meeting better than the preceding one. These girls are thinking very strongly of some plan whereby they may lay by a fund so that by the next National Conference they may all be able to attend and enjoy the conference together. It is only just and due the Women's Missionary Society and the S. M. M., to say they responded very nobly to the call of college endowment.

We are now directing our attention to our winter campaign for souls. The pastor has been given a call for another year with an increase in salary, which is so badly needed in these days of high prices. It is our plan to so labor together that the kingdom of God may be built up and made stronger during the year that is before us than ever before. We covet the prayers of the entire brotherhood as we start on our fourth year with these people.

SALEM, OHIO, CHURCH

When about a year ago, the Valley Circuit churches were unable to secure a pastor, the Salem people, hungering as they said, for some spiritual food, asked the writer to come out and preach for them. The first visit not proving fatal to either of us, I was asked to return every other Sunday morning until other arrangements might be made. I felt some hesitancy in accepting the responsibility because of my little time to put on the work. But a few visits, after the "flu" vacations, soon dispelled my doubts. I gave them very little of my time, but those moments were blessed. I tried to preach the Word as best I could, and the people responded nobly. The membership is not large, and is quite widely scattered, but their faithfulness deserves commendation. In the past year has been at all successful I am willing to give the loyal members and God the credit.

We held a splendid love feast at which we had seventy-five percent of the membership present. With us was our evangelist, Wm. C. Teeter, and others from the Dayton church.

On one visit we had with us a lady formerly of the "mother church," who lived twenty miles away; two weeks hence she returned and united with us by relation. I feel there must have been something there that made her feel welcome. Another lady came to us from a different church and awaits baptism.

However, the most encouraging thing I have to say is this: When old Bear Creek withdrew from the circuit, our good deacon, Brother Wilson King, said, "I'm sorry," because he felt Salem and Miamisburg were doomed. But God stepped in and grabbed up all the props, crutches, life preservers and what not these folks thought they really needed, and sent King and his friends to Winona to secure a pastor for themselves on full time. And back they came, high and haughty with James Cook along. When I first began at Salem I was congratulating myself on the flexibility of my contract, but lo, the worm turned, and scarcely before I knew what was going on I was out of a "job." "Blessed are those who are persecuted," etc. Last Sunday Brother Cook was greeted with a large Sunday school and a larger audience to hear his first sermon.

And so at the year's end we come not to "bury" Salem, but to "honor" her. I confidently expect a fruitful year awaits Brother Cook; and Cook says he is going to work his best to keep the rest of them busy. God will add his blessing.

M. M. HOOVER.

FALLS CITY

I note by the Evangelist that Church news are scarce; I can appreciate how that comes about. This task is usually left with the pastor and he finds himself so overwhelmed with work at this season of the year that it is almost impossible to write church news. We returned from Conference after a month's absence, to find our work passing through a crisis. This was true because of the moving out of the Mathers family. Seldom if ever is a family more closely affiliated with a church organization than this good family with our church. Dr. Mathers was superintendent of the Sunday school for many years and leader of the singing at all our services (We had no choir). The children were identified with the Sunday school as pianist and teacher and Mrs. Mather was ready to help anywhere. They have gone to Lincoln, where the doctor can quickly build up a practice, and where the children have the benefit of the university for their higher education. In our long association with them we found them always putting service to their Master first. Their association with us will linger many a day, a pleasant memory. And we all wish them a successful experience in their new home.

A business meeting has been held and our work reorganized completely. This has placed upon the shoulders of new people responsibilities, that I believe will work out to the good of each individual and the church as well. There is a determination among the people such as I have not seen during my pastorate through the years.

Two new families have been added to our membership by relation, strong people, who are already strengthening our work by their lives of service. Others we will receive from time to time. In fact prospects look better for substantial growth than at any time since I became pastor. Dr. Bell will be with us in January for a meeting and we are looking forward to some real building for God. By that time three and perhaps five of our families will be in California for the winter, but we will appreciate them all the more when they return. We have gotten used to this exodus from our church to California each winter, a number of our families go. They get good preaching out there and return no worse spiritually for their absence. They are the kind that work for the Lord wherever they are.

Personally I feel the responsibility for the year before me, we have already entered upon the second month of the sixth year with these people. If I had consulted myself I would have given the work over into the hands of another, yet the church was unanimous for our remaining, and the Lord seemed to close the way directly before us, so that I am persuaded that he will use us this year to his glory. The outside demands made upon a minister these days are a man's task, saying nothing about his own parish and family, especially is this true where one has been in a community for a number of years and has become a real part of its life.

Last Sunday was our Rally-Promotion Day and installation of officers and Teachers in the Sunday school. In the evening we held our fall communion service. I find this combination one that works out for the good of both services. We have practiced it here a number of years. Next Sunday I expect to have Brother Roy Brumbaugh and Sister Mae Smith with me for the morning service, they being here at the district conference to be held only a few miles away. If it works out as I have planned it will be a great pleasure to me for we were school children together, and grew up in the little Gravelton church, and are now giving our lives to the cause of our Christ.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

FROM LANARK, ILLINOIS

On September 28th, we held our Rally Day and we combined with it Harvest Day. We set the mark for an attendance at 400, a few more than our total enrollment. Another one of our objectives was to rally our forces for the fall and winter campaign; our evangelistic effort was staged for about the middle of October, and the Rally Day would be a good beginning for this. The decorations were to be from the products of our fields and gardens. It has been many years since we had harvest decorations, and many were looking forward to the Rally Day with anxiety and joy. The committee was equal to the occasion, and did a most excellent job, which met the hearty approval of all interested. For the decorations were pronounced the best for many years. So good were these decorations that it was considered best to open the church doors on Sunday afternoon from 3:00 to 5:00, which was done, and many of the people in our city took the opportunity to see the display.

We did not reach our goal in attendance for we had but 201 present. The reason was that at about 9:30 a. m., when people were supposed to start for Sunday school it began to rain, and rain hard too. We were at a loss to know what to do, but the people came and we proceeded to render the program.

Many of our people reside in the country and driving an auto in Illinois mud is not an easy job, and the average person does not go to church over muddy roads. We are very confident that with good roads and fine weather we would have easily passed the goal, 400. However, after it is all over and we think about it, we are sure it was worth while, and that we aim to not slacken our pace toward our real objective, the salvation of the unsaved. In the evening our pastor delivered a fine sermon suitable for the occasion.

THE OHIO STATE CONFERENCE TO BE AT CANTON, OHIO

Those who are contemplating attending the state conference at Canton, to be held November 4, 5, 6, 7, will wonder what accommodations are being provided for their comfort, so here is the information. Lodging and breakfast will be provided free for all. Dinner and supper will be served by the Women's Missionary Society of the First Reformed church of the city at their church. This church is eight blocks from our church—just a nice walk—and the rates will be a dollar a day. This is as cheap as like accommodations could be secured anywhere in the city, and will be satisfactory we are assured.

In the matter of railroad accommodations, Canton is on the main line of the P. F. W. & C. railroad, the W. & L. E., the B. & O., and has hourly trolley service from Cleveland and Akron. None should experience any trouble in making satisfactory connections to reach Canton.

For the accommodation of the local entertainment committee it will be a favor if each pastor will send word as early as possible of the probable number of delegates who will attend from his church. Send word to the undersigned. CANTON IS EXPECTING YOU. Are You Coming? DYOLL BELOTE, 1803 4th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

COLLEGE NOTES

The following clipping from the Ashland
Times-Gazette will give the items of importance concerning the college for this week:

Enrollment at Ashland College

The third week of the college year, sees the work of Ashland College going forward very satisfactorily. The enrollments are not complete in the departments for new names are being added every day. One of the most gratifying features of the collegiate enrollment is that it is almost exclusively of pure college rank. There are 24 new enrollments in the Freshman class, eight of whom are from the last year's graduating class of Ashland high school.

The enrollments in the Collegiate department are distributed as follows: Ohio, 49;
Indiana, 16; Pennsylvania, 11; Iowa, 6; Virginia, 5; Kansas, 5; California, 1; Nebraska, 1.

Department of Music

Totals in the Department of Music show 64 students registered there, with new enrollments coming in every day. This department as well as all other departments of the college, will show a substantial increase during the year.

Every room in the men's hall is occupied, the first time in years and but two rooms unoccupied in the women's hall and these are spoken for. Two men have been asked to room outside for want of available rooms.

Normal Department

The Normal Department shows a good enrollment. Since the new laws permit of the establishing of a County Normal, perhaps it would be possible for the County Board to designate Ashland College as its normal. This might prove helpful all around.

Excluding all duplicates in the above figures, the total enrollment in the college is 146. This figure will easily be raised to 200 within the year. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

Our Goal: 200,000; We Can and We Must

COLLEGE ENDOWMENT

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The ball continues to roll. The Fairhaven congregation has been canvassed and she has talked endowment to the tune of $2300. This result may yet be improved some. And thus the work is opening up very satisfactorily in Ohio. I feel very sure that Ohio will not disappoint either Ashland College or the general brotherhood.

Fairhaven is a county congregation. Being the nearest congregation in the entire brotherhood to Ashland, it is well known among the student preachers. During the years very many of our young men have served at this place. Brother B. F. Owens is the present pastor. He has served this people very acceptably for several years. I found him greatly loved by his people. This congregation is the church home of Professor Glenn Mason who is a member of the Board of College Trustees. From this place also there has come, from time to time, quite a number of students to the college. Consequently when I got to Fairhaven I found many of the people keenly alive and awake to the campaign for endowment.

We had a week of perfect weather for the canvass. And although it was one of the very busiest weeks of the entire year for the farmers still I preached to fine audiences each night of our stay. As for Fairhaven hospitality, it is second to none. Space forbids my mentioning the different homes in which I received the very kindest of treatment and the many others whose doors swung wide open to us but which I found it impossible to enter. I shall surely remember with much pleasure the Fairhaven people.

The red letter night of the week was when we had the college quartet with us. The selections rendered by the boys were greatly appreciated. I should like to have such a combination with me right along in my work.
A number of other Ashland folks came out during the week and this all helped. The canvass closed with a communion service. Unfortunately Brother Owens was called to Glenford for a funeral, leaving me in full charge of the affairs of the day. We had a great day all through. Dr. Jacobs and Professor A. C. Hendrickson were present for the communion and gave me most valuable assistance. It seemed to me to be an exceptionally helpful service and the talks from these brethren did us all much good. I covet for both the Fairhaven people and their pastor God's richest blessing. I should have added that Sister Owens sang for us several times and we enjoyed the part she contributed to the week.

The mercury now stands at a little better than $117,000.00. I believe Ohio will keep it moving right along. I am finding that our Ohio people have fully realized for some time that what they do for the cause of permanent endowment would be a matter of very general interest in the brotherhood. But I am also finding that Ohio folks are not only scares and nervous, but they are determined to do their whole part in this great enterprise. Ohio is the home of presidents and therefore will not fail.

Zion Hill next. WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Communion Notices

The First Church of Ashland, Ohio, will observe the communion service on the evening of October 26. Preparatory services during the preceding week, conducted by the minister and his associates of the local ministry. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may find it possible to share with us in these services, particularly parents who have children in the college.

J. A. GARBNER, Minister.

The congregation at Canton, Ohio, will observe the holy communion, with its concomitant services, on Sunday evening, October 19, at 7 o'clock. Brethren of like faith are cordially invited to be with us.

DIYOLL BELOTE, Pastor.

The fall communion services will be observed at Louisville, Ohio, First Brethren church, October 19. All of like precious faith are invited to worship with us.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

The regular semi-annual communion service of the Homerville Brethren church will be held on Saturday evening, October 18, 1919, at eight o'clock. All members please note; Neighboring brethren are also cordially invited to participate.

FRED C. VANATOR, Pastor.

Business Manager's Corner

OUR NEW HOME

After nearly two weeks' of hard labor by the entire working force of the Publishing House, including the Business Manager himself, and a couple of motor trucks with their complement of men, we have finally become sufficiently settled in our new quarters to get out this number of the Brethren Evangelist. While our plant is now again in operation it will be several weeks yet before we can get into real running order.

This moving of all the equipment of a publishing plant of no mean proportions has been a great experience. It is practically equivalent to an entire lifetime of ordinary housecleaning. Only in this way can our readers really appreciate what we have just passed through. But we are here, and we are mighty glad of it. No serious accident, either to workers or to machinery, occurred during the process, and for this we are grateful.

It has now been twenty-five years since The Brethren Publication Board began its work of publishing the literature of the Brethren church in Ashland with Brother A. D. Gnagey as editor. For fifteen years the printing plant was located in the basement of Ashland College. When new quarters were sought they were difficult to find, but at this point Sister Laura Slotter Williams, then residing in California, came to the rescue with an offer to furnish the money with which to erect a building for the work of the Brethren Publishing interests, upon an annuity plan. The Brethren Publishing Company was then organized and incorporated and the building the Company has been occupying for ten years was erected. The location was never really suitable for a publishing house, but the building served a good purpose and enabled the church to have a permanent location for its publishing interests until its growth and needs might require something different. Our business had entirely outgrown the old quarters and new quarters were secured in the splendid building recently purchased jointly by the Trustees of Ashland College and the Publishing Company. This places us right in the business district of the city of Ashland, and as the city has just entered upon an unprecedented era of prosperity the property is sure to increase in value as the years go by.

We were fortunate to be able to dispose of the old building to a good advantage in a few days after purchasing the new, and Sister Williams willingly gave her consent to have the money she had furnished invested in the new plant. The church is under great obligations to Sister Williams for the help she furnished in time of need.

It will be some months before we can hope to develop the business as we desire to do in our location, but we have invested in more than four thousand dollars worth of new equipment and we will soon be in a position to double the output of our plant. But in all our growth we must have the co-operation of the entire brotherhood, and especially must the pastors realize that their loyal boosting will be one of our greatest assets.

The Evangelist Honor Roll

For the last month we have been so busy with the plans and the actual work of our moving that we have given no attention to the campaign for placing the Evangelist into all the homes of the church, but the work of the campaign has gone on just the same, though at a slower pace than we want to see from now on until the conference of nineteen twenty.

The Elkhart church has sent in their list for the second year and Brother Wolford rejoices, even as we do, that the list is considerably larger than it was last year. Then only a few days ago we were most agreeably surprised to receive a list of subscriptions from the Buckeye City, Ohio, church that is an increase of FOUR HUNDRED FIFTY per cent over their former list, and which places the Buckeye City church on the HONOR ROLL with the many other enthusiastic churches that have "tasted and found it good."

Brother Glenn Peterson is pastor here and the list of subscriptions was accompanied by a check for the full amount to pay us until January first, 1921. This looks as though they mean business, but the list was sent in by Brother D. S. Workman, who has been a stand-by business man for the Brethren church for many years. We thank you brethren and we feel sure you will never regret the work it may have taken to accomplish this good for your local church as well as for the general publishing interests of the entire brotherhood.

We trust to be able to have many items of interest for this corner during the next year.

The Interchurch Movement

The church has been challenged many times during the last half decade, but there has been no greater challenge presented to it than is now held up to it by the unprecedented needs and unparalleled opportunities of the world today. No fractional part, but the whole church of Christ is facing this challenge; nor can any part of the great church of Christ meet this challenge alone. Exclusiveness and selfish endeavor is doomed to failure to meet the demands of the world at this hour. Every denomination has its particular part of the great task to perform, but every denomination must realize that it cannot do its part successfully and remain aloof and out of working relationship with the other organized bodies of the great church of Christ. Each denomination may well maintain its separate and distinct existence and prosecute vigorously a comprehensive campaign for extension, but it will find itself out of harmony with the great Founder of the church if its programs and ideals cause it to look upon every other church as an enemy or competitor, with whom to co-operate would be to its individual disadvantage. The day has come when to accomplish the tasks before the church, there must be a recognition of a greater purpose than to build up denominational strength; it must see the coming kingdom as its great aim and bend all energy to bringing it in. Denominational strength in almost every instance of faithful sincere effort to claim the world for Christ will result, but if it should not, then let the denomination go that the cause of Christ may be advanced, if that be necessary. The day is at hand when the Master of all men is seeking as never before to bring about the realization of his passionate prayer, "That they all may be one,"—and one, may we not say, in spirit and purpose, and not in manner of organization and method of worship. Hear what Dr. J. Campbell White said at Cleveland concerning the great Interchurch Movement:

A real united Protestantism, filled with the spirit of God, may undertake anything and a divided Protestantism with all our communions in separate compartments must stand with its hands palsied in the presence of the needs of the world today.

It seems to me that every movement of the past hundred years that has brought us into contact with each other and helped us to realize how much of the spirit of Christ the man of the other church has, had a real step forward toward this wonderful day. Sixty years ago the Young Men's Christian Association was organized on this Continent. It began to bring men together in Christian fellowship and service and I imagine that a very large proportion of us here today owe a great debt of gratitude to that organization as one of the great agencies that brought us into contact with our fellow Christians.

When one faces the organized evil of the world, it is a great strength to feel that a great many other people are facing that evil with him. When one faces the almost measureless needs of this world, it is a great encouragement to me to know that there are so many people through whom God would naturally operate in meeting that need if he could.

The Sunday School movement is another of those that has brought multitudes both of men and women of all churches together in a way to help them appreciate each other. Christian Endeavor movement has brought, I suppose, literally millions of young people into contact which have given them a greater idea of the amount of vital Christianity in the other person's religion.

The Foreign Missionary Movement itself, looked at in a broad way, has been one of the very mightiest agencies for bringing people together. I myself felt the power of it instantly when I got to India in 1893. The appalling chasm between Christianity and all non-Christian religions is so overwhelming that all the friends of Christ are drawn spontaneously and irresistibly together.

There is a mighty unifying influence on all the missionary field that has been drawing all our representatives in every far-flung battle front of the world into a great spiritual unity.

They were the first people to conceive the idea of dividing up territory and allowing one denomination to occupy adequately a great section of a nation. They were the first people to conceive the possibility of uniting in great educational institutions. They were many years the first people in the world to dream of the possibility of training the native worker of all denominations in a single institution. The Foreign Missionary forces of the world have been pioneers in the matter of a spirit of unity and co-operation. It is necessarily so.

The Home Missionary Movement in the past years in this country for nearly twenty years now, has been a great unifying power. Home Mission Council brought the leaders of all churches together to consider their common problems and to study the quantity and spirit of co-operation that should be observed among all. As I travel up and down this country I find certain sections of the country, notably the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast, where these home missionary forces have got to the point where they are not planting any new Protestant churches without consulting the Protestant forces in that entire territory. That is a great gain when we feel sufficient confidence in each other to trust each other to preach an adequate gospel in the fields that we occupy.

War has brought the church to a new sense of her duties. People who never dreamed of their sons crossing the sea now think about it without so much terror. If our sons who have crossed the sea then could realize that it wouldn't be so serious a thing to cross it again! The geography of all intelligent people of the world has been greatly broadened and their horizon pushed back in these last years and the war has illustrated the necessity and the value of a degree of co-operation among nations that we have never had before.

The war would not have been won yet unless we had worked together as nations and we did it without sacrificing our autonomy or our sovereignty. Can nations do more than churches?

There are denominations in this country that are afraid to come into this movement now for fear their autonomy, their sovereignty, their individuality might be sacrificed. It is the last thing that need happen. Unless a denomination is made stronger by these contacts, there would be something the matter with the contacts.

Never, while any denomination has any conviction will it be asked to sacrifice that conviction. It ought to maintain its conviction and follow it as long as it has it. It is the only way to maintain any right moral relations with God, but surely contact with other friends of Christ is going to broaden our ideas about Christ's abundant life and his world program and help us, as it has helped us in the past, to much of that which is richest and deepest and best in our whole life. War has brought the conviction that God has prepared the whole world for the greatest expansion of Christianity that history has witnessed.

The profound conviction has come that the Protestant churches of North America would multiply their power many fold; without sacrificing anything of their individuality or sovereignty, they would work as the allied nations did according to a common, comprehensive plan. That is all that is involved in this Interchurch Movement.

I believe the time has come in the history of our Christianity when we must point out lovingly but plainly and carefully to whole denominations in this country the moral obligations of a co-operative spirit. No one of us can evangelize the world alone. We are only doing a fraction of it in all our work added together. Only by unifying these forces and filling them with supernatural energy is there any promise that we can carry out Christ's program.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NOTE—The Home Mission goal is 40 cents per member instead of 35. Explanation next week.

The Udell, Iowa, church is in search of a pastor. Any one interested may write to Clara Powell of Udell.

The good people of the Sidney, Indiana, church gave Brother and Sister Hopkins of Twelve Mile a very pleasant surprise. These veterans of the Brethren faith are three-quarters of a century old and gave many years of faithful service to the church of their choice.

You will be interested again in the various items of news from the pen of President Jacobs. It is becoming truer every day that Ashland College is "our college," and because of that all are interested in learning more and more about the college.

A note from Brother Riddle says, "We had a great day yesterday at Louisville. 'Rally Day and Harvest Home.' We are beginning a meeting at North Georgetown tonight. Remember us at the throne of grace." May we not all co-operate in this service of prayer?

In a recent mail we received a card "To announce the arrival of Alvar Bryce Platt, September 24, 1919, weighing eight and one-third pounds, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wesley Platt, Manteca, California." Congratulations, Brother and Sister Platt, for this blessing of the Lord.

It has been a long time since we have had the pleasure of reading a report from the hand of Brother Morse Hoover. He is a very modest and unassuming man, but he has finally gotten into print concerning some of the good work that has been done through the inspiration of his leadership at Salem and Miamisburg.

Brother J. A. Baker calls attention to the fact that his address has been changed from 613 Churchill St., Eau Claire, Wisconsin, to Mondovi, Wisconsin, Route 5, Box 113. He makes a second appeal in behalf of an afflicted brother of his church, Brother A. E. Baker. Will not a number of churches and individuals heed this call?

Brother Homer Anderson reports that the work at College Corner is in good condition; he also speaks a very good word in behalf of the little group of disciples at Poplar Grove. He strikes a very vital spot in the life of our church when he emphasizes the importance of caring for the weak churches and aiding them to become strong as well as establishing new mission points.

OHIO CONFERENCE AT CANTON

There ought to be no more important event for the Ohio churches this year than the state conference at Canton, November 4-7. It ought to be the occasion for the assembling of the largest number of all-Ohio delegates that has ever been brought to the attention of Ohio churches. The editor had the great privilege of attending the Indiana and Pennsylvania state conferences and can bear testimony to the fact that they were the largest attended, the most enthusiastic and broadest visioned state conferences he has ever attended. Word comes from the other district conferences to the effect that they too experienced the greatest success ever. When we find space to print their reports in the Evangelist, our readers will be gratified at the splendid work and far-sighted plans of these conferences. Now every loyal Buckeye has great faith in the leadership of his own state. We all expect to have as great a conference at Canton as has been held anywhere, and one that will excel all previous conferences. A promising and comprehensive program has been planned and the Canton Brethren are making every possible preparation for our entertainment. It is up to every church to do its whole duty in the matter of sending delegates. Every church should be represented by a full quota of delegates. Let nothing else interfere. If you are in a revival, send your delegates anyhow and your revival will progress all the better because it is doing its full duty to the other churches of the state. God will bless a church more that does its duty to its fellow-churches than one that neglects its duty. Choose your delegates immediately, and if you have no credentials, send at once to Prof. E. G. Mason, West Salem, Ohio. "All aboard for Canton."

Canton, Ohio, is heard from and Brother Belote gives a very interesting report of his work. The various departments are holding up in splendid shape and the entire church seems to be growing enthusiastic over the prospect of entertaining the Ohio state conference to be held November 4th to 7th, inclusive, at which time Brother Bell will begin an evangelistic campaign in the Canton church. Every Ohio church should be largely represented at the fall conference.

Brother T. Darley Allen, of Cleveland, Ohio, who is a member of the Ashland congregation and has written generously for the Brethren Evangelist during the past six months, was recently ordained to the ministry in the college chapel, Dean Miller and Prof. J. A. Garber, the pastor, officiating. We welcome you, Brother Allen, to the Brethren ministry, and pray that you may be richly used of God for his glory.

Our dear aged Brother and Sister Swihart express their "Gratitude" in this issue for kindness shown to them by the good brothers and sisters of the Berne, Indiana, church. It was certainly a very Christian act on the part of those good people to remember these dear old servants of the church in this substantial way. We who are younger in the Brethren church cannot realize how much we owe to those who pioneered our cause.

Every report that our beloved campaign secretary sends in seems to be more interesting than the preceding one, and it is not entirely due to our own growing interest either. The report this week from Zion Hill will convince every one that the people of that little country congregation are both consecrated and loyal; people don't part with their money as those Brethren did unless they are consecrated to Christ and loyal to the Brethren faith and the Brethren school which propagates that faith. This report also confirms our conviction that Ohio is going to go "over the top" in the college endowment campaign.

Another epistle comes to us from Brother A. P. Reed, who some years ago was business manager of the Brethren Publishing Company. From his letter we learn that the First church of Los Angeles is making splendid progress under the leadership of Brother Jennings. They are continually receiving new members and their spirituality is bearing the fruits of enrichment.

Brother Carpenter gives us some good news this week from Kentucky. At Happy our faithful missionaries are reaping a harvest of souls, and yet in their great faith they are praying for a "revival." Many a church would be satisfied with such an ingathering and call it a revival. May their prayer be soon answered. Brother Carpenter also informs us that a nurse is found for Kentucky and will be supported by the Sisterhood girls; that Sister Rempel is much improved and that a very successful revival has been experienced at Lost Creek under the leadership of Brother I. D. Bowman.

EVANGELISM

What's Going On?

Since the memorable conference at Winona, I have made two pages for you. I have tried to make you feel as I do, that we have come in a wonderful way to a wonderful time and that we should be wonderfully busy at a time like this. Several conferences have passed into history since that time and I would like to be in touch with every one by wireless so that I could prophesy what is to happen in the Brethren church this winter. That the state conferences did toward the subject of EVANGELISM will determine in a large way what will be the record for the VICTORY YEAR. Would not you like to know what is going on?

Watch Indiana

"Pride of Place," you say? No, it is a challenge. Indiana is taking seriously, the Four Year Program and being the home of some mighty live workers at this job, they just can not keep out of the race. You may not remember that the state of Indiana was the one that got rid of more yellow last year than any other state. Well, we shall do better this year. Why? Here is why: Indiana in her great and harmonious conference held last week at Goshen decided to hold two District Bible conferences and urge a revival in every church. To carry out this resolution, the Board of Evangelists were commissioned to raise funds and stand for the deficit that may accrue in weak points, financially. To supply the evangelists, every church was urged to loan its pastor for at least one meeting in Indiana. Can you not see what is bound to happen in this great state of ours? Something is going on, out here.

A Revival in Every Church

That ought to be the slogan of the fraternity. How easily it can be worked out if we will work the plan of Indiana. That can be applied to any state even if the conference is past. And let me tell you that Indiana is at it right now. I know of one pastor that is helping another at this time and one that will help me in November. Let the weak churches write to their Board of Evangelists and ask for some such arrangement and something will happen.

So Easy

It is comparatively easy to put the thing across. Not many meetings that will not pay out. The few deficits that are made will be easily met by the members of the larger churches when the matter is rightly presented. A survey of the state's opportunities will be made when an effort at some of the weak places show whether it is worth while to go on in that place or not. Indiana is not officially challenging other states but what they have done is a challenge to Ohio and Pennsylvania and some of the older districts that have similar conditions. Will they take it?

The Evangelistic League

The Evangelistic and Bible Study League is the newest and, perhaps the greatest organization that has come to us recently. Started in California, they do not care to push it onto the brotherhood; but the Evangelistic Association of our National Conference thought so much of it that they disbanded by unanimous vote to become members of this association because it had in it the elements of success. Somewhat along the lines I have mapped out above it aims to have a Bible Institute or Conference and revival in every church of the brotherhood; it costs a dollar a year to be paid to its Treasurer, Dr. H. V. Wall of 200 Grande Avenue, Long Beach, California. When in a recent issue I mentioned this dollar for evangelism, an early mail brought a dollar from a sister, I do not know who responded, Hallelujah! Why not a lot more? But do not send it to me. Send as above. Let's get action. We have had enough speeches. One time I asked a member of a conference what they had done along a certain line; he said we had some good speeches! Ah, me! I have even heard of them passing resolutions and appointing committees and then, letting it die out. Direct action is the thing in evangelism this year. We need it for the Program; we need it for the progress of the Kingdom.

Worthless

An incident happened when I was still pastor of the Dayton church. A landlady had a boarder that "jumped" his board bill; after worrying about it a bit he said to a friend of mine, "Do you know what I am going to do with that fellow? I'm going to write him a letter!!" So, some of our churches are doing. Just saying what they are going to do—passing resolutions and never getting anywhere. Direct action is the word.

From Winona

From Winona goes out the word that more calls are coming to the Association for evangelists than for years. What does it mean? It means that other churches are getting serious about the real work of the church. "Now or Never" is the thought of many workers of the Kingdom. I do not share it. The church can not die. It is a slander on our Savior to even hint that the church has failed; it can not fail, finally. But it can fail seriously right now; it can this year if it does not evangelize. Nothing can take the place of the church nor safe and sane evangelism for its promulgation.

Union Services

In many towns where our church is represented, there will be held union meetings this year. I hope that our church will have the good judgment to know that out of the union meeting they will get out just as much as they put in. If they keep aloof from it and criticize it, they need not expect much. But if they will take their unsaved friends there and enter the spirit of it and do a good lot of personal work, it is a good chance to get greater results than they might be able to get in their own church. Surely it is often easier to get folks to "hit the trail" than it is to get them to confess in a small meeting like we have to have in our small churches. Don't forget that you will get out what you put in most any campaign. No more.

More Union

Doubtless in several places we can do well to unite with the Church of the Brethren people and get greater results. Did you know several movements have already begun looking toward some kind of affiliation with these people of our own flesh and bone? Doubtless in many small towns our two churches could lessen the expense and intensify their usefulness by going together using a single evangelist and harvesting results larger than would be possible otherwise. If such conditions appear, let no "Progressive" lag in his opportunity.

Do You Know?

Did you know that recently there was a gathering of the ministers of the two churches in a city of Pennsylvania to discuss this topic of union? Not much came of it, but a leading evangelist of the Church of the Brethren addressed our gathering and said if it were left to the laity union would soon come. With a dozen or more of preachers from both sides, we exchanged fraternal greetings and then, unanimously passed a resolution about like this: "Whatever effort is made or may be made toward union in any place, it is the sense of this conference that any effort to make a creedal statement or definition of standing will hinder rather than help union." It is quite significant that there have been several places where union of the two churches has been discussed and at great length; quite as significant that some places for years our two churches have been hiring a pastor jointly; quite significant that some of the people of both sides are not afraid to get together and talk it over. But evangelism opens a big opportunity for definite united action where neither can lose. Let us get busy closing the breach especially where neither can lose but both can gain.

Some places our pastor can preach and theirs sing; in others vice versa. Some places we can use a Drunker evangelist; some places we can go together and hire an outsider from both; but if we can not go it alone, then be sure to work out a revival for your church or town some way. VICTORY YEAR DEMANDS EVANGELISM.

BAME.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Our Christ as Seen in the Book of Psalms. BY T. H. BROAD

The Psalms is a book of and for meditation, the song book of the Bible. In it there are meditations concerning Christ. In Luke 24:44 Jesus says, "All things must be fulfilled which were written in the Psalms concerning me." Dr. Brooks says that out of seventy-five quotations from the book of Psalms in the New Testament, over fifty represent Jesus Christ as the speaker, or are directly applied to him. And we hear the Master in that wonderful Sabbath day message of John 5 declaring that the Scriptures testify of him.

Almost every phase of the life of Christ finds its previous testimony in this book, but only as we realize and accept dispensational and prophetic truths can we touch its depths and heights, and find our blessed Christ its central theme. For example, in the 23rd Psalm, the first verse, Jehovah Tireh is our provider, so is Jesus in John 10 our Good Shepherd. Verse 2 speaks of Jehovah-Shalom, the Lord our peace, while verse 4 brings out the thought of Jehovah-Rophi, the Lord our healer. In the same verse we find Jehovah-Tsidkenu, Jehovah our righteousness, which corresponds to Romans 4 where righteousness is imputed to us until we shall see him when we shall be like him. As we tremblingly step into the 4th verse we find the sting and the victory of the king of terrors taken out of the way, and with an exultant shout we cry, Jehovah-Shammah, and joy in his presence. As we travel through we find that at eventide there shall be light as we cry Jehovah-Nissi, and realize that the banner over us is love.

We shall only be concerned with those Psalms which are directly related to the Christian, his salvation and blessed hope in this short paper.

Not alone in the Shepherd Psalm are we brought face to face with the Good Shepherd who gave his life for the sheep, but also in Psalms 77:20; 78:52; 80:1, as in John 10. For the soul whose great hope is in "His Blessed Coming," who is looking forward with the Apostle Paul, waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God, looking forward to the deliverance from the bondage of corruption, and the change into the glorious liberty of the children of God, we, like him, find ourselves groaning within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our bodies, and the time when the Lion of the tribe of Judah shall open the book and loose the seals, at which time all heaven takes up redemption's song. Yet we listen to the echo of the song sung by David in the 19th Psalm, 14th verse, and again in Psalm 69:18 we hear him crying out for his Redeemer.

Would we know the millennial blessing? The 72nd Psalm brings up the time when the socialist shall see his heart's desire (if he is there) and the pacifist shall see the desire of his heart, and here we find the power and blessing of the Redeemer or Gaal, and Psalm 163:4, we find a feast of fat things. Yet one of the most precious figures is the Redeemer, and the Redeemer of the Psalms is a beautiful type of Jesus Christ, a redeemer whose redemption is in a person. But when the fulness of time was come God sent forth his Son, made of a woman (curse bearer), made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons; and because ye are sons God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts,, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant but a son, and if a son then an heir of God through Christ.

Without doubt David realized that the Redeemer had also to be a kinsman, having learned it from the Levitical law (25:48, 49). Hence we hear Paul in his letter to the Hebrews declare that in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High Priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of his people.

In Psalm 119:154, we listen to a petition, Consider mine affliction, and deliver me, for I do not forget thy law. Plead my cause and deliver me; and at once we come face to face with 1 John 2:1, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not, and if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the Righteous.

Would we stand at the cross? Would we see its offence? Luke tells us that at the very time that his prayer went to the throne of God for the forgiveness of his persecutors, that the people stood beholding, and the rulers also with them derided him, saying, He saved others, let him have himself, if he be the Christ, the chosen of God. And the soldiers also mocked him, coming to him, offering him vinegar, saying, if thou be King of the Jews save thyself. Yet this was just the echo of the 22 Psalm, But I am a woman, and no man, a reproach to men and despised by the people. All they that see laugh me to scorn; they shoot out the lip, they shake the head saying, He trusted in the Lord. And in the margin we read in reference to verse 9, Thou kepest me in safety when I was on my mother's breast (going out of Egypt), and in verse 11 we are reminded that they all forsook him and fled. While in the next verse we are led back to listen to the heart-break of Jeremiah in his outcry against Chaldea and Babylon, because they had grown fat as the heifer at grass. And again in the Song of Moses (Deut. 32:12-14) and the Jews from that land, waxed fat and kicked, grew proud and rebellious, and forsook the God that made them, and lightly esteemed the rock of their salvation, and if we need other evidence we have it in Amos 4:1-5. And as we go back to the New Testament we hear their cry, "His blood be upon us and on our children," "and sitting down they watched him there." And from verse 14, we have a description of the crucifixion given centuries before such a punishment was known.

As we contemplate the cross with all its physical agony and hear the joints parting asunder and listen to the Scientists of our day declare that he died of a broken heart, and while dying that awful thirst which comes to all who die from a loss of blood, his blessed hands having been pierced with the cruel nails, his enemies divided his garments and upon his vesture they cast lots. Dr. Schofield points out that from the 22nd verse the Psalm breaks from crucifixion to resurrection. Its fulfillment we find in John 20:17, "and go to my brethren and say to them I ascend unto my father and unto your father and to my God and to your God. And in the 27th verse we are brought face to face with the millennial glory, while in verse 28 we hear the echo of the hal-leluah chorus, and our imagination runs riot as we listen to the mighty army of the redeemed singing in full chorus,

"hallelujah, hallelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reign-eth." Our colored brethren from Afrie's sunny clime roll their deep bass, "And he shall reign for ever and ever." Then the silvery voiced saints from sunny Italy take up the tenor, "And he shall reign for ever and ever." Again the strains roll from the lips of China's and Japan's millions, while the white races sing in the highest clef, "And he shall reign for ever and ever, King of kings and Lord of lords" until with one mighty burst the whole heavens ring with his glory and we realize that the kingdoms of the world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.

Ohio Brethren to Confer in Canton

On beginning to write the first idea was: The Ohio Brethren to assemble in Canton. That might imply that all of us would be there, which is hardly possible. But all of us should be represented in the coming state conference, meeting over November 4-7, and the representation should be exceptionally large. It can be, if each church will strive to send its full quota of delegates.

Because

1. Canton is one of our city mission points about ready to enter upon a self-supporting basis. You will want to visit this child which is entering upon a larger career.

2. The program is comprehensive and unique (Review it as it appears in the Evangelist of September 24th). It recognizes and provides for all our work. In addition each evening will be devoted to a Bible lecture by Dean Miller and an evangelistic sermon by Dr. Bell. Here is a fine opportunity to pray and work for the edification and salvation of souls in Canton.

3. The time calls for the biggest and best effort. The church faces the necessity and urgency of presenting a larger program. Others are responding. Witness our sister conferences, notably Indiana and Pennsylvania, each of which report over a hundred delegates and its greatest conference. Shall Ohio do less? Can we ignore the challenging questions and movements of this momentous hour and maintain the respect of brethren and accomplish the work given to us by the Master? What will be your answer, Brethren of Ohio?

I am using the word "Gratitude" at the head of this little article because it expresses our thankfulness and appreciation for favors received at the hands of our brethren during our fifty-seven years' invalidism, especially of later years.

Fifty-seven years ago I was smitten with a prolonged spell of typhoid fever of the worst type from which I nevertheless measurably recovered after eight weeks' confinement to the bed and house, but it left me with an awfully painful and swollen leg, ankle, and foot, and in spite of all that my attending physician could do to prevent further ills, ulcers formed on shin and ankle, causing indescribable pain and misery, laying me up often for weeks at a time. And although there have been times that the ulcers seemed to be healed, invariably the sores would break out afresh at intervals of from three to four years, usually with increased distress, especially of late years as we are growing in age, thus our affliction has menaced our career for fifty-seven years—the greater part of our life.

It is much because of this physical misfortune, we presume, that our brethren have seen fit to remember us in a substantial way. But not this alone, we have reasons to believe that there is another reason why our brethren have so graciously remembered us. They have evidently not forgotten our feeble ministerial work of by-gone years. We surely feel very thankful to them for their acts of charity. The Board of Benevolence backed by National Conference, has stood nobly by us in our declining years, for which we lack words to sufficiently express our gratitude.

Then, too, we have occasionally received favors from individuals, for which we are very thankful. And last but not least we are thankful to those local Brethren congregations who have so kindly remembered us.

Just three weeks ago while in bed racked with pain and Representation and Reports

The revised constitution provides that all duly accredited elders shall be delegates by virtue of their office, but the church in which they hold their membership must certify to their standing. Churches may send lay delegates on the basis of one delegate for every 25 members or fraction thereof above 15. Each Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and Woman's Missionary Society may send one official delegate. Other workers, however, may and should participate in the conference. Each church should pay a fee of 25c for each delegate to which it is entitled, the same to be paid the Credential committee when the credential is presented.

All officers, general and departmental, will prepare to report their work as required. The character of these reports, of course, will be determined by the response of the church and the departments thereof. Have you reported your statistics as requested? Have you paid your missionary apportionment? Remember that the payments extend over a period of eighteen months instead of a single year. The exact amount of your obligation to date may be learned from Secretary E. F. Miller, Bellefontaine, if you have not already received his statement in behalf of the Board.

Pastors and officers are asked to give immediate attention to these matters of pressing importance. Do your best, too, my brethren, to send a full quota of delegates. People who otherwise would not come often attend conference as a result of encouragement and urging on the part of those who know its value. The VICTORY may depend on YOU.

J. A. GARBER, Moderator.

misery, caused by one of those often recurring spells and under the doctor's care, who was vigorously fighting blood poison, all of which the brethren of whom I shall here speak evidently knew nothing, a letter came to me from which I will quote the following, to wit, "Dear Brother and Sister Swihart: We have just been wondering how you are getting along, and not having heard from you for some time we think we owe you a letter." Then the writer, Brother Johnson, speaks of the folks at Bethel (Berne) as being in fairly good health and the church as moving along nicely. Then he says, "Last Sunday evening I made mention of you and what you had been to us in former years and at the close this offering was placed on the table to be sent to you and wife (amount not stated) and now while I am writing, W. N. Smilly sent ten dollars to be added to the offering." Then Brother Johnson says, "Now brother, you will understand that this offering is just a token of our love and respect for you and wife." The brother also speaks of their intention of making us a visit in the near future. So, sure enough, a car came up to our gate the other day, bearing four passengers in the persons of W. F. Johnson, J. F. Sipe, J. M. Parr and Otto Baker who remained with us until high noon the following day. This visit was certainly most highly appreciated by us. I might add here that Brother Baker said he was absent when the above said offering was made and apparently he didn't wish to be slighted, so he added a five dollar bill, which, if I may be permitted to speak, brought the offering to the nice sum of sixty-five dollars. This offering is especially appreciated from the fact that it was not solicited neither expected by us, but came as a surprise, and we know that it was not made grudgingly but was an entire free gift which makes it all the more to be appreciated.

God bless the brethren.

Concerning the League of Nations

Whatever may be the political faith of any loyal Brethren, he can be depended on to stand in favor of any reasonable and honorable method that has for its aim the lessening of the chances of war. It may not be an ideal method, but if it has within it the possibility and probability of helping the world on towards the ideal, he will give it his encouragement and support. With our historic antagonism to war daily becoming more popular, no one has greater right to rejoice in this day as a day of approaching victory, and likewise no one has greater responsibility than have we for giving aid to movements now under way that look toward the hastening of victory. It is a day of conflict between the forces that make for war and those that make for peace: between those who believe in war as a means of settling disputes and those who believe in the power of reason and right. And it is encouraging to see the forces of right daily gaining in power. Men of strength and decision are daily being brought to see the folly of force as a means of deciding differences between nations or individuals. Hear what Dr. Talcott Williams has to say about it: he writes from Washington, D. C., in the interest of the League of Nations:

"Running through the debate on the Covenant and the League of Nations it creates, is the constant assertion that the right to make war is necessary to the discharge of certain national duties. When the sons of Zebedee wanted fire rained on the villages which denied the ordinary rites of eastern hospitality to our Lord, John and James were calling for 'direct action.' So is the extreme radical of today for whose ends agitation and votes are too slow a path. He is unwilling to wait. He refuses the slower but peaceful road and desires the swifter remedy of force or 'direct action.'"

"But those who, to meet social ills, ask for force, 'direct action' because better methods are slower and morally wrong. If the sword be taken by those who defend evils, perish they must by the sword of others used in war. The League provides for this by making its members the enemies of all those who seek war for any end, save as the right of revolution is preserved. For war, the League substitutes investigation into alleged evils, a report by the Council or Assembly and an appeal to the public opinion of the world. These reports and the decisions they make have behind them no force. These do not stand on the same basis as 'justiciable questions,' issues that are open to arbitration. The remedy for grievances which are likely to 'affect international relations which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations upon which peace depends' is investigation and a report by Council or Assembly. Both parties agree not to use force in the matter and neither Council nor Assembly has the power to invoke it for a settlement.

"This is the attitude of the English speaking nations towards all the evils of society. The Bolshevik plan is to use force, even massacre, and postpone any vote. This is urged in this country by extreme radicals. 'Your remedies of agitation, argument and votes, take too long.' Wrongs justify violence the 'red' radical says and his more respectable and more dangerous 'parlor Bolshevik' justifies this by apologies for violence in Russia and in this country.

"The Covenant for a League of Nations presents the same moral issues as are raised by our constitutional system. As the individual under our institutions must submit to law, appeal to voters and avoid violence to gain reform, so nations are required to take the same course in a World League. They must not use violence for their own ends. They must submit their differences to law and a court of arbitration. If evils exist, they must be brought to the bar of public opinion, by investigation and a report, which brings wrongs before the bar of humanity.

"Objections to this policy and to these limitations and a desire for 'direct action' are both a reversion to violence and a departure from the public and private ethics which Christianity has taught, spread and extended first to private relations and now to relations between nations."

Armenia's Last Call to America

The American Committee for the independence of Armenia has received from Mr. Aharonian, President of the Delegation of the Armenian Republic to the Peace Conference, the following three cablegrams dated September 12, 17 and 27 respectively:

"Turkish-Tartar threat against Armenia is under way of realization, viz., Kemal Pasha's two divisions assisted by Turks, Tartars and Kurds have started surrounding Armenian Republic. Our soldiers fighting desperately defeated enemy at several points, but were forced to abandon Nakhichevan and Kars Districts, on account lack munitions and provisions, leaving Christian population at mercy of invaders. Our numerous steps with Peace Conference remain fruitless. . . . No food, drugs or money. Population naked and exhaustion. Starvation everywhere. From thirty to fifty persons found dead in streets of Erivan daily. Are absolutely abandoned and without communication with outside world. Turks consider us responsible for overthrow of their empire. Words lacking describe horror situation. Will soon be completely annihilated. Our last hope for aid is in America. Armenia makes a last and supreme call to great and noble American people and government for help. Urgent that 10,000 soldiers be sent immediately with necessary equipment for organization Armenian Army of thirty thousand. If acted at once situation can be saved. Very existence of Armenian people depend on America. You may come too late to save us."

Two hundred thousand Armenians fought in the ranks of the allied and associated armies. According to General Allenby, Armenian battalions took a leading part in the defeat of the Turks in Palestine. According to Von Luden-dorff, the inability of the Turks to reach Baku in time, owing to the resistance of the Armenians, following the defection of Russia, deprived the German Army in the west of essential fuel supply. One million Armenian men, women and children have been slaughtered by the Turks because of their fidelity to the faith and cause of America. And now at this, the most critical juncture of her history, Christian Armenia makes a supreme call to Christian America. If we permit the Armenian people to be exterminated, the Christian church shall be dishonored forever. An Armenian State in Asia Minor is bound to be a decisive factor in the task of civilizing the peoples of Near and Middle Asia, and it is also the best guarantee against the dangers of Pan-Islamism and Pan-Turanianism. Christian Armenia will be a watchdog of Christian civilization in the East. We must help her. We must save her.

As men, Christians and Americans, we strongly urge every minister of the Gospel to write to the President and to the Senators of his State, urging that necessary steps be taken to save Armenia. We also earnestly ask that all the ministers of the Gospel bring this subject to the attention of their congregations and ask all men and women to write to the President and to the Senators of their States that Armenia must be saved.

JAMES W. GERARD, Chairman,
American Committee for the Independence of Armenia.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Triumph of Faith. By Geo. W. Kinzie

TEXTS: "But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men which went to search the land, lived still" (NUMBERS 14:38).

"And this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith" (1 JOHN 5:4).

The story of the experiences of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage to their settlement in the land of promise is an intensely interesting story. And no part of that story is more interesting or suggestive than that portraying them at Kadesh Barnea. After having traveled hundreds of miles, and all the while realizing such wonderful protection from God, as well as the provision of their every need, by special miracle and otherwise, here they were, finally, at the very threshold of the land whither they went. But, despite the many, many infallible proofs of their presence and power of Jehovah, exerted in their behalf thus far, they were still far from being willing to trust him as they should,—unwilling to take him at his word.

God had assured them that he was leading them to the land which he had repeatedly declared he had given them, a land flowing with milk and honey, yet, after finally arriving at the place where all they had to do was to enter into and take possession of it, they demanded an investigation of the land (Deut. 1:22), as though Jehovah's word for it could not be taken. But thank God there were those, though ever so few, who were willing to take him at his word. And the faith of these, and the unbelief of those are pictured to us in such sharp contrast in this story that we should receive great encouragement and inspiration to our faith, as well as discouragement to any element of unbelief that might be sticking around.

The committee on investigation had been selected and sent away on their mission of inspection of the land. They had also returned with a report and recommendations which were anything but unanimous. Unbelief had seen the difficulties in the way; giants lived in walled cities great and strong, and they exclaimed: "We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we." Unbelief always leaves God out of consideration. But faith saw, as always, not the difficulties so much as the strong arm of Jehovah leading on to certain victory, regardless of seemingly insurmountable difficulties, according to his unfailing word, and said: "Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it."

But faith and unbelief are not only in contrast here, it is also in contest. It is, therefore, most refreshing to note how that finally FAITH TRIUMPHS DESPITE OVERWHELMING OPPOSITION.

Was there opposition here? There certainly was. The report of unbelief was just the opposite of the report of faith. Now it so happened that the report of unbelief was the overwhelming majority report, ten to two. But the opposition to faith consisted not merely in the opposite report that was brought in, nor were they (the faithful) opposed only by those bringing it in. Quite naturally Israel accepted the majority report, or the report of the unbelievers. Then, what weeping and crying was heard in the camp that night! What regret! What bitterness of soul! What rebellion! These are but the fruits of unbelief. They ordered that Joshua and Caleb—God's two faithful ones—should be stoned with stones. Had not an overwhelming majority brought in the opposite report? Had not the consensus of authority declared the course proposed by the minority to be impossible and dangerous, such as indeed threatened their very lives? Why then should they not be stoned? I am wondering if we may not sometimes be too quick to accept the opinion of the majority just because a majority hold to that opinion, or because it is popular? Or, the majority holding to an opinion and discussing it, we hear more discussion on that side and hence accept it. To illustrate: How many of us have entirely escaped the temptation to accept the popular conception of war, in the light of the last four years, and thus abandon our historic position of non-resistance? A few have thrown their belief in the Scriptural teaching of non-resistance to the winds, and openly advocated active participation in the war. Some have hardly known where they stood. Others have stood firm on the teachings of the old Book, regardless of arguments, appearances or consequences. Does the fact that a majority of professed Christians, many of whom we honor and greatly confide in, advocated war make it right? Most churches for years have been teaching that war was wrong, that it was barbarous. But when war came these same churches were the champions of it and pushed these same young men into it whom they had taught to think that war was wrong. Were they wrong now or had they been wrong all these years before? And if it is wrong, how many people will it take who think it is right to make it right? But what saith the Scriptures? Have they changed? We have heard and read much favorable discussion of war from the platform and in the newspapers and magazines, but has that changed the teachings of Holy Writ? And shall we follow the newspapers and magazines (the voice of the majority) or the sure word of God. Which is the answer of faith? "Both," did you say? And pray how so? Can both be right when they contradict each other? This was the exact predicament of Israel—to choose between the voice of the minority, which was based upon the word of God, and the voice of the majority, which was opposed to that word.

But God honored their fidelity. He never fails to do so. When the people were demanding that they be stoned, and were all in the very act of stoning them, "The glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation before all the children of Israel. And the Lord said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? And how long will it be ere they BELIEVE ME? . . . I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they." And, but for the intercession of faithful old Moses, no doubt Israel would then and there have paid the price of her unbelief with immediate destruction. But now, the sentence, which certainly was that of death, was reduced to this: that not one of them that was twenty years old or above should enter the land of promise, save Joshua and Caleb. Thus would God vindicate the faithful and honor their faith. Thus also did faith triumph over unbelief, under terrible and overwhelming opposition.

Furthermore, FAITH IS VICTORIOUS EVEN THOUGH SEEMINGLY DEFEATED. Joshua and Caleb had been true. They had brought back not only a true report of the conditions as they really found them, but they had also been true to God, and urged an immediate forward movement, despite the seeming difficulties, knowing assuredly that God would give victory and success. But their counsel had been rejected, and here they stand condemned to death. Seemingly they were hopelessly defeated. They had not merely been sentenced to Fort Leavenworth; they had been sentenced to be "stood up along a stone wall and shot." But, O, our God never forsakes his own. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, AND DELIVERETH THEM." And just when we need him most he is nearest. So he turned their seeming defeat into glorious victory, in promise. And the day of the realization of the promise came, and with palms of victory and crowns of glory they entered into the inheritance God had prepared for them.

It has often been so. The three Hebrew children who determined to be true to Jehovah, in carrying out that determination, were compelled to ignore the decree of the government under which they lived, and as a consequence were condemned to the fiery furnace. Apparently God had forsaken them, as they are east into the furnace of fire, which had been heated seven times hotter than it was intended to be. But Jehovah was there,—he never forsakes those that TRUST HIM—and the fiery furnace was but the doorway to power and honor in the kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar.

Daniel at the mouth of the den of lions appears to be defeated. Surely now his enemies have scored a victory, and this hated Jew will never again be in their way. But there he stands as calm and as unconcerned as though he was in the quiet of his own home. Into the den of those vicious beasts they east him. And for what? For being true to God, when being true means disregard for his government's decree. And did he thus expose himself to the wrath of the king ignorantly? No, he was perfectly conversant with the decree as well as with the attached penalty (Daniel 6:10). And, while ordinarily Daniel would have been found observing the rulings of the king, yet, when observing the king's decree would lead him to be untrue to God, he must break with the king and his government. And what was the outcome? Daniel torn to shreds ere yet he scarcely reached the bottom of the den? O no? Even these ferocious beasts became his friends. Walking over to that old grizzled fellow yonder he lay him down, pillowing his head upon his shaggy mane, and slept like a baby. The king had an unusually restless night, and very early in the morning he made his way to the den of lions. He had learned to love Daniel very much, and now, upon finding him safe, exclaimed: "O Daniel, is thy God able to deliver thee from the lions?" Then came the reply, "My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lion's mouths." O yes, our God is able. Hallelujah! Then Daniel was removed from the den of lions, and at the king's command, these enemies of Daniel, together with their wives and their children, were thrown into the den of lions and were instantly torn to pieces. But Daniel was set on high. Thus the den of lions was but the stepping-stone to victory and even a greater place in the king's court. And how vastly was his influence for God, as well as the knowledge of the only true God, extended! Did it pay to be faithful in spite of seeming defeat? To ask the question is to answer it.

Once more. The martyrs of the early church were brutally murdered in a score of ways. They were used as human torches, flayed alive, crucified, torn asunder joint at a time, eyes punched out, tongues cut out, fed to wild beasts, thrown to maddened bulls and vicious dogs, and what not? Did it pay? Can one count as victory that which is seemingly such perfect defeat as to require the surrender of life itself? Were they victorious or were they defeated? Defeated? Could that be defeat by which they were given a short cut to glory? Could that be defeat by which they were thus brought to a close forever, and in addition to this they

The Influence of Kindness

By Mary Louise Switzer

OUR SCRIPTURE

Have mercy on us O God, according to thy loving kindness, according to the multitude of thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions (Ps. 51-1). Because thy loving kindness is better than life, my life shall praise thee (Ps. 63-3). It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to sing praises unto thy name O most High, to show forth thy loving kindness in the morning and thy faithfulness every night (Ps. 92-1 and 2). Show thy marvelous loving kindness, O thou that savest by thy right hand them that put their trust in thee from those that rise up against them (Ps. 17-7). Let the righteous smite me says David, for it shall be a kindness (Ps. 141-5). Go and cry into the ears of Jerusalem saying, thus saith the Lord, I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth (Jeremiah 2-2). Add to your faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness and to godliness brotherly kindness (II Peter 1-7). Now swear unto me by the Lord since I have shown you kindness, ye will also show kindness unto my father's house and give me a true token (Joshua 1112). Thou art a God ready to pardon, gracious and merciful, slow to anger and of great kindness and forsakest them not (Nehemiah 9-17). Rend your hearts not your garments and turn them unto the Lord your God, for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness and repenteth them of evil (Joel 2-13).

OUR MEDITATION

Henry Drummond says the greatest thing in the world is love. This is quite true, but there are other elements which are just as essential to aid us in the carrying out of our daily duties. Paul said there "abideth faith hope and love, these three, but the greatest of these is love." Faith comes first, because it is the foundation of the others and without faith nothing can be real, enduring, nor can it be comprehensive.

The loving kindness of the Father was so great that the children of the Lord put their trust in him and were helped by following his example. If we profess to be followers of him it is our duty to so fashion our lives by deeds of loving kindness that we will be examples for those who have little opportunity to do good in this world. A word, a boost, a little encouragement said in a kindly way, or even a smile in place of a frown, may be the means of setting aright the heart of someone who feels downcast and out of joint with the world. If we ourselves look on the bright side, see some good in everything and everybody, we will be a help to those with whom we associate.

Harsh words and scowling faces take away all good influences, and only make it disagreeable and unpleasant for those who are our companions. We are ready and pleased to accept the kindness of those about us, ready to give and render kindnesses unto our friends, are willing to be kind and true to those whom we meet and with whom we associate, but that is not the question. It is this: "Are we ready to render the kindnesses unto God which are due him for all the manifestations of his goodness which he daily and almost hourly bestows upon us?" If we are not, then our lives are not complete, and at some time we will look back and see wherein we have erred and fallen short of the duties which we should have been pleased to perform, with kind hearts.

It is our earnest prayer that we as Christian men and women may see the big problem which is set before us and fulfil to the utmost of our ability the services which our Lord has asked of us.

OUR PRAYER

Our dear Father who art in heaven, we pray that thou wilt help us to show loving kindness to all whom we meet and to scatter smiles and sunshine wherever we go. Give us more of thine own gracious love for all men and help us to have faith in others, that we may be able to treat them more gentle and kind. Forgive us wherein we have failed to be to others all we might have been and make us more unselfish day by day. Fill our lives with thine own self that our influence may be wholesome, and all our words and conduct be kind. This we ask in the name of Jesus our Savior. Amen. Wabash, Indiana.

To keep the door of the lips many times when it would be so much easier to talk is an indication of strength. The man who talks too much surrenders dignity, loses authority, and sacrifices respect. It is as great a gift to know how to keep silence as to understand how and when to speak.

Tokyo Hospitality for Sunday-School Convention

When the delegates to the World's Sunday School Convention reach Tokyo next October they will find one of the most interesting experiences of their trip in being entertained in the Japanese homes. It is expected that accommodations for at least 1,000 will be provided in this way. Hospitality will be extended in the homes of both Christians and non-Christians. For sleeping, the Japanese lay one or more padded blankets on the floor matting and then provide another warm blanket for the covering. If the pillow is a little hard it can be softened by folding your steamer rug and placing it beneath your head. After sleeping in real Japanese surroundings, breakfast will be enjoyed in these homes, though the foreigners will not be expected to eat with chopsticks. The privilege of getting into Japanese homes is one that the traveler rarely secures. The courtesy is only possible because Japan will be the host of the Convention. Luncheon and dinner will be provided in the restaurants of Tokyo. In traveling through Japan, both the native and foreign hotels will be used.

Horace E. Coleman, Educational Secretary for Japan for the World's Sunday School Association, is now on his way to Tokyo after a furlough in the United States. While here he has held numerous conferences with the various committees that have the Tokyo Convention in charge. The Program, Exhibit, Music and Pageantry Committees have the work well in hand and will report to the World's Executive Committee which meets October 29-30. Applications from prospective delegates are being received daily at the office of the World's Association, Metropolitan Tower, New York.

Mrs. Coleman will return with her husband. She has been addressing many women's meetings while in this country. The Colemans have spent twelve years in Japan. During the war Mrs. Coleman was very active in Belgian Relief Work in Japan, received the decoration of the Medal of Queen Elizabeth. The honor was conferred at the Belgian legation in Tokyo. This medal of Queen Elizabeth was especially created by King Albert's government to recognize those who had signally helped Belgium in her time of dire need. The medal has been engraved by a well known Belgian sculptor, Victor Rousseau. On the one side it bears the Queen's head with these words "Elizabeth Queen of the Belgians," and on the reverse side is the figure of a nurse bending over a burning lamp.

It would be a fine thing if some representative of the Brethren church could attend this convention. Why not? Let us begin now to plan to send some one.

Message of Gratitude Written in Blood

(As many Brethren people have given generously to Armenian and Syrian Relief work, they will be glad to know something of the appreciation of the recipients of their gifts.—Ed.).

A message written in blood on a single grain of Syrian wheat, thanking the relief workers from America for the aid given his people, has been received by the representatives of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief in Beirut, Syria, from the head man of a village in Lebanon. The message, which is in Arabic, can be read only with the aid of a powerful magnifying glass. A translation follows:

Libat, Lebanon.

"This emblem of benevolence offered to the President of the American Committee for Relief in gratitude for his great beneficence to the Syrians during the terrible war:—

"Honored President:—

"Never was the world's surprise in seeing civilized Europe take her stand as a butcher in this war greater than its surprise in seeing free America take her stand as an enemy and judge in order to bring back to peace and freedom oppressed peoples. Nor was its surprise in both cases any greater than its astonishment in seeing your Society take its noble stand as a benevolent doctor comforting humanity by gifts and sympathies.

"In recording your great benevolence I cannot find an ink better than the blood of my heart, nor a paper more appropriate than a grain of wheat.

"Accept, Sir, this tribute of my respect.

Nasib Said Makarim."

were escorted into the very presence of their blessed Lord. How blessed to see him face to face! How glorious to be counted worthy to suffer and to die for him who had died for them! But not only this. The blood of the martyrs became the seed of the church, so that, for every one who died as a martyr there were scores won to the Christian faith. And beyond a doubt through their unwavering faith many more souls were led to embrace the faith than they would have been able to win, had they been permitted to live.

And if we would be victorious over the world, and worldliness, we must exercise ourselves unto a like faith. For "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." If we believe that God is God, and that he sent his only begotten Son into the world to save lost mankind; that there is none other name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved; that whosoever believeth on him is not condemned, but hath everlasting life; that he that believeth not is condemned already and shall not see life but is under the wrath of God; that every one of us shall give account of himself to God; if we believe,—if we have faith, how can we, how dare we, deliberately cling to sin or persist in worldliness? And faith, and faith alone will compel us to do the right and leave undone the wrong.

And as right is stronger than wrong; as light is more powerful than darkness; as truth is more enduring than error; as life is more potent than death; so faith is more powerful than unbelief. And though opposed and perhaps temporarily subdued and overpowered, will sooner or later come into its own. And those who have had the courage and the tenacity to remain true and faithful, though greatly in the minority, and when everyone else, seemingly, was opposed to the faith and the faithful, will surely "Shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of God, their Father, and as the stars forever and ever." And when sin, and iniquity, and godlessness, and doubt and unbelief, and "The fearful, and unbelieving, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars," shall have been cast into the lake of fire, which is the second death—then shall faith have long ago become sight; and those who have dared to be true, despite the suffering and persecution and misunderstandings incurred thereby, shall have been long since enjoying the blessed and holy presence of the Lord Jesus Christ, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, as well as all those who have "Fallen asleep in Jesus," and all the holy angels, in the celestial city of God.

Beloved, may the Lord of all grace and glory give to us the penitence and faith and devotion that shall enable us with joy to anticipate that glorious day of his appearing, and to finally enter into the glory which he has reserved for his own in that last great day. Amen.

Our Young People at Work

G. C. Carpenter
SECRETARY

Southern Indiana Endeavorers, Attention!

This is to be "Victory Year." That means that we must reach every one of our goals in our "Four Year Challenge" and that each society must do its full duty. If one society fails it will affect not only our district but the whole National work and might cause us to lose the victory. "The Victory may depend on you."

Records

If we are to reach our goals each society must keep an accurate record of its gains (and losses) in each part of our program. If you haven't before, take an inventory of your present standing and check up each new advance. Failure to do so may hinder your success.

Reports

Our records will not help the work unless they are reported to the proper officers of the District or National Union. Let us report promptly when reports are called for.

Correspondents

If we are to do efficient work we must have better means of communication. We need, in each society or church a person, who is interested in Christian Endeavor, to act as corresponding secretary, one who knows what he is to do and does it.

Invest a Cent

I wish, and urge, that each society would invest one cent in a postal card and send me the names of the pastor, Christian Endeavor president, and corresponding secretary. This is important, so do it now, before you forget.

Field Work

At our last General Conference, it was felt that we needed some field workers to get in closer touch with the work. For some reason (or through mistake)—I am the victim of this district. So we hope sometime during the year to visit each society. In the meantime keep busy.

Come On, Let's Go

Let us make this "Victory Year" indeed. Let us arouse ourselves from our indifference. Let us be awakened to our task. Let us see our opportunity. Let us be loyal to our Christ, to our church, and to our Christian Endeavor.

"This is the victory. . . even our faith."

Your President, E. A. MYER,

Bringinghurst, Indiana.

Echoes From Pennsylvania Endeavorers. By Miss Nora Bracken

Someone has said, "The people of the plains are broad minded and the people of the mountains have high ideals." We are glad for the ideals of the mountain folk and should like to add here that our young people of the Alleghenies have, with their ideals, great enthusiasm. This was demonstrated at our state conference held in Johnstown. Our Endeavorers were at the front.

Our first Endeavor session, which was the general session, convened on Wednesday afternoon. We had a large attendance. During the early part of the session, the work for the coming year was presented, by the state officers. The United Christian Endeavor Challenge with its Loyalty Campaign and Service Themes found a hearty welcome among the people. An address "The Christian Endeavor Society Back of the Church Service" fell to the lot of Rev. Ed. Miller. If any one can stir up "P E P" it is "Brother Ed." And he did it. He not only spoke of the Christian Endeavor back of the church, but he turned his subject around and emphasized the necessity of the church back of the Christian Endeavor. Here is where many of our churches fall short, they fail to back up the Endeavorers and their work. But I am sure, because of the loyal and hearty response of our pastors and workers that our churches will back up the Endeavorers this year. Mrs. Carl Grosse of Altoona, who was chosen as our western Pennsylvania field worker made her appearance at this hour. She was welcomed by all and will be welcomed in the various churches in the near future.

Rally and Outing

Our Rally and Outing happened to be a Rally and Inning. We had planned an outing on, the most beautiful hill about the city, Westmont. But inclement weather prevented this and we had our supper and a Rally indoors. After we "heard the call from the hills," had anticipated a climb and a hill-top meeting, we were somewhat disappointed when we were prevented from realizing this experience. But once in the midst of our valley we forgot our disappointment as we were lost in interest and enthusiasm along Christian Endeavor lines.

Our toasts and addresses were such that gave us visions of future needs and future usefulness. Miss Minnich spoke to us on Christian Endeavor Loyalty. We then had a challenge from Western Pennsylvania by Rev. Benshoff of Altoona and a challenge from Eastern Pennsylvania by Rev. E. E. Fehnel, of Allentown, who is now our eastern field worker. These challenges in Christian Endeavor activities will bring forth some visible results in our state work in the near future.

Four of our leading men from the Ohio and Indiana districts, Dr. J. Allen Miller, Rev. Charles A. Bame, Rev. E. M. Cobb and Rev. George Baer, were with us and gave us some very helpful thoughts and suggestions. Dr. Miller talked to us about "Life's Work." He not only emphasized the necessity of preparation and consecration for the work of the ministry and of missionary activities but also that of preparation for all professions and occupations in life. Each of us have our work and when we are prepared for it and are consecrated by the Almighty we are truly servants of the Master. "Younger people, no matter what line of work you follow, be sure you are on the Master's side and your service is for him and his Kingdom." Rev. Cobb emphasized the value and the great results of tithing. He proved to us, by illustration from his own congregation that tithing is a duty of every Endeavorer and great blessings are experienced from it. We should like to see every Pennsylvania Endeavorer become a tither. Rev. Bame spoke of our relation to the "Four Year Program." He urged the Endeavorers to strive for the goals. This should be the aim of every society. Rev. George Baer, our Evangelist editor, gave us a picture of two Endeavor societies; the successful society and the unsuccessful society. There he portrayed by an illustration comparing the societies with a train of cars on a railroad. The train starts out at Whooper-up-ville where all societies start. It goes on to the next station, Newcomerstown where new members are taken into the society. Then they glide on to Climaxton, where all the work of the society is running perfectly. The successful society continues to thrive in Climaxton, where all the work of the society is running perfectly. The unsuccessful society becomes weary in well doing and goes on to Disinterest-burg, and not being content there they go on down the hill to Slumpville. Some live in Slumpville for some time and then go on to Deadburg.

What a good illustration this is. Young friends, if we were to come to visit with you, we would find some of you at one of these places and others of you at the other places. Where are you? Where will you be in a few months hence? Strive for Climaxton, will you? We hope we shall find all in this town by September, 1920.

At this Rally we also had greetings from a number of our societies, which show us that we have some live wires. You may be on the lookout for news from some of these wide awake societies, such as: Pittsburgh, Altoona, Johnstown (the third church) and others.

As Endeavorers and officers of Pennsylvania, our aim is "to go over the top." We want to help wipe the "Yellow" from off our Four Year Program chart. May all Christian Endeavorers go forward in the Master's service and gather many sheaves for his Kingdom.

MISSIONS

Home Mission News. By G. C. Carpenter

Happy

Under date of October ninth Miss Elizabeth Haddix, our faithful mission worker at Happy, Kentucky, writes: "Thinking you would be interested in knowing that we had our first converts here last night, I thought that I would write you. We gave an invitation and eight came forward, one middle-aged man, five young men and a boy. We have talked privately with other folks today and we expect them out soon. We are planning on meeting with these converts this evening to talk over some things and to pray, with them and to see what their desire is about going into the church. We believe they will come to the Brethren church. We are praying that we may have a revival here soon and that souls may accept Christ as their personal Savior. We have twenty-five enrolled for night school. Please remember us in your prayers."

Will every one who reads these lines pause right here for definite prayer for a real awakening at Happy. May the Lord bless richly Sisters Haddix and Hillegas.

The Nurse

Sister Verda G. Hade of Waynesboro, Pa., will go to Kentucky to serve as nurse. The Sisterhood of Mary and Martha have assumed her entire support for which the mission board wishes to express their thanks as should also the entire church. May Sister Hade be able to do much good in the name of him who "went about doing good." She is a member of the Brethren church at Waynesboro, where Brother M. A. Witter has been the efficient pastor for some years.

Krypton

On account of illness Sister Rempel was compelled to discontinue the school, which was a disappointment to many of the people.

Several families refused to send their children to the free school. The people appreciate a school where the Bible and prayer have their proper place. There is a possibility that the public school will be taken into our building with the regular public school teacher in charge, but with Sister Rempel teaching Bible to all the children. This would be even better, for under such a plan all the children would receive splendid Bible teaching. We are glad that Sister Rempel is much improved. She writes "we believe the Lord healed, for we could not get a doctor anywhere. Four children raised their hands for prayer in our children's prayer meeting, and several adults raised their hands for prayer in the Sunday evening meeting. Brother Rempel's report of his first month and a half in the Kentucky field is a good one. May the Lord's will be done."

The Kitchen Shower

A suggestion made by Sister Rench of South Bend at Winona led to the appeal for a Kitchen Shower for the dormitory at Lost Creek. A new range will soon be needed and other equipment and any balance that remains will be needed for the installation of the electric lighting system. Mrs. Rench by her own solicitation at Winona and at the Goshen conference secured in cash and pledges $136 which is a splendid showing. Thanks, Sister Rench. In our next report we will tell you how much Sister Hammers of Johnstown succeeded in raising for this fund. Anyone who wishes to add to the Kitchen Shower fund will please send the gift to Wm. A. Gearhart, Dayton, Ohio, where all home mission funds are to be sent. Help light up Riverside.

Revival

ing fine and held up well during my absence at conference time. Our revival is now on, Brother I. D. Bowman preaching, and the prospect is very good." May the Lord give victory in the salvation of many souls.

Stereopticon Slides

Then Kentucky stereopticon lecture was given at the Indiana conference at Goshen by the writer, and about nine hundred people looked and listened intently although the hour was late. The slides were sent at once to Brother Cover at Hagerstown, Maryland, and will be sent from there to Philadelphia to Brother Mc Clain, where Brother Cobb will give the lecture. The slides and lecture are available for use anywhere in the brotherhood. Those who wish to use them should write to Brother Wm. A. Gearhart, Dayton, Ohio.

The Thanksgiving Offering for 1919

Thanksgiving will soon be here and that is the time to go "Over the Top" with a splendid home mission offering in every church in the brotherhood. Watch for the announcement of the goal. Every church should meet the apportionment. Recognition will be given by Brother Gearhart to the churches that reach the goal. The goal is set low and many churches ought to go the second mile. This home mission offering in 1919 ought to be the largest offering the Brethren church has ever given for home missions. Victory depends upon the pastors. Come on, fellow-pastors, let us be worthy leaders in the Lord's army. None of the Thanksgiving offering is used for Kentucky mission work, all of it being used for the home mission work outside of Kentucky in co-operation with the various districts of the church. Yours for victory.

POPLAR GROVE

While writing in behalf of this little band of Christlike people, we want to speak a word of praise for them. I have heard brethren stand on the floor of state and general conference and say that some of the little helpless churches should be marked off the map. I do not wish to preach a sermon on this subject, but I do think it would be a good idea for our district evangelists to visit these weak churches and see how they are and what they need before they suggest that they be crossed off. It would be better to visit them and see what can be done to help them than to blame them so much for not reporting. Luke 10: 30-36 is a good lesson in regard to our treatment of helpless churches as well as helpless men. If my brethren understood the situation they could not stand up and say that Poplar Grove ought to be wiped off the map, when these eight souls have paid within a hundred dollars as much for their pastor as a neighboring church with a hundred members. And Poplar Grove is not asking help from the Mission Board. But they want a pastor and a word in their favor. Their pastor never needs to ask for his salary, he gets it to the cent on time. This church might stand first in attendance and loyalty if it were given the right encouragement, and if it could get an evangelist. But when evangelists will not sell the Gospel for less than $65 a week, there are some small churches that can't have it. It is not much use to talk about the "faith once delivered unto the saints," if we are not going to help the weak churches. We talk about church extension. Brethren, we need to care better for what we have got.

Where churches have pastors better work is done. Follow Brother Beachler and you will find that the greatest gains to college endowment comes where there are pastors. There are but few churches on the Honor Roll for the Evangelist that have no pastors. If Poplar Grove had been on the map and had had a pastor when Brother Beachler was in Indiana, they would and could have set a mark for all the churches. But being pastorless, these people were passed up. Brethren, let us be as friendly in our remarks at conferences as we can, when speaking of the small churches. A real Brethren spirit will give much more gain than the mere name Brethren.

HOMER ANDERSON.

COLLEGE CORNER, INDIANA

We feel that we owe to this church a report through the church paper. The work here has been as good as at the average church. The attendance has been good, but it could have been better. And there are few but must say this about their churches. I have closed my work with them. Brother L. A. Myers is to continue the work. Our prayer is that they may co-operate with Brother Myers and that God may bless them together, for we feel that there is prospects of a good work being done at that place.

HOMER ANDERSON.

MIAMISBURG

For several months back I have also been preaching on alternate Sundays at the Miamisburg church. I never knew any of these brethren before, but am finding them to be pretty fine people. Interest seems to be growing and I should be very pleased to announce that this little congregation, made famous by Brother Beachler, and served by such a galaxy of preaching lights as Mason, Tombaugh, Shively, Ashman, Benshoff, Lambert, McClain, and others, should preserve the heritage left by some who have gone to glory, and hire a pastor to live and work with them on full time.

In our so earnest prayers for the opening up of new fields of labor, let us not forget to pray for the preservation of long since established churches, which are finding it difficult to hold their own.

M. M. HOOVER.

37 S. Kilmer St., Dayton, Ohio.

CANTON, OHIO BRIEFS

I have not kept track of how long it has been since any word has appeared from Canton, but the editor says "A good while," so perhaps it were well to report. The work here has experienced no remarkable increase in numerical growth. However since last report we have received one by baptism and one by letter. The attendance at the services continues to hold up well, despite all the attractions of a large city. The evening audiences are not as large as the morning, the distance which many have to come tending to cut their attendance to one service a day, and that preferably the morning hour.

The Bible school is doing very good work, considering the difficulties attendant upon holding several classes in one room. A more convenient arrangement of the classes would increase the attendance in a number of the classes of the school. The Children's Day and Rally Day exercises were both well attended, an increase in attendance at the Bible school marking each Sabbath. The customary problem faces us in the Canton school, as elsewhere, of getting and keeping competent teachers—or if not so competent, at least faithful. The school has adopted the Graded International Lessons for the younger scholars, and this will help somewhat in solving the substitute teacher problem.

The Women's Missionary Society continues to hold its sessions regularly, and is always ready to respond to calls for financial aid at home or abroad. They did not attain to the status of a "Standard" society last year, but only because of the epidemic cutting the number of meetings held during the year. Undoubtedly they will be among the successful ones next time.

The Christian Endeavor society continues to tax the ingenuity of preacher, officers and others to maintain the interest. Of course there are the faithful few, as in all societies, and they are as loyal as anyone could be, and with them leading the work continues to have an existence. But how much better if some others—who could—would become actively identified with the work. Encouragement would be given the faithful ones and new power be acquired by them through the exercise of the talents God has given them.

The congregation is now looking forward to the coming of the state conference and the opening of the evangelistic campaign under the leadership of Elder W. S. Bell. The members are making preparations to give the visiting delegates the best sort of welcome they know how to provide. The matter of entertaining a conference in a city as large as Canton, with a membership scattered over a territory four miles square, is not as easy as in smaller places, but you will be cared for if you come. And, too, we crave the prayers of the brotherhood that God will richly bless the congregation here and the evangelist as together we enter into a campaign against the strongholds of sin. Last year we were hindered from having a campaign because of the "flu," and we are hoping for rich blessings this year as we seek to glorify the Master and win souls for his kingdom.

We shall endeavor to send another communication to the Evangelist at the close of the revival, and we will but pray that we may have reasons for rejoicing and encouragement for the whole brotherhood.

Fraternally,

DYOLL BELOTE.

MINUTES OF THE EIGHTH ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCHES OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

(Conclusion)

Tuesday, 7:30 P. M. The first thirty minutes of the session were spent in worship in song and prayer led by Prof. Stout. The audience was favored by a solo from the leader. At 8 o'clock Rev. F. J. Reagan of Turlock, California, brought the first of his messages on Hebrews. He used as his subject, "Perfecting the Saints Through a Perpetual Priesthood." An outline of his remarks follows:

The Epistle to the Hebrews speaks of a deliverance from the power of sin. God does more than impute righteousness. He imparts. We are not being saved, we are saved. Your salvation depends on God; not your faithfulness but his. Sin shall not have dominion over you because you are not under law but under grace. God exalts Jesus above everything. Jesus made purification. He delivers and restores fellowship with God. He is set down at the right hand of God the Father.

Wednesday Morning, July 23,

The session opened with worship in song, Scripture and prayer. Dr. Miller brought his third message on "The Person and Work of Jesus Christ," the special subject being "The Lord of Glory." The following are the points made in the address: The God-head was not incarnate, but the Son of God was; the purpose of the incarnation was to destroy the works of the devil; Jesus lived as no one ever lived and died as no one ever died; glory is the matchlessness of character; to those of us who belong to Christ whatever happens is all right as everything is moving toward the goal for us; Jesus predicted his own resurrection; the apostles believed it; Jesus came to earth by birth and passed out by ascension. The days that were great days with Jesus were: The day he turned water into wine and showed the people he was God; the day he came from the desert with the fullness of the Holy Spirit on him; the day he was baptized. There is to be another great day when he comes as King of glory.

Francis J. Reagan followed with a study of the Hebrews, using as his subject, "Jesus as Mediator and Surety of a New Covenant." Among other things he emphasized the following: God makes all his covenants with Israel. The new covenant is of grace. Grace is the Omnipotent going out in works. We lack power to do God's will. We promise but we do not have the ability to do God's will. Sanctification is human work, Justification is God's work. In the New Covenant we have our sins forgotten, law written in hearts, and restored fellowship.

Wednesday Afternoon, 2:00

The session opened with service in song conducted by Prof. Stout. At this time Chas. H. Ashman brought the fourth of his prophetic addresses on "Who and What is the Anti-Christ." He said: "Revelations 19 gives an account of the battle of Armageddon. This is the time when Christ is coming to set up his kingdom. Anti-Christ means the counterfeit of Christ. The number seven is God's number of perfection. The number six is man's number for perfection. This day is strictly a commercial day; it is not making poets, artists, musicians nor Christians. The Anti-Christ will be a statesman, a king of commerce, an orator. Supernatural power will be given him. The church must be removed before the Anti-Christ will appear."

After a short intermission L. S. Bauman gave an address on "A Study in Missions." The points emphasized follow: The church is a body of believers which the Lord is calling out from among the world. A thing never fails until it fails to accomplish the thing for which it was created. The church is not a failure because it was never intended to be the kingdom of this world and run the world.

Everybody and all religions want Jesus' spirit but don't want him. It is his personality we want. The evangelism of the world is the task of the church.

Wednesday Evening 7:00 O'clock.

After a season of worship in song and prayer under the leadership of Prof. Stout, Dr. Fitzwater brought the third of his addresses on "The First Days of the World and the Last"—the specific subject being "The Days of Noah." He reminded the audience that the first child was born not in Eden but out of Eden. The children were begotten in the likeness and image of the parents. Cain and Abel were types of two classes of men. Abel was a type of a man of humble faith and Cain of a man of pride. Enoch, when a son was born to him began to walk with God. He continued to walk with God for 300 years. Enoch was a believer in the coming of the Lord. Enoch walked with God and God took him that he might escape the awful judgment that came to the people in the time of Noah. The two streams of the godly and the ungodly come together again as recorded in Genesis 6. God is a long-suffering God; this accounts for the long-delayed judgment of this world.

Thursday Morning—9:30 O'clock

After a short song service Dr. Miller began his series of addresses on "The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit." At this time he developed the special topic of "The Advent of the Spirit." He stressed these points. The Holy Spirit did not come into the world to display his power but to show Jesus. The Holy Spirit is recognized in both the Old and the New Testament. Prophecy came but by the Holy Spirit and not by the will of man. Prophecy was a spiritual gift to Israel.

During the "Bible Hour" Dr. Fitzwater continued his study on the book of Romans. "We deserve to die, every one of us but Jesus Christ deserves the best heaven has. In chapters 5, 6, 7, 8, we have the results of justification. He noted that all the sins of the world came through one man and all the blessings came by one man, Jesus. Chapter 6:1-14 teaches that the Christian has died with Christ and has risen to walk in newness of life. The one who is regenerated does not practice sin. The Christian is free from the law of sin and death. Law is the knowledge of sin. The Holy Spirit can make you master over your besetting sin. God does everything for his people's good."

Thursday 2:00 P. M.

Prof. Stout again led in a service of song. Rev. Ashman brought the fifth of his prophetic addresses. His subject was, "The Great Apostasy."

"Skeptics, heretics, and fanatics work in the church. Skeptics work in the worldly class. Heretics work among the head religionists. Fanatics work in the minds of those who are nervous and of one-track minds. The apostasy of these days denies the person and work of Jesus Christ; the death of Christ; takes away the atonement through his blood; denies the miracles; denies the revelation of God. Machinery and organization have begun to take the place in the church instead of the Holy Spirit."

The afternoon Bible hour was used by Dr. Fitzwater in a continuation of the study of Romans. He said: "All things work together for good to them that love the Lord" is the greatest optimism. There is a remnant of Israel being saved. When Adam failed the whole world failed. The fall of the Jews meant salvation for the Gentiles. Jesus Christ is the King of the Jews. God's plan is not failing but is being worked out. The unchangeableness of God's mind proves that all Israel is going to be saved." The study for this hour was from chapters 9, 10, 11.

Thursday 7:00 P. M.

After the usual devotion in prayer and song Dr. Miller brought the second address on "The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit" using for his special topic "The Spirit-Witness." Among other things he stated: "The Holy Spirit will enlighten the church and glorify Jesus Christ. The Holy Spirit is Comforter, Helper, but more. The Holy Spirit witnessed on Pentecost. He testified in Peter's preaching. The Holy Spirit is to convict the world and the glory of the Lord is seen in the condemnation and conviction of the world."

Friday, 9:30 A. M.

At this session Dr. Fitzwater finished his study on Romans. He conducted a short review of the matter already covered and continued by saying: "The first eleven chapters are doctrinal while the last three are practical. He further stated that consecration belongs to God and no renewed man ever sins willingly." He closed by saying that Romans is the heart of Christianity.

The Study in Romans was followed by the third of Brother Reagan's studies on the Epistle to the Hebrews from the subject, "Fading Forms and Fullness of Faith." Among the points made these received special emphasis. The one trouble with the church today is that we do not know what belongs to us. Faith feeds on facts. One condition to our enjoying everything is to have faith in God. Don't try to run the universe for God. He is able to run it himself. He suggested "The Christian's Secret of a Happy Life" by Anna Whitehall Smith as a good book for Christians to read.

Friday 2:00 P. M.

At this time Dr. Miller brought the last of his studies on "The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit" considering the Holy Spirit as "The Unfailing Friend in Need." Among the many other things said I note the following: "The Holy Spirit is a person; he has all the attributes of a personality; The Holy Spirit is spoken of 300 times in the New Testament; communion with the Holy Spirit is the thing that gives us peace and joy, and will give a victorious life."

The second address of the afternoon was brought by Elder L. S. Bauman in which he answered the question, "Is Romanism Christianity?" He used as his text Revelations 22:18-19. He said: "There is just as much saving power in Buddhism as there is in South American Catholicism; wherever you find a true people you will find them reading the Word of God; Catholics never read the Word. Christians believe we have one mediator between God and man; Catholics say that intercession can be made through the departed saints and especially through the Virgin Mary; only those who are protected by Mary can be saved; they thus place a woman above God; sixty percent of the women of South America do not know what morality means; if Romanism is Christian it has certainly lost its salt."

Friday 7:30 P. M.

After a half hour spent in song service under the direction of the conference song leader, Prof. Stout, Dr. Fitzwater brought his interesting and helpful message on "The First League of Nations." "The First League of Nations" was an organized effort to get rid of God. A tower was built as a sign. The first league of nations failed because it was without God. The seat of the first league of nations was at Babylon."

The second address of the evening session was by C. H. Ashman on the subject "Dismissing the Signs of the Times." The text used is found in Matthew 16: 2, 3. A great number of scriptures were cited and among the interesting things said were those relative to the Jews. He reminded the people that the reason for the Jew's blindness was that they had rejected the Old Testament scriptures and were confused in two lines of prophecy. He also reminded the audience that every step of the Jews is foretold in prophecy, and that the Jews are the leading people in literature, art, finance, and science, and that they are the purest race in existence.

Saturday, July 26

There was no forenoon session of the conference, the morning hour being given over to rest and recreation. At 2:30 P. M. the conference met in its final business session. Only the items of the most general interest are given in this report.

The Committee on credentials made a final report. They reported a total of 46 lay and 17 ministerial delegates. The report of the committee appointed to consider the holding of a convention for the discussion of the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and Missionary activities of the church submitted a report recommending that such a convention be held. The report was accepted and the delegates voted to hold the convention at Whittier some time during the last week of October.

At this point J. C. Beal was elected trustee of Ashland College. A vote of thanks was given the Long Beach church for their kindness and hospitality and a rising vote of thanks was given the speakers of the conference.

Dr. Wall, conference secretary gave an itemized statement of the expenses of the conference, showing that a total of $731.40 had been expended.

On motion it was decided that the apportionments for the conference expenses for next year be the same as last year but that the matter be referred to the individual churches for approval.

The apportionments for district mission work were voted the same as for the past year.

Sunday, July 27

Sunday was the closing day of the conference and was a day replete with good things. The Sunday school was in charge of the regular officers. The sermon of the morning was preached by Chas. H. Ashman. He used as his subject, "The Sins of the Saints." He emphasized the following points: There are two natures in every true believer. In every believer there remains the ability to sin; every believer is responsible not to sin. God will keep us but he is not able to keep us against our wills. The fact remains that every believer does sin. When the Christian sins he has an advocate with the Father and he will forgive if we ask. God has made it possible that every believer does not have to sin. When the Christian sins his communion is broken; his joy is gone; power for service is weakened; continuing in sin means death; his rewards will be less.

The sermon of the afternoon was preached by Dr. Miller. He used as his text Romans 8:1. A brief outline follows: Noise and emotionalism is not spirituality. A spiritual man is one who has the Spirit as a companion and friend and is walking by his side all the time. Intellect is no sign of spirituality. Everything that is seen or heard makes an impression and only the power of the grace of God can take it away. You are living the spiritual life when you are living in harmony with the Word of God. It took the New Testament scriptures with the inspiration of God to give us a word for love—CHARITY. Make me a blessing should be our daily prayer.

The Christian Endeavor societies met for their regular meetings. The Intermediates were led by Lional Mael. A reading was given by Fern McClain and Hazel Shively sang a solo. The other societies had equally as interesting and helpful programs. At 8 P. M., Dr. Fitzwater brought the concluding message on "The Last League of Nations." The theme is found in Psalms 2:1-9 and Daniel 7 was also referred to. Out of what he said the following are given: "God called Abraham out from the Babel builders and made him the head of a race. This race was to be the channel through which the Redeemer of the race was to come. Israel put their eyes on themselves instead of God and the needy world and so failed. No one ever went crazy studying prophecy but lots of crazy people study prophecy. Education never makes a man a fool but lots of fools are educated and education brings out what is in one and it makes him a bigger fool, of course. Governments today are carried on the plane of the beastly and their symbols are of beasts and birds of prey. The 'little horn' is 'the man of sin' and as soon as he is revealed the saints will be caught up. Christ is the 'stone' of Daniel. The Anti-Christ will be the merchant prince. Every one living will have to be branded with the seal of the Anti-Christ to be able to do business. The Jews will enter into a covenant with the first president of the League of Nations but the covenant will be broken. Then will come the day of great tribulation when the Lord will be revealed and they shall know him as their Lord. The object of the League of Nations will be to turn God out of the universe and do things in their own way. The only hope for this world is the coming of the Son of God."

The speaker closed with an earnest appeal to the sinner.

With the pronouncing of the benediction a conference of great worth and influence was brought to a close.

HAZEL SHIVELY, Secretary.

COLLEGE NOTES

It has been customary for some years past, for the faculty of the College to hold a reception for the students at the opening of the school year. This year, however, the general plan was changed and we had what might properly be called an open house. Every room in the college building was lighted, cleaned, and open. Visitors were shown through every room from President's office even to the Bursar's office where the financial books of the college and the money are kept. About three hundred were present and for the first time, some of the citizens of Ashland became aware of what we have and what we are doing on the Hill.

The Library was decorated with palms, ferns, pennants, and flowers. During the earlier part of the evening a five-piece orchestra played after which a short program was rendered. Many expressed the wish that such events should occur at the opening of every semester rather than at the beginning of the school year only.

Since the opening of the college, the writer was privileged to attend the conference of both the Indiana and Iliokota churches. I was impressed by the fine spirit exhibited at both places and can not refrain from expressing my deep appreciation for the interest expressed at both places in the present work of the College.

The enrollment grows steadily and before the vacation for the holidays, a fuller statement of the enrollment will be made.

Last Sunday, the members of the local congregation invited every non-resident student into their homes for dinner. This was a splendid innovation and one which the students of the college greatly appreciated. It is hoped that this bit of hospitality will serve to tighten the bonds of unity between the church here and the college.

The Convocation services held the second Sunday after the college opened, were impressive and well attended. It might be said in this connection that Ashland has never had a finer spirited student body than is here this present year. Unless all signs fail, this will be a year of great profit, judged from the spiritual standpoint. It certainly is not for the best to over-urge the spiritual in a college like this, and yet the spiritual easily takes precedence over all else. This is the ideal for which Ashland firmly stands.

Athletics. There is no football at the college. It did not seem best to encourage it, but basketball promises well now. The college has a physical director for men and one for the women of the school, and these two instructors are quite able to hold the athletic interests of the school to their rightful place.

Debate. Prospects for a series of inter-collegiate debates are bright. Ashland has had a glorious history in intercollegiate debating in the past and it is ardently hoped that this year may see another victory for Ashland.

The new heating system is working well under the skillful direction of Mr. Landry. It looks now as if the work of the college would not be interfered with on account of heat. Furthermore, every floor in the building has been dressed with a special filler and now after more than forty years' use they are in good shape.

The Seminary Quarterly is ready for the press.

Pray for the work of your college and seminary.

SIDNEY, INDIANA

The following people from Sidney and vicinity motored to the home of Rev. D. A. Hopkins and wife at Twelve Mile, Indiana. Brother Hopkins preached for the Sidney Brethren people for nine years, but owing to failing health had to give up the ministry. He will soon be 74 and his wife is 75.

A basket dinner was enjoyed on the beautiful lawn. Brother and Sister Hopkins take great interest in their home. Just before leaving ice cream was served by the crowd, after which Brother Charles Tennant entertained the crowd with some instrumental music.

Those present were: Charles Tennant and wife, Frank Brown and wife, Ancie Sellers, wife and daughter; Samuel Simmons, wife and two children; Joe Kiner and son, Allie Heckman, wife and daughter; Curtis Sisk and wife, Cal. Johns and wife, Charles Heeter and wife, Adam Grisso, William Vance, Mrs. Ellis Stoncburner, Mrs. L. W. Sick, Mrs. Nick Gripe.

In the afternoon, Dr. Warvel and wife, Jonah Warvel and wife and Mrs. Jonah Warvel's mother from North Manchester, called. Brother and Sister Hopkins seemed to be so glad to be remembered by so many of the Sidney people. All enjoyed the day and returned to their homes, wishing Brother and Sister Hopkins many more happy meetings like this.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Four more new members have been added to our membership very recently, one by relation and three by baptism. Two of these were a brother and sister who have been attending our Sunday school. The family moved away to the western part of the city, but their attachment to our church brings them back each week to worship with us.

The attendance at prayer meeting during the summer has been excellent, showing that our people are not willing to miss any of the services; and this testifies also to the interesting way in which our pastor, Brother Jennings, conducts the midweek services.

Not long since the membership planned a "pounding" for the pastor and his good wife. They went in on a Friday evening, took them completely by surprise, had a fine social time and filled up the larder and store-room with good things for the table.

The Secretary's reports for the Sunday school each week show a fine increase in both attendance and offerings over what it was a year ago. We have some good faithful teachers and officers who are putting their thought, time and all possible energy into this work. We are assured the question of a growing school is the question of leadership.

DEAR BRETHREN:

Some time ago I wrote an article in the Evangelist, an appeal for aid for Brother A. E. Baker, who is afflicted. And in response to this to date I have received in all twenty dollars, and on his return home from the Moor Mud Bath Institution at Waukesha, Wisconsin, I landed the twenty dollars over to him. It may be many, more weeks before he can be able to do any work and knowing that his coal bin and potato bin are empty, I now ask the dear pastors to bring this before their congregations and see if a snug little sum cannot be forthcoming. Thanking all those that have already given and asking the prayers of the brethren everywhere in his behalf, I will say that any money sent to the writer will be handed to the proper person. Please address me for the present at Mondoir, Wisconsin, Rural Route 5, Box 113, instead of 613 Churchhill Street, Eau Claire.

J. A. BAKER.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The good work continues in the Ohio churches. Another congregation has been canvassed and has joined that long list of churches which have gone over the top. This time it is Zion Hill which is to heard from, and it is a fine report we are permitted to give for this place. It is always a source of pleasure to me to be able to give good reports, just as I know it is a source of pleasure to a congregation, when it has made good to read that good report. On the other hand, I have a notion that a congregation that falls down in this great cause must feel very much as an individual feels who has played slacker and allowed his brethren to lift the load and make the good showing—sort of mean, and small, and cheap. But I am glad to say that the Zion Hill report is not small, or mean, or cheap. It is good. Many of the Zion Hill people did their very best. If all had done this the report would still be better.

Zion Hill is another one of our country congregations. And yet, Zion Hill differs in certain respects from any other congregation I have visited. For instance, while this is a country church it nevertheless has members living in at least four nearby towns. Moreover, I believe the Zion Hill membership represents a more scattered condition than I have seen anywhere unless it would be Fremont, Ohio. I believe the canvass of this congregation involved more automobile riding than I have had to do in any other one church. Surely there is unmistakable denominational loyalty at Zion Hill, else their membership would not hold together as it does in spite of long distances to church. Yet again, the Zion Hill people worship in a union building. But their need for a larger and better building all their own is very keenly felt in the congregation and judging from present indications definite steps will be taken before a very great while in the direction of a new building.

Now then, it is this last consideration I have mentioned that adds significance to the Zion Hill report. Confronted with the necessity of providing a new church building, Zion Hill went $2,000 for endowment. I call that a fine record indeed.

Brother A. L. Lynn is the pastor of this people and they love him and he is doing good work. Brother Lynn is still in college and goes to this point every two weeks. There are at least six students at the present time in Ashland College from Zion Hill, two of whom are theologs. Nor has there been any time during the years when this congregation has not been represented in the student-body of our school. Thus Zion Hill not only made a substantial investment in permanent endowment but she also sends her young people to our own school.

In this canvass a brother and his wife enlisted for $500. This makes the second $500 gift so far in Ohio. I hope and pray that many in good, rich, prosperous Ohio will step into the $500 or $1,000 class. Ohio is doing fine; but if the grand totals for Ohio are what they ought to be some folks shall have to get into the heavy class. We also had a $250 gift here, and a $150 gift, and the rest came in sums from that on down.

As much as I have already written I cannot speak at length of the rare and genuine hospitality extended to me on every hand. It was simply the very freest one could wish to find. I wish I could mention by name every person who was kind to me but this I must not do in this report which is already too long. But I must mention Brethren Fouch, Rutt, Edwin and Reuben Steiner—four of God's noblemen who put their automobiles at my disposal and counted neither time nor gasoline, any consideration as they took Lynn and me up and down the roads of Wayne county, sometimes at terrific speed, nor were the roads always smooth either. But we had a frightful area to cover in a limited time and haste was the word constantly in our minds.

I preached to splendid, sympathetic audiences night after night. And I shall remember with a lot of pleasure the Zion Hill canvass. May God richly bless the Zion Hill people.

This puts the mercury now at $119,000. Ankenytown will next be heard from.

Ontario; Ohio and the General Prohibition Situation

The last five years have witnessed not only the defeat of Prussianism, but the almost complete overthrow of the liquor traffic. Europe was the battle ground of the former, while America has been the scene of the latter and equally fiercely waged conflict. Both of the great conflicts have been world-wide in their scope and significance. In both the completeness of the victory depends upon America as much as upon any other country. At present the national law-making body of our own beloved land has been "halting between two opinions," but on the prohibition question it has spoken with decision. But with that the conflict is not ended. On the very verge of final victory, when it seemed that all that was necessary was to reap the fruits, we find John Barleycorn in desperation endeavoring to avert complete disaster and to prepare for a "come back." He had two key positions—Ontario and Ohio. In the former complete victory was gained by the forces of righteousness and in the latter the decision is yet to be reached.

The province of Ontario has been dry, by provincial enactment since 1916. But the wets attempted to reserve the dry decision of three years ago and bring the liquor traffic back into the province under the protection of law. They attacked prohibition in Ontario as in Ohio upon four distinct points. They tried to get popular approval of 2.50 percent beer and in three proposals sought endorsement of government sale of liquor. These pro-liquor proposals were carefully sugar-coated to catch the unwary, but the intelligent voters saw through the subterfuge and marked their ballots in such a way as to count most for sobriety, thrift, prosperity and righteousness. Ontario saw that while the wets offered four distinct proposals, they had but one purpose in them all, namely, the bringing of the saloon back under the protection of law. And the liquor interests were beaten at every point.

In Ontario the wets claimed that the soldiers were very much grieved that the people at home had taken advantage of them while they were serving their country across the seas by driving out the liquor traffic. They claimed that the soldiers who offered their lives upon the altar of a righteous cause were friends of their cause—the right to manufacture criminals and violate law at will. They declared they would defend the rights of the soldiers by giving them a chance to vote a reprieve to the sentence of John Barleycorn, if not indeed to grant him a "clean bill of health." But on the 20th of October, the heroes of the world war succeeded by the help of the other electors in effectively repudiating the slander that had been heaped upon them. Doubtless there were among them some who were friends of the liquor traffic, but the proportion was no larger, if as large, than it was among those who remained at home. Ontario not only completely refuted that slander, but left no doubt in the mind of the world as to its attitude towards liquor. Its final decision is that the saloon is out and out to stay.

The conflict in Ohio is very similar, but even more critical. On the 4th of November the electors of the state will vote on four distinct issues brought forward by the liquor element. The fact that four separate and distinct attempts are made to reverse last year's majority decision in favor of prohibition has complicated matters and is calculated to confuse the voters. It is not likely that the good citizens of Ohio will be deceived by this trick of the liquor men. They have come to understand enough about the business principles of the saloon gang to know that the only sensible thing to do with anything that the champions of this unrighteous business propose is to oppose it. And there need be little fear entertained about the decision of the majority if the men who oppose the saloons go to the polls. The one big danger of defeat is indifference. If prohibition is lost it will be lost by the stay-at-home dry voter. And if defeat should come to the temperance cause in Ohio it would be a calamity, because the result would effect not only Ohio but the whole country.

Ohio is generally considered the key state in the Union from a political standpoint; it is the political weather-cock of the country. The decisions of no single state have greater influence on the entire country than those of Ohio. If Ohio should reverse her decision of last year and repudiate the actions of her legislature and ignore the proposals of Congress, the guardians of the saloon would say, and with reason, that the late sentiment against the saloon was only a war spasm and that the reaction had come. They would say, too, that the men who defended the sacred rights of mankind in the world war were champions of "personal liberty" and the liquor traffic. They would say that national prohibition is not what the people of the land want, and, using Ohio as a fulcrum, would pry the Eighteenth Amendment loose from the constitution of the United States. That is their faint hope, their last-ditch effort.

Mr. J. A. White, Ohio Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, says concerning this effort, "The dries are awake to the fact that if the United States supreme court sustains the Ohio supreme court in federal prohibition amendment is subject to a referendum, and that its ruling that the action of the general assembly in ratifying the if ten states out of the fifteen have initiative and referendum provisions then fail to ratify, national prohibition will be defeated." He further says, "If the brewers' claim is correct that the state can define intoxicants as containing 2 and 3-4 percent alcohol, and that this decision, if made, will prevail over the federal law limiting intoxicants to 1-2 of 1 percent, then beer would be on the soft drink list, and voters of Ohio are awake to the tragedy that will follow when school children will come home drunk. This phase of the question is bound to affect the vote on the wet proposal to define intoxicants."

"It is the hope of the wets that they will be able to win his proposal so that they can make the definition of intoxicants an issue in the election of congressmen and senators. They will make Ohio the battle ground for a 'national comeback' if they are successful."

Mr. White said further, basing his prediction upon the result of a poll just completed in Ohio counties, and upon a review of the registration figures, that the wets have miscalculated in basing their claim for victory on the votes of 265,000 returned soldiers. No increase in such proportions is shown in the wet districts, he said, while registration in dry wards. "The returned soldier realizes that while he was in France fighting, the brewery was financing the German-American Alliance," said Mr. White. "I heard that best expressed by one such soldier, who said, 'Beer is not tonic, it is Teutonic.'"

No doubt the liquor men are making big miscalculations, and it is generally believed that they will be beaten in Rooseveltian style, "to a frazzle," at the polls. But the issue is too serious and the consequences too far-reaching to run any risk of losing the battle by over-confidence and indifference. The safety of the entire country is dependent on a victory in Ohio this fall; and we be to any professed Christian who will assume the responsibility of not voting with such issues at stake. Ontario refused to have anything further to do with the saloon, and we must believe there were many church members there who followed Christ to the poles on their election day. We believe that Ohio church members are not less truly Christian and no less honestly patriotic. We must keep Ohio dry.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We are pleased to hear again from our reporter at Oak Hill, West Virginia, Miss Essie Boothe, who is very faithful in keeping us informed as to the progress of the work at that place.

Brother Homer Anderson writes from Williamsburg, Iowa, where he is now located. He is in the midst of a revival and we shall hope to learn of good results. May God bless him in his ministry at that place.

Brother Earl Flora, pastor of the Brethren church at Beaver City, Nebraska, reports the work in his charge in good condition. He has not been on the field long, but the good people there are lining up behind him in a noble way, and under his consecrated leadership they will doubtless be led on to greater things.

Don't forget to read the "Mission" page. Brother Carpenter has something good as usual and Brother Gearhart states that he is now nicely located at 906 Conover Building, Dayton, Ohio, and is giving his entire time to plans for a banner Home Mission offering. Remember all monies are to be sent to him.

Brother Drushal tells of an evangelistic campaign recently conducted at Lost Creek by Brother I. D. Bowman, of Philadelphia, who is now giving his entire time to evangelistic work. The meeting resulted in the conversion of many souls, some of which will add much strength to the church at that place.

It has been a good while since the Evangelist family has had the pleasure of reading a report from the pen of Brother W. H. Miller. He tells of his work at Williamsburg, Iowa, which he has recently closed. The report shows commendable progress, and as he was leaving his people very appropriately expressed the high esteem in which they held him. He is now located at Oak Hill, West Virginia.

Brother L. G. Wood writes concerning the prosperous and promising rural church at Mathias, West Virginia. He leaves the report of the evangelistic meeting which he held to be made by another, and he writes to make us more acquainted with the people, the place and the promise of the Mathias church, which, he informs us, is about ten years old. These people are growing in their loyalty to all interests of the church, among which is The Brethren Evangelist.

The "Sparks from Busy Pittsburgh" are quite cheering. We have not had the pleasure of hearing from this part of the Lord's vineyard for several months, but it will be noted that they have been very busy though they have not been talking. The entire brotherhood will rejoice in the splendid progress that the Pittsburgh church has made. It speaks well of the leadership of the pastor and also of the whole-hearted support given him by the people there. We will look with interest for the good reports that we are sure will be forthcoming from this good people in the future.

The evangelistic campaign now in progress in the First church of Philadelphia is already showing splendid results, as you will notice by the brief report in this week's issue, and it is hoped that that sturdy old church that has championed the Brethren cause in the Third city of the land for so long will realize its highest hopes. With two such congenial yoke-fellows as Brethren Cobb and McClain to lead the forces, we can rightfully expect splendid results.

"Doings at Dayton" will be read with interest, but there have been so many things doing that it would be impossible to even hint at all of them. Brother Teeter is a very faithful recorder of the events of that big growing church and writes with much enthusiasm. If there is one thing which we might mention among the many reported, it is the reception by the Dayton church of a large number of the Bear Creek members, occasioned by the disbanding of the Bear Creek church. May this union be mutually helpful. It is never pleasant to learn of the disbanding of an established church, but the sting is taken out of the regret when we know that the members are not to be lost to the Brethren faith, and especially in this case when the old church has given its life to the strength of other Brethren churches. While the old Bear Creek congregation loses its separate existence, it gains a good fold and a good shepherd.

The apportionment for the General Home Mission offering last year was 35 cents per member, and Brother Gearhart's first article stated that the same apportionment would hold for this year, but a later consideration by the Board decided to place it at 40 cents per. Any one who is at all acquainted with the missionary needs and opportunities of our church will agree that even 40 cents is very small. But churches are not required to limit their gifts to that amount; they are simply urged not to go below that, as that is the smallest amount on which the work planned can be carried on. If after reading Brother George Rouk's statement of the needs of the Kanemorado district, and then realizing that there are doubtless just as pressing needs and glowing opportunities in every other district, you think the Home Board can carry on their work effectively on less than 40 cents per member, you will doubtless be excused from giving the 40 cents until your vision has been enlarged. EVERY CHURCH OUGHT TO AVERAGE NOT LESS THAN 40 CENTS PER MEMBER AT THE THANKSGIVING OFFERING.

Ohio is still "firing up" and is getting under way with a high pressure of steam, while the engineer, Brother Beachler, is opening up the throttle and steering her straight ahead toward the goal. When the campaign, for college endowment first started in Ohio we made the suggestion that Ohio ought not do any less than Indiana and might well set her goal at least at $30,000. And now the campaign director is talking about Ohio not only going around Indiana, but hustling for Pennsylvania's place. And it seems that every Ohio church is doing its best to make such a thing possible. Ankenytown comes with a mighty nice stroke for Ashland College. Brother Beachler says some fine things about this country congregation and our acquaintance with some of the members of that loyal little church makes us believe that what he says is true. We want to congratulate Ankenytown for the splendid showing they made on the endowment thermometer. And while we are "talking" about Ohio and the endowment campaign, we wish to correct an error in a previous report of the Campaign Secretary. He meant to say, "I am finding that Ohio folks are not only not scared and nervous, but they are determined to do their whole part in this great enterprise," whereas the error made him say, "I am finding that Ohio folks are not only scared and nervous, but etc.," leaving out the second not, which made him say the opposite from what he intended. The Evangelist begs the pardon of both Beachler and the Ohio churches.

ON TO CANTON

The Ohio conference to be held at Canton, November 4 to 7 ought to be the occasion for the assembling of the largest number of Ohio Brethren that have ever gotten together. A good program is prepared, a warm welcome awaits every delegate according to word from Brother Belote and the business of the church is calling urgently for attention. Every church should feel itself duty bound to be represented, and if possible should send a full quota of delegates.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

To the Work. By W. S. Bell, Director of Goals 1-3

If I were to introduce this article with a song I would select, "To the work! To the work! There is labor for all." This program is now four years old and we are on the "home stretch." This year will tell the story of victory or defeat. We are not in need of explanation or exhortation as much we need action. If this is to be a VICTORY YEAR, we need to put some warm blood action into this program all along the line. Altogether let us line up for the final drive and cross the GOAL LINES for a TOUCH DOWN.

GOAL NUMBER ONE

The Goal.—A quickening of the spiritual life of every member of the church.

How reached.—by a 10 percent increase in attendance, or 25 percent of the members attending prayer meeting.

No church should fail to make this for there is no reason why you should not, unless spiritually dead, and if that is the case, have a resurrection or erect a tombstone. This goal means that if 25 percent of the members are not attending prayer meeting, get busy and if you make a 10 percent increase over the attendance you have been having you make the goal anyway.

Prayer is vital to the Christian faith and work. It is the soul breathing in God and exhaling self. There can be no spiritual power in the church member's life or in the church that is not in daily contact with God.

Get out of the rut.—If you are in one in conducting your prayer meeting. Get live spiritual leaders. As pastor prepare a fifteen or twenty minute Bible study. Make the prayer meeting the most attractive and interesting service of the church. Change your program and do things a little differently at times. Make your prayer service a spiritual feast, the believers meeting of fellowship and prayer. SEE THAT YOUR CHURCH REACHES GOAL NUMBER ONE.

GOAL NUMBER TWO

The goal.—A deepening of the spiritual life of every member of the church.

How reached.—By having 75 percent of the members at communion service during year.

Why not? Most of our churches hold two communion services annually and at these services at least 75 percent of the members of each church should be present. The goal demands that during the year there should be 75 percent of the members present. A good way to keep tab on this to have a little slip of paper at each plate at the communion table and request that those present place their name on the slip, these can be gathered up and the pastor can keep a complete record of those who attend and trace up the delinquent ones.

This service was given by our Lord and he has asked his followers to observe it in REMEMBRANCE OF HIM. His blessing is promised upon those who keep the ordinances that he gave. CAN ANY OF US AFFORD TO DENY OURSELVES OF THESE PRIVILEGES? He said, "if ye love me, keep my commandments," and again, "Why call ye me, Lord! Lord and do not the things I command you?" This is the love of God that we keep his commandments and his commandments are not grievous." Lord increase our faith and love to thee.

Make the communion services this coming year the big services of your church. See to it that the membership are visited and are informed as to when service will be held! Let not a single church fail to make GOAL TWO.

GOAL NUMBER THREE

The goal.—The Zealous Heralding of our Distinctive Plea, Principles, and Practices.

How reached.—Ministers using 75 percent of Four Year Program subjects.

This is up to you preachers and we have a right to expect you to be in the front line trenches, for you are the leaders; if you fail, the Program fails, for it is up to you to put it across.

The future of the Brethren church depends upon her message and an aggressive campaign in making it known to others. We have a place in the great Christian conquest if we stand true to our colors, to the Christ and the Bible.

We are living in an age of loose thinking and loose acting in the religious field. If there ever was a time when the true Christ of God was needed it is today. If there ever was a time that the world's needs challenged the church of Jesus Christ it is now.

If our work is to stand it must be built upon an abiding foundation, and the great doctrines of the Gospel is the only foundation that will remain when the sweeping judgments and storms that are upon us sweep past.

I earnestly contend for more doctrinal preaching and teaching. Inspirational and topical preaching has its place, but we should recognize that the great doctrines of Christian faith have first place.

We are giving four subjects for our pastors to preach on this year and will allow you to select the time most suitable to your own locality to present them.

- (1) "THE BRETHREN CHURCH AND HER MESSAGE," November.
- (2) "THE MESSAGE OF THE CROSS," Easter.
- (3) "THE PERSON AND WORK OF THE HOLY SPIRIT," February.
- (4) "THE COMING KINGDOM AND ITS KING," Christmas.

I have no reason not to believe that every pastor of the Brethren church will preach on all these themes and may God bless you in your work.

"To the work, to the work, we are servants of God
Let us follow the path that our Master has trod,
With the balm of his counsel our strength to renew,
Let us do with our might what our hands find to do."

Right you are, Bell. I am glad to say "amen" to all that Dr. Bell has given us in this. "To the work, To the work," is the slogan for every one of the leaders and for every one of the Goals. The deepening of the spirituality of the church is very euphonious until we get to the "brass tacks" of the meaning and then, as three years of history have proven, it is almost a grind. Yet, our tests are of our own making and we must measure by the standards set which means more at communion; more at prayer meeting; more doctrinal preaching. The topics that Brother Bell has given us are so broad that easily, every one of the preachers can use them. Because he made no schedule and because we shall need to have one, let this be the order:

"The Brethren Church and Her Message," for November.

"The Coming Kingdom and its King," for December.

"The Message of the Cross," Eastertide.

"The Person and Work of the Holy Spirit," February.

Put it in your hand book with the dates so that you will not forget when to preach and so, make a bad showing on reports.

Bame's Apology

Brother Garber did go off pretty shooting hot about that

"Tail-Enders" business, I confess. I am glad he did. I do not care what he says about the reasons; I could give good reasons, too why the Christian Endeavor Societies did not do better; yes, I mean good reasons. But that does not change the fact. The fact is that they are at the end of the race for the Goals and I am sorry for them and for the program. Youngsters do not usually lose a race with older ones. They have no business to do so and if they have the right, deep enough at heart, they will not be there at the end of the year. I confess, youngsters, that I told the whole brotherhood on you but I did it so you would wake up. WAKE UP. BAME.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Financing the Kingdom. By Martin Shively, D. D.

No one who has passed middle life, and has spent any considerable portion of that life in active relation with the church, has forgotten, nor ever will forget the days when the problems suggested by the subject of this paper, were problems indeed. In those days the methods most commonly employed were slipshod and unbusinesslike in the extreme. As the opening of the congregational year approached, one or more persons were appointed to canvass the membership to secure by one method or another a promise from each member if possible, but most frequently it was impossible, to pay at any time during the year, either in a lump sum or such installments as the subscriber might elect, any amount he cared to promise for the support of the pastor. There is an indelible picture of some such subscription papers in my soul. Men who were in very comfortable circumstances often gave as much as $10 per year, and others of course less, until the amounts graded down to 50 cents, and even less, and to make matters still more serious for those who were most deeply concerned, not a few forgot to pay even that, and many a preacher has some souvenirs in the way of unpaid salaries, the very memory of which still trouble his soul. No, I will not name any of them, nor recite further their painful experiences, for they want to forget both their own lack of initiative and the shame which often came to the Kingdom. In those days "Ladies' Aid" and lemonade were among the most common agents to keep the help actually from the door, and the devotion of the splendid womanhood of the church often kept church doors open when otherwise nothing could have prevented their closing, except the doing of the one thing which has waited far too long for the doing. Even in the old days of painful memory, folks were not unmindful of their duties to the state, and, however grudgingly they paid their taxes, both because they must and also because they were loyal citizens, of what they and their children agree, is the greatest country in the world. They were uniform in their opposition to all public improvements declaring that "pap" did not have any of such things, and we do not need them either. The real reason, however, lay in the desire to escape paying their share for them. Lest any should feel that I am unnecessarily severe with the laity of that day, let me hasten to say that as I now see it, the real fault lay at the door of the man who did the preaching. He had not taught the great lesson of stewardship, as faithfully, tactfully and persistently as he and his associates of the later days have done. He had not stressed the importance of the child, as deserving more and more, if it should be expected to outstrip its fathers, as the very spirit of Christian progress demanded. Perhaps he failed, too, in so presenting the sublime sacrifice of his Lord that they who saw, should cry out in joyous expression of Divine love for them, and should also instinctively pledge their all to him. Fault there was, and not a little of it, but even in spite of it, the Kingdom did not perish. God has permitted us to live to see a better day, but even his day, does not measure up to his plan.

No thinking man will dispute the claim, that that which offers greatest benefit to the soul, stands first among all the things which can be of assistance to men. For that alone has any ground for hope of escape from the decay which attends all things material, and no institution for the exclusive well being of the soul exists in all the world except the church. The one great message which it proclaims has for its object the exalting of the kingdom and its King. In recognition of the fact that many things affect the soul in its upward outlook, it has sought to make such application of the teachings of the Master, as would contribute to the highest possible good for man, both in his material and spiritual relations, but as a whole, it has never lost sight of the fact that spirit is supreme. While the church is not necessarily the kingdom, it exists for its advancement, and therefore for the purposes of this paper, the financing of the kingdom, shall be understood to mean the financing of the church. And that God meant well by the church, is positively shown both by the method he instituted for its support, in the days of the theocracy, when he demands he laid upon his people were both primary and abundant, and also by the estimate in which he held it in the later day, when by the pen of an inspired apostle, he declared it to be the very body of Christ. And the church, when properly led, does indeed deserve well of the people. For a ready response to its message not only offers the only source of hope for the soul, but it furnishes the only guarantee for orderly relations in society, and produces such conditions as make the world safe for democracy, and make a democracy which is safe for the world.

Of all the plans commonly employed for the financing of the church, none has produced such blessed results as the every member canvass and the weekly payment system. Others have given invaluable assistance in this field, but to me it seems that Mr. Archer G. Jones of the Duplex Envelope Company, has been a tremendous force under God in the bringing in of the better day. I shall never forget how that on the first Sunday after the adoption of this plan by the congregation of which I was a pastor, as the secretary and treasurer sat at the table counting the funds which had come in, Brother Keihl came forward to ask what the result had been. When they told him that the offering for the day was considerable more than was necessary for the weekly need, he lifted his eyes to heaven and said, "Thank God for this vision of success for the church." And it was indeed the beginning of the better day for the Dayton church, which, under the leadership of great men of God, has become among the largest in the brotherhood, if indeed it does not now stand at the head of the list. As all other plans which are proposed by man, it will not run itself, though it comes much nearer doing so than the old haphazard system, or rather lack of system. The every member canvass requires careful planning and prayerful, tactful application, and there is always follow up work to be done if the amounts pledged are to be brought into the treasury. Even at best, there are losses, for there are still folks with very defective memories, who overlook the presence of the convenient box of envelopes, which is intended to serve as a perpetual reminder. But, taking all in all, the system has been a wonderful boon to harried and worried church officials, and has been greatly blessed of God to the uplift of his church. "And yet show I unto you a more excellent way."

Years ago I was led to believe that God had a plan for the financing of the kingdom, as he has for everything else which concerns the good of man. We know that his plan of salvation is effective, and that there is no other plan which is so. No improvement has yet been found for his plan for the keeping of the peace between man and man, which is capable of being far more widely applied. That he had a plan for the support of the religious institutions of his house in the days of law, is so patent that none will attempt to deny it. And that plan was the tithe is equally well known. That he made it the condition of material blessing, according to the prophet Malachi and others, must be accepted as fact. And also that its operation furnished abundant funds for the maintenance and the support of a most elaborate service, is well known to all who are acquainted with the Book, and the history of Israel. But, it is urged, we are not under the law but under grace,—a declaration with which I am in perfect accord, and for which I also rejoice. But there is no gainsaying this fact.—If the Jew, whose knowledge of God was so much more limited than ours and whose blessings were so much less,—if the Jew was asked to bring his tithe, and in most instances did it gladly, “dare we whose souls are lighted with wisdom from on high” do less? The adoption of the tithe as a system for the financing of the kingdom would indeed produce a fluctuating income, for there might be many weeks of the life of the average individual when the amount thus contributed would be small, but in the aggregate such a flood of funds would come in, as would drive the church to her knees to pray for wisdom from on high for the proper disbursing of it. It is nothing less than the employment of this system which is making the Mormon church such a menace to the future welfare of this country and others. That so-called church is possessed of so many millions of money that few outside of its officials can have more than a very general idea of its wealth. Not only are there abundant funds with which to carry on a world wide propaganda, which they call mission endeavor, but their vast interests in the railroads and sugar industry of the country, as well as other essential affairs, are threatening to finally give them such power as will lead them to demand and to secure the concessions which are now denied them by the law of the land. Here is an instance of a perfectly good system, which is being applied in a dangerous cause, but it cannot invalidate the system, for it is equally capable of being applied to the help of men, and the honor of its Author. That the system as applied to the average congregation would produce an almost unthought of income, is demonstrated by the following incident. As pastor of a congregation of about 250 people, living in a city, none of whom lived on “easy street,” and with whose financial circumstances I was very well acquainted, I made a computation of the probable amount of income the church would receive if the tithing system should be adopted. Then I made announcement as follows, If the ladies in the congregation, whose husbands were not members, should continue to contribute as they were then doing, and all the rest of our people should bring the tithe into the treasury of the church, the amount would be over $9600 per year. And this was the situation in one congregation more than fifteen years ago. Here is a system, which if once adopted as the rule of our Christian practice, would not only run itself since each person, and unsolicited by others, would settle the matter between himself and God, and at the same time would solve the problems which so trouble the general boards of the church at times, but would provide in abundance for the needs of every local church. Upon whom would it work a hardship? And who would really be the poorer in a financial way in consequence? All who have tried it are loud in their expressions of joy and blessing, and the congregations in which it is the general practice have done, and are doing, wonders for God and his kingdom. More time spent as individuals and conferences in the study of this plan, and hearing from those who have given it an honest trial, would, it seems to me, be time well spent. For the nerve which controls the pure strings is not far from the nerve which controls the whole life of man, both in his relations with others and with God.

In spite of the awful apathy in the field of religious thinking and endeavor, which is upon us, and which so troubles the hearts of the faithful, there are some hopeful signs. Those whose hearts ring true to the touch of God, are recognizing as never before, the fact and character of their stewardship. The Church of the Brethren, after financing its congregational needs, brought over $150,000 to the last general conference for spreading the gospel in all the world. This with the numbers who gave themselves, and who are joining others who had preceded them, is a glorious indication of a wonderful spirit which is permeating our mother church. The millions which are being laid upon the altar by Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Lutherans, Episcopalians and others, are all expressions of a renewed loyalty to the King, who rules the kingdom. And our own dear people are also among those who serve, for the number and the amount of the offerings which they thrust upon the Boards which represent the forward movements of the church, so overwhelmed the men who faithfully tried to serve them, that in utter inability to keep the records, with their other work, they came to Winona saying, “Now set us aside a man of God who shall do this work.” And Brother Gearhart was called to devote all his time to the joyous task. Thus, though sin is rampant, God is not left without witnesses, and let us hope, yea and pray too, that the time is near when with a joyful enthusiasm, the church shall complete her task, and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord.

The Key Note till Thanksgiving---Church Extension and General Home Missions

Report of the Central Field Secretary of the General Missionary Board to the Kanemorado District Conference, 1919. By George T. Ronk

(We will gladly give prominent place to reports of surveys made by the Field Secretaries between now and the lifting of the Home Mission offering at Thanksgiving.—Editor.)

For many years your secretary has felt that one of the great neglected opportunities of the church lay in the Kansas field. Also, continual complaints came that too small a proportion of the funds of the General Board were being spent in developing this district. Accordingly your secretary spent a few days in the field centering about Kansas City at the solicitation of the churches at McLouth and Ft. Scott and the District Mission Board. Previous convictions were confirmed with the result that recommendations were made to the Board at the recent conference which resulted in appropriations for the Kansas field, amounting to $1250 for the coming year. $150 to the Norton County field, $400 to the McLouth field and $700 to the Ft. Scott field.

The McLouth field it appears is a great field which has not come into its own largely because of the lack of proper pastoral labor. The Church of the Brethren and the Brethren church worship and meet their budget together there in the spirit of complete harmony and both churches feel it is the turn of the Brethren church to meet the pastoral need. Having tried for a number of years and failed to reach the community properly, the Church of the Brethren members are willing that our men shall have a try-out. The local church raises $800 and the General Board will meet the balance. Your secretary feels that a strong young man could make this one of the shining places for your district and personally knows of no place where it would be pleasanter to work than right there.

At Ft. Scott is one of the great opportunities of the Brethren church. Everything should be done to capture this magnificent city for the Brethren church. However, some radical changes will be necessary to take the field. Let it be noted here that, given a nucleus of Brethren like we have at Ft. Scott, we can establish a church in any live town in a few years, if we will observe a few plain rules taught us by our successes as well as by our bitter experiences.

1. The church must be well located in a good district, self respecting in appearance, and must set up its standard and demand the place and respect due the best churches in the town.

2. It must pay a large enough salary to get a resourceful man, and it must pay him his salary regularly enough so he will be able to pay his bills in a town where he is a stranger without credit, so he can look every business man in the face and stand as the advocate for his people. There will be enough dead-beats in the church without the preacher joining the roll.

3. The supporting churches must get out of the notion that home mission work is a charity proposition that means going out into the slums with old hand-me-down clothes and working on the off-scourings of the city. Slum elements it will handle but a church cannot be built of these. Supporting churches must come to view this mission work as extension work for their own strengthening much like a new wing on a factory building. Everything must be planned accordingly.

Now let us apply these principles:

1. The St. Joe work which was such a signal failure for the combined effort of the District Board and the General Board was so poorly located that nothing but a direct miracle could have made it succeed. Instead of going with the current that effort tried to swim against it and failed. For instance, your secretary was in that city two different times and tried to find the mission but could not, having the address along. He utterly failed to find the mission or its pastor even with the help of the police department, though he spent hours wandering around the city. Unquestionably the mission was in a needy district, but a needy district is not always the best place for a mission.

Now the church at Ft. Scott might succeed in its present location, but your secretary, after eight years as a mission worker and after visiting almost every field of the church would not care to undertake the task. Life is too short for the modern man to be futilely battling against the current when he can travel ten times as fast to his destination by going down it. The long way around may be heroic but it is not good sense and is a trifle expensive.

The church at Ft. Scott is in a good field but it is on the out edge of the field next to the cow pastures. Experience has shown time and again that people will travel a long distance on a familiar road rather than a short distance on an unfamiliar one. The familiar road is the road from the suburbs in toward the trading point. People will go in large numbers to church toward the center of the town but it takes a mighty strong pull to get them past the center of the town out toward the suburbs. Your new mission church lacks just this pull. If Ft. Scott is to be self-supporting in another decade it must be on the inside of its circle and not on the outside. It has a fine field but must work it from the inside and not from the outside. Besides, there are colored folks living in the church block and we have enough to fight without taking on race prejudice as a new antagonist. The Ft. Scott congregation should be moved. The $700 appropriation of the General Board is conditional on this being done. The fine old abandoned brick of the Congregationalists can be had for $3750 and the present property free from debt ought to go a large way toward meeting this. The town can be canvassed for funds and the balance ought to be gotten easily from the Building and Loan. This is the greatest opportunity ever offered the Brethren church to house a mission on a corner lot on main streets both east and west and north and south, across the street from the fine Junior High school, where all the activities of the church will come under the observation of the whole city. Your churches have allowed canvassers from the church at large to raise money for projects in other states. If it is necessary this ought to be done for Ft. Scott. It ought not be necessary if good management is used. Brethren, if the great opportunity in Ft. Scott is allowed to slip it will be little short of a crime against the cause of church extension. This one act will be worth ten years of ordinary mission support.

Now as to the pastor for Ft. Scott. It needs a pastor of education, dignity and firmness, who can represent the church fairly before those High schools, the Commercial club, the business men and break down the prejudices already there from past history. It needs a man who can go into the best homes and claim the best, perfectly at his ease.

Your secretary urges that every effort be made to meet the situation. Not only will you make Ft. Scott one of the greatest churches in your district, but also get a new center for the county seats around, in many of which we have a small nucleus for future extension.

Respectfully submitted for your prayerful consideration.

Thoughts on Church-Going. By H. M. Harley

(In his parish paper, The Brethren Bulletin)

If you go to church, you will be less critical, and more charitable. Everybody likes to be well thought of. You like to have the good opinion of other people. You so desire to have coming your way the good wishes and favorable regard of people, that you cringe before criticism. You think that people should be a little more lenient toward you than toward any one else who is doing exactly the thing that begets criticism. You are inclined toward the principle of self-favoritism. You are not particularly gentle and discerning in your criticism of others, but when criticism falls at your door you instantly cry out that it is a case of mis-carried justice. You pray "Bobbie" Burns' prayer for some power the gift to give us, to see ourself as others see us," but when you do thus see yourself, you always consider it highly discourteous if the other person's estimate is not commendatory, and sometimes a wee bit flattering. In short, we dislike very deeply, criticism when it comes our way, but we are not always particular how much we sling broad-east for others.

If you go to church, it will help you to become less one-sided and less unfair in this respect. You will become more charitable. You will grow less critical. The world in general is wrong in supposing that the church is the most critical aggregation of people on earth. Instead of that, it is the man or the woman who doesn't go to church regularly who is most critical, and that without reason. The man or woman who doesn't go to church, is always criticising those who do go. Such people think they see in the lives of those who go to church, glaring defects. They fill in hours talking of the faults that are either microscopic in Christian people's character, or else they see a weakness against which the Christian has waged hard battle, and which he is slowly strengthening. On the other hand, the person who does not go to church is unconscious of the grievous errors and faults of his own life. What he needs to do is to go to church, and while there, take an invoice of his own life impartially. If you go to church regularly, you will discover presently that you have great need of the softened judgment of God and men, and then you will be guilty of less self-favoritism. You will become more charitable and less critical.

The church, of course, will always have certain standards to hold to, and will always have the legitimate right to criticize the world of men and the activities of people, to the end that the whole creation may be lifted to these right standards. But on the whole, the person who goes to church, learns how to use charity toward all, much better than the person who never goes. The critic is usually not happy in himself. The chronic critic is not the best company in the world. He is not a constructive, but a destructive force in the world.

Come then, and go to church and leave the task of the critic to someone else.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Has Christianity Failed? By Morton L. Sands

TEXT: Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his. And, let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. II Timothy 2:19.

"This frightful war has reduced my faith to rags and tatters," said a man recently, according to Homiletic Review. This is the story of many. In the present strenuous times following the greatest war the world has ever seen, they feel as though something had gone wrong somewhere. It is so entirely different to what they expected that they are all at sea. The shore lines have been cut and they are drifting into deep water without anchor, without compass, without Pilot to aid them to gain the desired haven. This is due, perhaps, to wrong views of faith, erratic knowledge of the Word or false teaching of which the world is full. Whatever the cause many feel this way and there is a tendency on the part of some to become skeptical, while others let go entirely and drift away from God and the things worth while.

Some feel that there ought to be a change in the application of Christianity. Christianity has been too individualistic. We have been too concerned about saving men out of the world and not enough concerned about making the world a fit place to live in after they are saved. Personally I believe in individualistic Christianity. Men must be saved one by one. The Holy Spirit must touch the life and make them new creatures in Christ Jesus. It is the Bible way, the Jesus way, the apostolic way. But what about a man after he is saved?

The true Christian will always be found on the side of that which is right whether it be for moral uplift, good laws, clean politics, sanitation or Christian manhood. I believe we shall be called to account some day for our attitude toward the liquor question. What will we say? If every Christian had voted because of principle instead of because they or their father or father's father voted for the old parties (and one is just as rotten as the other), we would have knocked the damnable traffic into hell long ago. True, the victory is won, but we left it to a few men who were not afraid of losing their vote to enter the breach and take the city. There is no need of a change of application of Christianity but there is great need of men who have the real thing.

One thing is sure; if Christianity has failed, a terrible calamity has befallen us. If Christianity has failed, God has failed. If Christianity has failed, Christ has failed; the Bible has failed; the good has failed. There is nothing worth while. We have no religion. We have no hope in this life or in the life to come. We might as well eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow we die.

Now let me attempt to answer the question by saying, That Christianity has failed to do what some people expected of it. During the last half of the 19th century the rate of gain of Protestant churches was only half of what it was during the first half. That is, figuring on the increase of population. And during 20 years from 1880 to 1900 the gain was only one fourth as great as during the preceding 30 years. While in the 10 years, 1890 to 1900, it was only one-third as great as during the preceding decade. From 1900 to 1910 there was no gain at all. Each year since there has been a slight loss.

These conditions are not peculiar to any communion or any one country. From 1851 to 1891 the attendance at the Presbyterian church of Scotland decreased 180,000. On February 22, 1914, less than two percent of the population were in attendance at churches of Berlin and Cherlottenberg, and of these, three-fourths were women and children. In fact, everywhere the masses seem to be drifting away from the church. Different remedies have been tried such as lectures, sermons, book reviews, sacred concerts, movies sermonettes, but none of these seem to stem the tide. We have failed to reach the masses.

A few years ago men were almost sure that a millennium among the nations was about to be ushered in. Altruistic principles were being taught. The Fatherhood of God and brotherhood of man was being exemplified. Democratic forms of government were taking the place of monarchies and dictatorial rule. Peace conferences were replacing sealed orders of army and navy. Courts of arbitrations were to be the order instead of hymns of hate. Great progress indeed! And Christianity was the leavening spirit in all this progress. Then comes the greatest war in the history of the world; a war twenty times greater than any previous war; a war in which the so-called Christian nations were at each other's throats. Blood and carnage and murder were rampant and millions were slain by every devilish ingenuity known to mankind. Truly it was said, "The dove of peace has fled and the culture of lust and hate reigns supreme." And all these nations claimed to have God on their side. Surely that Eutopian dream was blasted.

The conversion of the world, in this day and age has been the dream of some people. Christian forces are at work, the world is growing better and better and finally will be entirely converted. What are the facts of the matter? Civilization has largely taken the place of Christianization (and there is a big difference between the two). There is a falling away from the faith once delivered unto the saints. Hatred malice, greed, strife, have superseded love for God and love for our fellow man. Why we haven't even evangelized the world. We have only been playing at missions. Last year we spent $262,000,000 for home and foreign missions and $1,200,000,000 for tobacco in the United States alone. Does that look like converting the world? All these facts go to prove that Christianity has not accomplished all that was expected of her.

I do not believe however, that Christianity has failed. Real Christianity has never been tried. It has been "churchianity" that was tried instead of Christianity. My indictment is against the church. Jesus said unto Nicodemus, "Ye must be born again!" And this is the foundation of the Christian life, not reformation but regeneration. This is the Gospel message of the church. But she has forgotten her supreme message. In her anxiety to make a good showing she has stepped aside from her royal orders and taken anybody who could answer the prescribed questions or sign a card, into the church, whether converted or not. Let me illustrate what I mean. About three years ago we had a union evangelistic meeting in one of the Sergeantville churches. It was not a success from the point of accessions but we did get about two good people into the Brethren church. After the union meeting was over some of the Billy Sunday "trail hitters" from Trenton came up and continued the meetings for three weeks. They begged and pleaded, pulled and hauled until some 70 went forward and signed cards and were taken into the different churches. Today you would have to use a microscope to find ten that are faithful. They gained the church but not Christ.

Forms and ceremonies have taken the place of real religion in many churches. I remember that while in Montreal we attended one of the churches and found this very true. The service began by a processional and closed with a recessional. There were chantings of scripture and prayers. There was much standing and more kneeling. The sermon church either was just twenty minutes long, the other forms and ceremonies taking up most of the time. And it was not hard to join that church either. Christened at birth, confirmed in youth, answering a few questions and they were members of the church. Nothing was said about conversion. Nothing was said about definite acceptance of Christ. Nothing was said about repentance. Is it any wonder we have so much dead wood?

Someone has said the Methodist church lost her power when she lost her shout. This may or may not be true. One thing is sure. The church in general has lost her power. Worldliness is the cause. She has let down the bars and the result has been ragtime music, charity balls, euchre parties, theatrical clubs and sermonettes. Her members have just enough religion to make them miserable. They are like the woman old Anna Dinah tells about. She had too much religion to be happy at a dance and too little religion to be happy at a prayer meeting. This is the condition of about nine-tenths of the so-called Christians. What most of them have is Churchianity and not Christianity. And the church is to blame because she has let false teachings, forms of religion and worldliness take the place of real religion. Yes, the church has failed but Christianity has not failed. True Christianity can never fail. You might as well expect the heavens to fall. In Revelations 22:1 there is a picture of a stream of water flowing out from under the throne of God. It has been suggested that this stream is a type of Christ-

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Christ Yearning Friendship. By Nora Bracken

OUR SCRIPTURE

These things spake he: and after this he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus is fallen asleep; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep (John 11:11). Mary therefore, when she came where Jesus was, and saw him, fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. When Jesus therefore saw her weeping, and the Jews also weeping who came with her, he groaned in the spirit, and was troubled, and said, Where have ye laid him? They said unto him, Lord, come and see. Jesus wept. The Jews therefore said, Behold how he loved him! (John 11:32-36). No longer do I call you servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth: but I have called you friends; for all things that I heard from the Father I have made known unto you (John 15:15). And it came to pass about eight days after these sayings, that he took with him Peter and John and James, and went up into the mountain to pray (Luke 9:28). Then cometh Jesus with them unto a place called Gethsemane, and saith unto his disciples, Sit ye here, while I go yonder and pray. And he took with him Peter and the two sons of Zebedee, and began to be sorrowful and sore troubled. Then saith he unto them, My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death: abide ye here, and watch with me. And he went forward a little, and fell on his face and prayed, saying, My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt (Matthew 26:36-39).

OUR MEDITATION

The poet said, "Love is flowerlike but friendship is strong like the oak." How sad for the human being who is deprived of these. What an empty life he, who misses this great fulness, must live.

Beautiful pictures of this are found in the Bethany home, the place where Jesus loved so much to be. One of the first pictures we have of this friendship is that of the time when Martha was much concerned about serving and when Mary, who chose that good part, sat at the Master's feet and listened to his word.

Again we look into that home at a time when sorrow and sadness had crept therein. The brother, Lazarus, lay in the grave. The two sisters in their bereavement were seeking a true friend, they were seeking the Christ. A few days after the brother's death, Jesus arrived. He knew his power to call Lazarus from the grave, he knew all was well, but yet, being moved by the tears of the sisters, he himself wept. Does this not show that great tie of friendship between the Master and the members of this home?

These friends sought the Christ. But on the other hand, can we not see Christ reaching out to this home for the help and strength which humanity craves? As he went about doing good; healing the sick, making the blind to see and the lame to walk, raising the dead, cleansing the leper and comforting the sad and sorrowing, he suffered physical pain, hunger, thirst, also much mental pain and anguish. We find that many times during these hardships he went into the Bethany home for comfort and rest. The rest and peace in this home is well illustrated by the legend "How the Robin Got his Red Breast." It is said when Christ hung on Calvary's cross, with the blood streaming from his head, his hands, his feet and his side, a robin filled with compassion for the dying one, kept fluttering and hovering over him. Then finally he flew down and plucked a thorn from Christ's head. The blood spurted out on the robin's breast but the Master had one less pain. That rest, peace and comfort in the Bethany home seemed to have plucked many thorns from Christ's bosom.

Jesus called the twelve apostles that he might teach and prepare them to carry on his good work, when he again would return to the Father. Might he also have had another purpose in mind? Did he have in mind that friendship which he found in them? We learn that he called his disciples friends. We see him reaching out to them and especially to those in the inner circle—Peter, James and John. He often needed those three. He needed them on the Mount of Transfiguration, much more did he need them in the Garden of Gethsemane, on that dark night, before his crucifixion. Christ yielded all to his Father and yet, in his humanity he yearned for that friendship of his disciples for he needed them to watch and pray with him.

Jesus in his humanity was not unconscious of that divine tie. Many times he sought the Father in communion and prayer. He went out in the early morning, even before daybreak to be alone with God. He spent hours, days and nights alone with him.

Even today, the Christ, who is now in the heaven above interceding for you and for me, is yearning for our friendship. His yearning heart with that broad and generous love is reaching out to the whole world. We find in him that first touch of friendship, also that strong oak-like friendship. When we find our lives like storm tossed Galilee, he will calm the billows. When the thorns by the wayside pierce us, he will pluck them out of our lives. When our cross is so heavy it seems about to crush us, he will carry the heavier end. He says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Can we find another friend like the Christ? He who is yearning for our friendship is our truest friend.

OUR PRAYER

Almighty and everlasting God, thou who art great and thou who art good; thou who art the God of love and an unerring guide; as we behold thee in the beauty of thy holiness and in thine infinite mercy, we humble ourselves in thy presence. We thank thee, our Father, for the Christ who emptied himself of that equality with thee; came down to this earth and shed his blood on Calvary's brow for us. We are glad that he again reigns in the heavens above and daily intercedes for us. We are happy for the great lessons he taught us while here on this earth. As we see him mingle with the disciples, with the members of the Bethany home, his mother, Mary and others, may we find that great lesson of friendship. May we so anchor our lives in him that he may find in us that friendship which he seeks, that of the beloved disciple John who found Christ's bosom a soft pillow. May we find this in him. Through this same Christ, and for his sake, we look and pray to thee, our God. Amen.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

A "Surprise Bag" for Any Missionary

The Surplus Material Department of the World's Sunday School Association offers the following suggestions by which much pleasure can be given some missionary abroad with a comparatively small amount of work. This Department has introduced over 31,000 in the home land to missionaries in various countries.

Take a piece of cretonne or any suitable material and make a bag of a size to hold the things that you will put into it. First, of course, you must decide what you will give. The articles can be very simple if you desire. Just some things to be taken out of the bag on certain named days. Note a dozen suggested days and then add more if you will. Remember "the more the merrier." Plan for Christmas, New Year's, St. Valentine's Day, Washington's and Lincoln's Birthdays, April Fool, Easter, Memorial Day, Children's Day, July Fourth, Thanksgiving, and the birthday of the receiver. Then select or prepare something suitable for each occasion named. It may be only a picture post card. Your own thoughtfulness will furnish many suggestions. Here are a few things that you can probably find: handkerchief, pencil, old but still good fountain pen, Ingersoll watch, pad of paper, some dainty trinket that you are no longer wearing, note book, calendar for the new year, a small silk flag, book, rubber stamp with name and address of the missionary, string of pretty beads, ribbon, tie, knife, the little things you would like if at least 6,000 miles from home. Wrap each article and tie a label on a long string or a bit of baby ribbon to the package, letting the labels hang outside of the cretonne bag. You could write on the outside of the well-wrapped package "Pull each string on the day indicated." You can also write on this wrapper "From———" (giving your name and address). Do not add anything more or the package would require first class postage. Now it can be sent by parcel post at the rate of 12¢ per lb.

To obtain the name of a missionary write to the Surplus Material Department of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. Indicate the name of your denomination and you will receive a card of introduction to a missionary in your own church to whom the package should be forwarded. A leaflet will also be sent which suggests many other plans that are used by thousands in bringing both help and cheer to these Christian soldiers who are always at the battle front. The plan is one that can be taken up at any season of the year, for one of the specially named days is bound to occur soon after the "surprise bag" has been received abroad. In sending your gift you should write to the missionary whose name will be sent to you.

Note: This may be suggestive of some method of bringing cheer to the heart of some of our own Brethren missionaries in South America or Africa. Think it over.

"And the Greatest of these is Love"

When a mother loves, though she be a queen, she becomes interested in soap and water, sheets and blankets, boots and clothing and many other mundane things. And when the church loves she will have something to say about rents and wages, houses and workshops, food and clothing, gardens, drains, medicine, and many other things. Where is the church's mother-love? Where is her fierce mother-wrath, as she sees the children trampled in the mire? It is easy to go to church, and to abstain from drinking, swearing, and gambling, but it is not easy to love. Love brings labor, and sorrow and self-sacrifice. Love sometimes says, "Sell all that thou hast, and distribute unto the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me." This is not like going to a home missionary meeting and giving the price of a meal to the collection. It is leaving beautiful houses, and pictures, and gardens, and music, and going into mean streets and dirty dwellings. It is leaving congenial friends and joyous fellowships for service among the unfortunate, unattractive, and, perhaps, depraved. It is giving where you cannot hope to receive in return. There is the sweat of heart and of brain, the carrying of sickness and sorrows. To your own cares and troubles there is added the unspeakable trouble of the multitude.—From "The Cross at the Front," by Thomas Tiplady.

The strength and courage of him who does a thing because he thinks it is right and God requires it is as a thousand to one compared with the man who does a thing because it is popular.

tianity which begins with God and flows out into the world, touching and beautifying and giving life everywhere. Certainly Christianity had its beginning with God. John 3:16 says, "For God so loved the world that he gave his only Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life. Back of Bethlehem's manger was God. Back of Calvary's cross was God. Back of the Gospel message is God. Back of Christianity is God. And God never fails.

True Christianity is a life not a dogma. True Christianity is a definite experience not a creed. True Christianity is the outliving of the living Christ. Jesus is the center and circumference of real Christianity. We accept him by faith. He enters our life, we let him rule and reign, there is a definite change, we are new creatures in him. What shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Real Christianity is a universal religion. I don't mean that all men will be saved. All men will not accept Christ and there is no salvation outside of Christ. I mean Christianity is universal in that it supplies the need of every man everywhere. It is no respecter of persons. I read an interesting article along this line recently. It said that next to Christianity is Confucianism with 300,000,000 adherents but it is confined to a single race, the Chinese. Then comes Mohammedanism with 221,000,000 adherents. Hinduism follows with 210,000,000 but little known outside of India. Buddhism with 138,000,000 is a much higher type but its adherents are nearly all orientals. Shintoism with its 25,000,000 is entirely racial and Judaism with 13,000,000 is almost identical with the spread of one race. Christianity alone is universal. Christianity alone brings light and life and happiness to all men.

Another remarkable thing about Christianity is that her Founder still lives. On the tombstone of the founders of every one of the religions just mentioned is written, "Here lies Confucius, Mohammed, etc." But not so with Christ, the founder of Christianity. Over the tomb where he once lay is written, "He is not here; for he is risen, as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay."

Christianity can never fail.

Comfort ye one another with these words. Stand fast in the faith. Fight the good fight. And remember the crown awaits all those that love his appearing.

The What and Why of Christian Endeavor. By Willis E. Ronk

There has been much written concerning the purpose of Christian Endeavor and its mission; so the problem now is to reiterate what has been said, add all the new thoughts possible and bring this again to our attention in such a way as to create enthusiasm and to impel us to greater activity.

We have heard much talk about Christian Endeavor; but after all, what is Christian Endeavor? In the minds of some, it is a service held on Sunday evenings in the church, its primary function being to provide a meeting place for the young people, especially those in the early teens. To others, it is a meeting for a few girls and a still smaller number of "sissified" boys. Still others know nothing about it and care less. Is this statement too radical? If so, can you tell wherein lies the trouble? For trouble there certainly is.

During the past five years, it has been the speaker's privilege, as a stranger to visit several Christian Endeavor societies, and from these experiences he has gained some information. In one town six societies were visited. The attendance at these societies ranged from twelve to thirty-five. The smallest Sunday school in these churches was one hundred and twenty-five and the largest nearly six hundred. Why are the Sunday schools so large and the Christian Endeavor societies so small? I am confident that all the reasons given can ultimately be traced to either a lack of knowledge as to what Christian Endeavor is, or to its purpose. This lack of knowledge may be either on the part of the leaders or on the part of the masses who refuse to follow.

An Endeavorer is one who endeavors or puts forth effort. A Christian Endeavor society is a society or group of people who are Christians and are putting forth effort for the cause of Christ. Christian Endeavor may be further defined by giving its mission, which is "For Christ and the Church." This is the phrase which should be uppermost in the mind of all Endeavorers; for every society which fails to keep this as her goal, will meet her defeat.

Since I have defined Christian Endeavor in broad terms, some will say, Yes, but we are already Christian endeavorers. Why multiply machinery? We are already "organized to death." Let the Sunday school or church do this work. This accounts for the why in my subject.

The first society was organized by the Rev. Francis E. Clark, as the result of the needs of his congregation. The various auxiliaries of the church were failing to reach the young people, hence the first society. The needs of the churches are just as great today, and this society has a great work to do especially among the young. Let us be more specific and consider some of the whys.

First, one of the great problems of the church is the tendency of the young people, one by one, to drift from the influence of the Sunday school into the world, and many are consequently lost to the church. There is many a weak church today, which is weak primarily because it has failed to conserve its young life. It is especially true that the young man in the later "teens" begins to look upon the Sunday school as a place for women and children, and feeling his manhood he leaves the influences of the church. He goes out into the world to sow his wild oats and the chances are that the church will lose him for ever. When the young man thinks he has outgrown the Sunday school, or rather before, the church should appeal to the heroic in him, and this may be done through the Christian Endeavor society. It is also at this period that the young people desire more social contact, especially with those of the opposite sex. The Christian Endeavor should draw the young people together and give them opportunity for social intercourse surrounded by Christian influence. I would that everyone might realize the importance of the association of these Christian young people; not only in the light of the individual, but the future of the church. Many, many indeed, are the families lost to the church, because the young people form their associations outside of the church and marry the ungodly. I would not make the Christian Endeavor society a matrimonial agency, but it would certainly do the church good to pause to consider the injunction of Paul, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," and then realize the importance of the proper social contact.

Another problem is the training of the life of the church for effective service for the Lord. Any church that fails to recognize the necessity of a trained and skilled leadership, or fails to train such leaders will suffer irreparable loss if indeed it does not die. How is this leadership to be trained? Does the church as such do it? Does the Sunday school do it? No, it was because the existing organizations did not do this, that the first Endeavor society was organized. The Sunday school gives the gospel truths with a view to the salvation of the individual; the Endeavor society also endeavors to save if the individual is not already saved, then to train that individual for larger service. Go to the ministers of our beloved church, especially to the younger men, and ask them whence came their inspiration. Then go to the laity among the younger generation and ask where did you get your inspiration? A great many times, yea the majority of the times, the answer will be "From Christian Endeavor." That the Endeavor society has been a great force for the training of leadership and for effective service no one dares to deny.

However we must not be content with present attainments. The cry of the hour is for leadership—the ministry, the Sunday school, the church, yea, the world is calling for leaders. Let us therefore as Endeavorers, arise to the demand of the hour and do our share in the searching out and training of those needed workers. Let us meet the present challenge. May we be filled with enthusiasm for service. May we let it be known that Christian Endeavor is not merely a place for "sissies" or weaklings. It throws out a challenge to the best and the sobriest that is in our young lives. It throws out a challenge to us all to put forth our greater effort "For Christ and the Church."

"Let us then be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate,
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

Roann, Indiana.

The Sum of the Law

Men are asking everywhere this question: "Is it possible for a man to be a broker, a shopkeeper, a lawyer, a mechanic—is it possible for a man to be in a business of today, and yet love his God and his fellow man as himself?" I do not know what transformations these dear businesses of yours must undergo before they shall be true and ideal homes for the child of God; but I do know that upon Christian merchants and Christian brokers and Christian lawyers and Christian men in business today rests an awful and a beautiful responsibility to prove—if you can prove it—that these things are capable of being made divine; to prove that a man can do the work which you have been doing this morning, and will do this afternoon, and yet shall love his God and his fellow man as himself. If he can not, what business have you to be doing them? If he can, what business have you to be doing them so poorly?

MISSIONS

Home Mission News. By G. C. Carpenter

Huntington

Brother J. W. Brower, the faithful pastor, writes: We are disposing of some property and are reducing our debt very materially. Twenty-six at prayer meeting Wednesday evening and one hundred at joint meeting of W. M. S. and S. M. M. Two hundred dollars more subscribed for the work next year than for any year since my taking charge."

Such news is always welcomed by those who are interested in and are supporting faithfully our home mission work.

Peru

Our rally day on October 19 was a success. The attendance at Sunday school was 115, and the offering was twenty-dollars. A special program of considerable merit was given on rally day evening. Plans are now under way for "Joash Day." More about that later.

That Stereopticon Lecture

Brother A. B. Cover of Hagerstown, Maryland, writes: "We used the Kentucky slides last night and they were much enjoyed and an offering of eighteen dollars was received for the electric light plant at Lost Creek. I forwarded the slides to Brother McClain."

Remember that a suggestive lecture prepared by Brother E. M. Cobb accompanies the slides. Every pastor in the brotherhood should use these slides in his church. We suggest that those who use them take an offering for the electric light plant fund.

Krypton

Brother Rempel writes: "We never felt our weakness and nothingness as we do here in this great and needy field. We need the prayers of all the brethren, seeing the responsibility that is upon us, and seeing the great work that Brother and Sister Cook have done. Our prayer is to see this work prosper and that is also Brother Cook's prayer after six years of hard labor here."

Prayer

A returned missionary from China said to us the other day when we asked on what terms she would speak at our church: "All I ask is a good audience. Our mission does not ask for any money, but if I can have the audience and induce the people to pray, more I will have done my part." The secret is that those who pray for missions support missions with their money. Those who are praying for our home mission work will give liberal gifts at Thanksgiving time in what (let us pray) may be the largest home mission offering ever received by the Brethren church.

William A. Gearhart

The entire brotherhood should remember that all home mission funds are now to be sent to William A. Gearhart, Dayton, Ohio. This includes money for Kentucky missions also. For fourteen years all Kentucky funds have been sent to the writer but the change should be noted, thus saving extra time and expense. Brother Gearhart is making the appeal for the Thanksgiving Home Mission offering. The 1919 offering should be the best yet. The pastors can make it so.

Lighting Up Riverside

Only a small portion of the $650 needed for the electric light plant for Riverside has been given. A plant can be secured at about one-third the cost of a new one and Brother Amos Fudge has offered to go to Lost Creek and superintend the installation of the plant. Brother Fudge understands the work thoroughly and the church is fortunate in having his proffered service. Gifts should be forthcoming from all parts of the brotherhood and the $650 should be in hand very quickly. Do it now.

Lost Creek, Kentucky. By G. E. Drushal

Having felt that conditions were good for an ingathering of souls, we sought for an evangelist at National Conference, and found I. D. Bowman of Philadelphia, Pa. We began the meeting September 21, preached four nights and then Brother Bowman continued to October 12th, three weeks in all.

The visible results of the meetings were twenty-seven confessions, nineteen of whom have been baptised to date. Some of the remainder will be baptised later at least. Those who have united with the church here, represent the heads of five families, and other influential people. In fact some of the most influential people in this section of our county are now members of the Brethren church. We do not mean by this that all souls are not worth saving, for they are. But we do mean that some souls mean more to a church than others, and this revival this time has taken into the church souls that will mean so much to the work locally.

It seems to us that a word here as to the effectiveness of the preaching of Brother Bowman would not be out of place. Many know of his old time power in the Gospel. It seems to us that that has not waned a bit, but is even stronger if possible. Then he preaches the whole, plain Word, which he has made a life study. Then added to this much time spent in prayer, and you have a strong man of God, and this combination we found in Brother Bowman. The Word as he preached it came with such power that it was hard for sinners to turn it down.

Prayer was made a large part of the work of the meetings. The domestic science room was turned into a prayer room. Here all those who would were urged to meet and wait on God for his blessings in the meeting. There were always a number there who prayed earnestly for the meetings and the work. This special service was held just before the regular meeting.

For the benefit of those who are interested to know the names of some of the converts, may we say that it includes the Roberts, Fugates, Napiers, and others. We believe that the end of the revival is not yet. We are expecting still others who were near God, but could or would not make the confession. We ask you to pray with us for these, and also that we may have wisdom and strength to meet the added burdens which we now have facing us.

Another special blessing of the meeting came as a result of the sickness of our matron, Mrs. Woodmansee. More than once was the hand and power of God seen in raising her from her severe sickness, and this was especially so when she was anointed. Brother Bowman officiating. God wonderfully healed her then, and gave her rest and strength.

A Few Brief Notes From the General Missionary Secretary

By William A. Gearhart

Your General Missionary Secretary has his office in the Conover Building, Room No. 906, Dayton, Ohio, and is enjoying his work very much. We are at present busily engaged in preparation for what we hope will be the banner Home Mission offering to be raised at Thanksgiving time. We are very much gratified to have the splendid co-operation of the Publishing House in promising the publication of a special Home Mission number under date of November 19. We sincerely hope that when this number reaches you that you will peruse it carefully and then loan it to other members who are not taking it regularly, for we are confident there will be many interesting and helpful articles in it. Begin now to lay aside some of the Lord's money for the Thanksgiving offering and receive the blessing he is waiting to bestow upon you.

NOTICE

All money for Home and Foreign Missions should be sent direct to the General Mission Secretary, William A. Gearhart, 906 Conover Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Let us kindly accept from God even our own nature, and treat it charitably, firmly, intelligently, and let us never be afraid of innocent joy. God is good, and what he does is well done.—Amiel's Journal.

Jesus saw something in each one of us and has chosen us to be his friends. He desires to bring us into perfect fellowship with himself. He said, "I have chosen you and ordained you." "I will call you not servants, but friends." "Ye are my friends." To be a friend of God! how rich a heritage!

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

SPARKS FROM PITTSBURGH

We shall not try to prove an alibi for not writing in these columns concerning the work of The Brethren in "The Steel City." We have simply not gotten at it, that's all. But do not take this as a sign that we have been loafing on the job, for we have been doing anything but that.

The pastor has been on this field now for just five years, and never have any people rallied to his support better than our people are doing here right now. The work of the Pittsburgh Brethren church, from every viewpoint, is in better shape now than at any time during this pastorate, notwithstanding the set-backs we have all suffered, incident to the war and other interfering causes, and in spite of the presnet unrest which is affecting church work in general.

We started our work at the first of the year with our annual New Year Rally for all of the members and friends of the church. At this time the pastor received a very substantial gift from the church, at the instigation of the Mens' Bible class. He also received a call for the fifth year of service with an increase in salary.

Following this rally, we immediately set about, laying plans for our evangelistic meeting, which was to be held during the month of February. Evangelist L. B. Compton, of Asheville, North Carolina, (A union evangelist), preached "The gospel, pure and undiluted" for three weeks, and was able to crowd the church to the doors with those who were hungering for the Word. Rev. Compton did not use any spectacular methods, but his way of presenting the gospel appealed to the people, and they came from far and near, to hear him. The ingathering of souls was not as great as we had hoped for, only three making the great confession. But we had a wonderful time of seed-sowing, as well as of spiritual uplift. And the people showed their appreciation of the evangelist's services, by giving him better than $500 the last day.

We feel certain that the church hasn't lost the spiritual impetus of that meeting, for the work ticked over the summer months in the most splendid shape.

As has been our custom ever since being on this charge, we held our Sunday evening services in God's great out of doors. We were fortunate this year, to secure a most beautiful lawn on the main thoroughfare in our part of the city, just four short blocks from the church uniting with us in the effort. The ser-"Community Vespers," a Swedish Lutheran church uniting with us in the effort. The services attracted good crowds and created much interest each Sunday evening during July and August. And we know that much good was done, both so far as our own, and outside people were concerned. The venture was more extensive, and proved more successful than any we have yet attempted.

The pastor was privileged to attend both the national and district conferences, the church paying his expenses both times. And he is both grateful, and confident that, with the plans forwarded, and the work instituted, this next year is going to be the greatest and the best ever, so far as the Brethren church is concerned. And we in Pittsburgh shall do all within our power to help make it so, in his strength and through his grace.

It was to this end that we got ten of our people, to attend our district conference at Johnstown, all of whom have come back thoroughly enthused, throwing themselves into the work as never before. Definite plans are already being carried out which will mean a larger and more effective Brethren church in Pittsburgh, and a greater Brethren church, so far as the church as a whole is concerned.

Our Rally Day a few weeks ago was without a doubt the very best ever, both for the Sunday school and the church. At the last-named service, with but a very few exceptions, the largest congregation we have had for many months—pledged itself for a more consecrated service in his church and Kingdom. And folks are getting busy as never before. Our Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was just recently re-organized, and is in a most flourishing condition. Every department of the work is receiving renewed attention, and we feel certain that this shall be a real "Victory Year" for our people here.

Another matter that is worthy of mention, and that will be of interest to the brotherhood at large, is that finally the indebtedness that has so long held the Pittsburgh Brethren church from being and doing her best, is being wiped out. For this we thank God, as well as all of our Brethren who in years past, have contributed toward this work. Special mention should here be made of the fine work that our good friend and Brother Henry Wise did to save this church. To him we owe a whole lot for the condition we find ourselves in at this time. But the Brethren here have been doing most splendidly during the last few years, in the matter of giving. Without any of the many money-making schemes being used, but just free-will offerings to the Lord, the financial end of the work here is in the very best shape ever.

We might add too, that we are using the "No-Collection" method in our regular church services. Instead of passing the plate, we have a box near the rear door, marked, "The Lord's Treasury,"—to which we call attention only incidentally, and that not very often. But since we have adopted this plan, our contributions have increased very materially, and as well the impression made on the strangers is very favorable. And then, too, we in this way have forestalled the excuse of some non-church going people, that every time they go to church they are asked for money. Educate your people properly, and get them to consecrate themselves, and the gifts will be forthcoming.

All in all, we feel very much encouraged over the work here. Not that we are satisfied with our progress, but we believe that there is a brighter and a better day ahead of our church and people here, for all of which we thank God and take courage. And what we are hoping for ourselves, we certainly pray that all the rest of the churches of our brotherhood may enjoy with us. May we all pray and trust and labor to the end, that this year shall be a "Victory Year" in every sense of the word, especially so far as the spiritual strength and side of our work is concerned. And to God will we give all the glory.

H. M. HARLEY, Pastor.

DOINGS AT DAYTON

That no special report has been given to the readers of the Evangelist about the "doings" at Dayton, Ohio, since last spring, is not due to the slackening of the pace of the First Brethren church of Dayton, in her several activities. On Sunday, May 18th, the church appropriately observed their May Day anniversary of the new church building. This was so ably directed by Elder E. M. Cobb, our pastor, that about $7,000.00 was contributed in less than 30 minutes after the people got a chance, to reduce the standing indebtedness of the church building. No unusual pressure was brought upon the membership, except the unique presentation by Dr. Cobb of the need and his method of meeting that requirement by Scriptural means. No funny stories nor chestnut jests were put over, but the goal set was practically met on closing the regular morning hour of worship and sermon by the pastor. The church is anticipating the last drive next May Day anniversary to take up the "balance," and incinerate the mortgage on their beautiful building, which is now worth over $50,000.00 and is a fine temple for worship.

The premonitive note for this occasion, as well, as sounded by Elder Cobb, the pastor, in his Easter message, in the regular church calendar of April 20th. Let me quote the following:

THE BIBLE, THE WHOLE BIBLE, AND NOTHING BUT THE BIBLE. That's OUR slogan. Are you proud of it or not? What excuse has the Brethren church for an existence? Just the slogan, that's all. If we are going to skip around over the sacred text and select what we want to believe, we have no right whatever to this wonderful slogan.

"How we fight for our interpretation of the observance of the ordinances of the house of God. Why shouldn't we? They are a wonderful means of grace. Besides God gave them to us. How we firmly advocate the blessed doctrines of the Old Book. There are thousands who would lay down their lives rather than have trampled under foot the doctrines they hold dear. I believe there are really right now today, the same kind of martyrs that there were in the olden time, who would die for principle.

"But listen—are we always impartial as to our loyalty to the doctrines of the Book? Or do we love some of them more than we do others? Have you ever taken special notice of this doctrine of CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP? You know that was one of Christ's hobbies, if he had any. You know how very important we think the doctrine of the new birth is. Well, it is important. Certainly is. But Jesus spoke on that subject once and that time to an individual. But how many times do we hear Jesus discoursing on the money question? (Right here is where some will stop reading).

"Money, money, money. Scared stiff, frightened to death. Why should we be subject to epilepsy as soon as we hear the mention of that particular word? Just this. Jesus Christ knew that MONEY WAS AND IS THE REAL TEST OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP. That's it exactly. He knew as well as you do that money has two values. Take a dollar in your hand. Look at it. That dollar represents, as a circulating medium, so many units of energy, thought, or effort upon your part. That's one value. Here's another. It carries a series of CHARACTER VALUES, since in its acquirement and use, it reveals the innermost motives and habits of my life. Money at once becomes either the root of all evil or the fruit of all good. Up to you. The money test is the most comprehensive, searching, acid test there is.

Now, look this thing square in the face. Whom did Jesus send to hell? Was it the thief on the cross who had been stealing? No indeed. It was the capitalist Dives, who put off his missionary work until he was in need of a glass of ice-water. Who had to be left out of the kingdom? The Prodigal son who blew in a small fortune at the shrine of the bright light? No, no. It was the Rich Young Ruler, whose miserly fingers crammed his bank book back into his pocket, and slunked away, denying his stewardship.

"Now wait a moment. Let's stop and take an inventory. Here we are in the best country in the world, under the best government, too, at that. We are allowed to do as we please in our public worship. It may not always be that way. We are the children of a Great King. He has asked us to be his ambassadors till he comes for us. He told us to carry his message to a lost world and call out such as would be saved.

"Finally, Brethren, you know our local slogan, too. 'Go over the Top.' Let us lay aside from our tithe money a handsome Easter offering to the foreign fields and show our dear ones at the front that we have not forgotten them. Pray over the matter. Take the Lord into your confidence. Ask him how much you ought to give."

A strike among the painters and decorators having delayed us from holding services in the main auditorium deferred our regular dates for special services the first half of May, so that Mothers' and Woman's Day was not observed until May 28th, but the interest was none the less, as $46.00 was contributed to the Ashland Seminary Chair. Though we had to suffer a little interruption the interior of the church has been finely decorated and a new chandelier placed, thus lighting the auditorium most beautifully at a cost of some $1250.00.

During the absence of the pastor at Telford, Tennessee in June, holding a revival, we had interesting and helpful services with Prof. J. A. Garber of Ashland, for one Sunday, and Mr. Peter Quartel of the City Mission and Prof. S. Aldine Propst, Dayton men representing the mission and temperance interests of our city and state, for the edification of our people, but all were pleased to greet the pastor on his return to the pulpit, Sunday, June 29th.

During the week from July 6th, a "Sunday School Institute on Principles and Methods of Pedagogy" was most profitably conducted in our church by Dr. H. A. Howling, an expert of Los Angeles Bible Institute. He was a personal friend of the pastor and had been a co-worker with him for a number of months in Southern California during his travelogue lecture season on the Pacific coast before Elder Cobb came to this charge. Really, Dr. Dowling, incidentally informed us of the recent special and merited honor of the title of the "Doctor of Divinity," conferred upon our pastor, by one of the leading educational institutions of Southern California, and pronounced him in full to the congregation in his first Sunday evening address, as Doctor Edward Martin Cobb, whom he himself delighted to honor, from his acquaintance with him. It was noticed that the pastor's face and head was a little more red than usual, since he had been too modest to speak of it publicly before. But the First Brethren church of Dayton, congratulates him as well, and has learned to know him exceedingly worthy of such recognition and honor.

The S. S. C. E., now worthily named, the Woman's Missionary Society, one of the most active auxiliaries of the First Brethren church, succeeded admirably for the year ending with July first, under the efficient leadership of Mrs. W. C. Teeter, president, concluding her two years of administration. During the year fifteen new members were added and ninety-five are enrolled. From various activities the society realized about $645.00 and met all their state and national goals. The new officers are Mrs. Marie Marks, President; Mrs. Bessie Trubee, vice-president; Mrs. Iva Patterson, secretary, and Mrs. Edith R. Kem, treasurer, under whose faithful and executive direction we bespeak a most successful year from their present initiative endeavor.

All the auxiliaries of the church have been most efficiently maintained under the direction of their leaders, and the growth of the membership numerically and spiritually has been what might be anticipated from the generalship of its active and energetic pastor. Our church's patriotism was manifest from the large attendance of some 40 members at National Conference, and their activity in its services.

I quote from the Pastors' Annual Report, in the regular church calendar of Sunday, September 14th, as follows: "When we recount the wonderful work of the women of the church in their various drives, and the co-operation of the Juniors and Intermediates, and the loyal support of the men of the church, it is no wonder that we have paid $6,794.24 into the general treasury of the church and more than that into the fund, to eliminate our church debt, and decorated our building so beautifully. It surely has been a great year in the history of our church. We are able to report 69 baptisms, 8 by relation, and 9 by letter, making total accessions of 86 here, and I think this church should really be credited with the 15 I received in Tennessee when you granted my absence to hold the meeting at Telford."

The great picture painted in the Baptistry opening to the auditorium, of the scene of the Jordan with Mr. Hermon in the distance, is a wonderful piece of art, executed by Mr. J. Howard of Boston, Mass., as well as his paintings in the pastor's study and in the primary room, of Jerusalem, the sea of Galilee, the Sphinx, Pyramid, Arab, Camel, etc. Dr. W. S. Bell and Miss Mary Pence visited us after National Conference and spoke at our Wednesday evening service, and they greatly admired the paintings and general decorations of the church.

We cannot tell you all we would like to say, but must tell you that our fall drive has begun. Last Sunday, October 5th, was our Rally Day for the Sunday school and church. It proved to be a great day for the First Brethren church. There were present in the Sunday school 636, and an offering lifted to apply on a pledge of $50.00 by the Sunday school on the State Dry campaign, of $30.00. But the church service was unique and most inspiring because of what just recently occurred and has been so pleasantly and satisfactorily terminated. Let me briefly explain the situation: The Bear Creek Brethren church near the city limits, because of environment and modern conditions, some removals to Dayton, etc., determined after several business meetings were held to form a coalition with the First Brethren church of Dayton. This was mutually agreed upon by both congregations and the membership of Bear Creek dissolved, the property deeded to the First Brethren church of Dayton, to be held and used for a mission point, controlled and maintained by the Dayton church. Some of the members go to New Lebanon, and Salem Brethren churches, as most convenient. A large number decided to come to Dayton, and hence our Rally Day was our "Welcome" to the brethren and sisters of Bear Creek, with a special program of reception participated in by both! Seventy-four members were received into fellowship on this occasion by letters and relation, all but one from the Bear Creek Brethren church, the "Mother of the Valley churches," returning to her "Daughter," as has been so aptly stated. It was a great day of rejoicing, though with some regrets, and sympathetic emotions, on leaving a place made dear by sacred memories. A larger responsibility has come to the First Brethren church of Dayton which now numbers over One Thousand communicants. May the Lord be gracious to her in the discharge of this additional trust required.

Doctor E. M. Cobb, pastor, with Mrs. Cobb, left Monday, October 6th, to attend the Pennsylvania Brethren conference at Johnstown, enroute to Philadelphia, to begin a revival on the 12th, at the First Brethren church, with Rev. Alva J. McClain, pastor. During their absence from us we are to enjoy the services of several brethren from Ashland, among them Rev. William H. Beachler and Dr. J. Allen Miller, whose labors we will appreciate.

We are now planning a revival campaign to begin the middle of November, Dr. Cobb to do the preaching, and Prof. Arthur Lynn of New York City, a fine tenor, to direct the song service. Brethren, pray for us that we may be sustained by the grace of our Lord and used as instruments to gather many souls into the Church Militant for the Master.

WILLIAM C. TEETER,

Dayton, Ohio, October 8th.

WILLIAMSBURG, IOWA

Heard from but not seen. We start our next year's work at Williamsburg with a revival, commencing October 12th. My prayer is "Not my will but thine be done." If I should boast it would be in this. I could not boast in my ministry. I would much rather say farewell to the ministry. But if I have been called of God, I must go and do my little, even though all hell be arrayed against the church. The world cries "Peace, peace, but there is no peace," and we must do what we can to bring it to the world. That is all that God asks of us. And he says, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Pray for us at Williamsburg.

HOMER ANDERSON.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

Just a few lines from our church at Oak Hill and Salem. We should be reviving in real work and a live interest in our work as I am glad to report that we have just secured a pastor. Brother W. H. Miller is taking charge of the work at Oak Hill and Salem. The Gatewood church has not decided yet whether or not they will join us in hiring the pastor.

Brother James Coleman is still preaching at Mossy and Gatewood. We had hoped that all four places would jointly hire the pastor as in former years but for some reason they are undecided yet.

We hope that Brother Miller will have the hearty co-operation of the church in his efforts to do the work and in building up the church. May the Lord bless him in his work and help him that he may do much good.

Pray for us.

ESSIE BOOTHE.

FROM IOWA TO WEST VIRGINIA

Pleasant Grove, Iowa

I closed my work here in August and then came on to Bible conference and our own General Conference. So a few words as a resume will be in order.

To say Pleasant Grove is situated in a rich farming community is saying it mildly. It is the land of good crops and a prosperous people. Our people have a good church house and a congregation of about 80 members. We lost three by death while I was with them as pastor. We strove to put the Evangelist in every home as far as we were able.

Our finances were handled on the every member canvass plan, and we easily secured funds for current expenses. Beside this the church gave during the past year $200, or over to foreign missions, $600 to the college, raised $60 to paint the church, $30 for song books and usually pays her quota to district and general work. Besides these there were the personal gifts to various causes.

So altogether, probably about $2000 were raised by this church, or an average of $25 for each member—man, woman and child. I consider this well done and believe it exceeds many congregations of our brotherhood.

The year's work closed with an all-day meeting at the church and a picnic dinner in the basement. At the close of the afternoon service Brother Art Miller presented to the writer a purse of $14, saying the same was given by the donors in appreciation of the services rendered. So here I wish to say thanks for the words and acts of kindness given while serving as pastor at Pleasant Grove. True, not all was as we wished, but let us forget the unpleasant and remember each other for the good received. So I close by praying God's blessing on the church and the present pastor.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

After spending a few weeks on the farm, resting by doing farm labor, I came here, arriving for services September 28th. There will be two appointments here, one in town and one in the country, and probably an occasional service with our scattered members. There are probably about 170 names on our church roster, though a number are isolated and it is hard for them to reach our services.

We can not say much yet as to the work but are hopeful for the future, and pray we may be used to advance the Kingdom while here.

So praying God's blessing on our work and workers, I will close. My address the present year will be Oak Hill, West Virginia.

WM. H. MILLER.

FIRST BRETHREN, PHILADELPHIA

The First Brethren church is in the midst of an evangelistic campaign with Brother E. M. Cobb, of Dayton, Ohio, as the speaker. Dr. Cobb has been giving illustrated talks on his trip to the Holy Land and has been drawing large audiences. The interest of the people is becoming greater each evening and the working of the Holy Spirit is making itself manifest. Already a score or more have made the good confession, and others are about to yield. We look forward to the greatest meeting Tenth and Dauphin has ever experienced.

A. T. MOYER.

BEAVER CITY, NEBRASKA

Although a recent report of this work has been given by Brother Forney, we, however, have some good things to report concerning the work with the loyal band of workers at Beaver City. All departments of the church are doing excellent work. The Sunday school recently brought home the banner from the county convention for having the largest percent of increase of any Sunday school in the county. The Y. P. S. C. E. meetings are made interesting, and are well attended by the young people.

On Sunday, October fifth, we observed "Home Coming Day." Almost every member and many friends were present to make this a real home coming. The day was featured by an all day program, dinner being served at the noon hour by the S. S. C. E. In the afternoon pledges were taken to the amount of one thousand dollars, which will clear the indebtedness of the parsonage, recently purchased by the church. We will begin our revival on Sunday, October 26th. We earnestly desire the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of the work at Beaver City.

E. S. FLORA.

Communion Notice

The church at Zion Hill will observe the Holy Communion service Sunday evening, November 2. Members are urged to be present and a cordial invitation is extended to neighboring Brethren.

A. L. LYNN, Pastor.

Holy Communion will be observed at Ankenytown, Ohio, on Sunday evening, November 9. A large attendance of the members is urged and a cordial invitation to others of like faith is extended.

A. L. LYNN, Pastor.

MATHIAS, W. VA.

Having recently spent two weeks here in a revival, and having made somewhat of a general survey of the field, I feel that some things should be said, both with interest and profit. (Brother Arthur Snider will report the revival).

First. Mathias is a prosperous and busy little village, about 25 miles from the railroad (Broadway, Virginia is the nearest railroad town). They are expecting a railroad through their community before long, and the prospect seems good for one. A gravel road is also under construction now and reached about half way from Broadway. Second. While the valleys are not very large, there are lot of them and they are fertile and productive. The mountain sides are in bluegrass, hence profitable for grazing. Therefore our people can have any thing they want, and live right at home, with modern conveniences.

Third. The people represent a splendid type of citizenship, enterprising, and prosperous. They have good schools and churches. The membership of our congregation there is composed of farmers, merchants, mechanics, physicians and school teachers. (They do not know that I am saying this about them). And they are making good in their vocations.

Fourth. Our church is one of the younger congregations of the brotherhood—only about ten years old—but they are growing. They have kept the field quite closely gleaned, and have at present 250 or more members. They also own two church buildings and they are about twelve miles apart. Yet they all belong to one organization. The membership extends over a radius of about twenty miles. This is a great field, and one of great opportunities for future development. Our members here have in the past felt somewhat their isolated condition, but they are coming to feel and appreciate more and more, their interest in, and connection with the general work of the brotherhood. They are thinking more and more about the Evangelist, Ashland College, general and foreign missions. Brethren, I will predict that Mathias will be heard from through their work of faith and achievements.

This place bids fair to become a great center for Brethrenism. They believe the doctrines of the Bible, and they know why they believe them.

Let us by loyal co-operation, labor and pray to make this indeed the VICTORY year of our beloved church.

L. G. WOOD.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

Following the close of the Zion Hill canvass, we supplied for Brother E. M. Cobb at Dayton on October 12th. From Dayton we went back to Pioncer and preached two nights. While there I raised enough more to make the final result at Pioneer $365.00. In view of the fact that this field has been pastorless for at least two years, and in view moreover of the fact that uncertainty hangs over the future of the Pioneer work, I consider this result quite creditable. There are some splendid, loyal folks at Pioneer and I sincerely wish they had a pastor and that the future looked brighter for them.

I spent Friday and Saturday nights, October 17th and 18th at North Liberty, preaching each night. North Liberty used to be on the Ankenytown circuit, but at the present time is alone and has no pastor. As a rule we do not expect to find pastorless churches in a very rosy condition, and naturally my work is harder under such circumstances. Nevertheless I brought the challenge to North Liberty and I am glad I was there. I found some folks there as I find some everywhere, who have the larger vision and who were glad to respond. Then, too, I found some of the other kind. When I report that Little North Liberty went $191, I really mean that that represents what a part of the North Liberty people did. If all had taken a part according to their ability the report would have been somewhat different. Among the good folks whom I met there I shall remember the Beals and Conrads. Brother Roy Conrad was especially kind to me and placed his Ford most cheerfully at my disposal.

On Sunday morning the 19th of October, I began at Ankenytown. Ankenytown is a small village in which our church is located, but the majority of the membership is rural. This is among the very oldest Brethren congregations in Ohio. It was in this congregation that the late Elder Isaac Leedy lived many years and died. It is also the home church of Brother F. L. Garber, at present and for many years in the past, a faithful member of the Board of College Trustees. When I came to this congregation I knew I was coming among folks who, in days gone by, when Ashland College was passing through a time of grave crisis, had proven themselves stalwart friends of the school. I refer particularly to Brother Isaac Leedy, also the late Brother Daniel Beal, also some of his sons, also Brother F. L. Garber and others whose names I do not happen to have. These men with other noble Brethren of that time had to act on their faith, and what they did saved the school. And it was surely inspiring to notice how these same men whose lives have yet been spared have not grown weary in well doing, but they are ready and anxious to get in on this great drive for permanent endowment. It only proves again that the more one puts into a thing the more interest he has in it.

Our Goal: 200,000; We Can and We Must

COLLEGE

Brother Lynn is the pastor at Ankenytown. Ankenytown and Zion Hill are his circuit. I did not have the pleasure of Brother Lynn's presence with me at Ankenytown as I did at Zion Hill, for which I was sorry. But we did our very best and had a good time. I preached five times here and had fine audiences. Indeed toward the last of the canvass it began to feel like a revival meeting. Ankenytown went $2,000 and I am proud of her. This church had a man to go into the $500 class, another went $250 and another went $200. The remainder was in sums of $100 and less. The Sunday school and the W. M. S. each took a substantial part. I was also especially glad to see the fine enlistment of younger people in the cause of endowment. That is always encouraging.

But I find myself itching something terrible for some man to give me $2500 for endowment. Just think of it, two years of hard work, and 2400 people enlisted as givers to endowment, but not a single $2500 gift yet! I call that sad. But I want to say now publicly that any man giving $2500 will get his picture run on the front page of the Evangelist. I have not asked Brother Baer about this, but I will take my chances on him. Moreover, if any man will give $5000 we will include his wife's picture. And if any man will give $10,000 we will take in the whole family group with all the grandfathers and grandmothers and uncles and aunts and cousins thrown in for good measure. If Ashland College is to be a great school we must have some great givers. And I sincerely hope the present campaign will bring to light some really big gifts. Ankenytown has many fine people, and they love their pastor and he is doing fine work.

I cannot name all of the folks who were kind to me for everybody was kind, and I thank everyone and I pray God's richest blessing to rest upon them all. But I must mention by name my good natured, kind, obliging friend Walter Moses who drove me one day with his Ford, also Olin Beal who drove me two days, but not in a Ford. I struck a new one at Ankenytown—at least new to me, an "Interstate." But it did the business just as good as a Ford, so I can justly brag on it. Thank you, brethren, and may we all live to have some more good times together.

The mercury is now $121,000. Seven churches in Ohio, including two pastorless congregations and one which has its own struggles (Fremont), have gone a little better than $7500. I want to say I have no fears about Ohio. All that the Ohio churches and I need is time and good weather and we will show the brotherhood a thing or two. I am quite sure I see Indiana's finish already. And if the old Keystoneers knew what I think I know they would be a little uneasy too. I here and now give warning that Ohio means business.

After a jump to Lanark, Illinois, and Garwin, Iowa, I will return and finish Ohio.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

Seekers After the Truth and the Brethren Church

If there is one quest that engages serious minded people more than any other, it is the quest for truth. It is a universal quest; men everywhere are seeking after the truth, regardless of country, race or condition. It is an age-long quest; from the time that God placed upon man the responsibility of subduing the earth and securing dominion over all things, man has been unceasingly prying into God's secrets. It is an insatiate quest; men are ever learning, but never being satisfied with the knowledge they have, they are ever seeking more and more truth. It is a God-given faculty—this quest for truth; it is manifest in the babe as in the adult, in the savage as in the highly civilized. Everywhere and constantly men are asking as did Pilate of old, "What is truth?"

Happy would it be if all seekers would put their questions to the Lord of truth himself, and, with patience and concern not possessed by the crafty Roman governor, tarry to hear his reply. If men did but know or realize that God sent his Son into the world to reveal truth and that he stands ready to bear witness unto the truth, if men will but hear his voice! If men would tarry but for a moment in his presence and hear him passionately pray, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth"! If men, as they wander everywhere, follow any one or listen to anything that promises guidance to the secret springs of knowledge, would but heed the voice of Jesus as he says, "I am the way, the truth and the life"! But they will not; not in any great numbers. Only here one and there one; the masses do not go to the Fountain of truth; they go to every one else but him.

In a certain Chicago daily paper four entire columns of a Saturday edition are given to announcing "Sunday Services." The fact that so much space is given to such a purpose in so large a city is not the marvel, but the nature and variety of the institutions or movements there announced purposed to give religious instruction and inspiration is the thing that makes one stop and stare. Only a small portion of the announcements were of well-known and long established denominations; nearly all were announcements of curious sects, religious freak societies, organizations built up of unthinking religious zealots, and movements based upon exaggerated and abnormal religious ideas. Among them were sixteen Christian Science churches, one New Thought of Divine Science church, an All Souls' church, seven churches called Order of Fraternal Spiritualists, nine Progressive Spiritualist churches and at least one each of the following names,—First Spiritualist church, First Spiritualist Church of Welcome, First Unity Spiritualist church, First Church of Spirit Healing, First Sunflower Spiritualist church, Higher Spiritualism, Mission of the Spirit, Ever-Ready Light Spiritualist, Leading Light church, The White Rose Spiritualist Society, First Unity, Society of Chicago, Independent Religious Society, Chicago Ethical Society, Rationalist Society Theosophy club, First Church of Higher Spiritualism, Associated Bible Students (Chicago class of I. B. S. A.), whose teeth prints everywhere recognized are "Seats free. No collections"—But space is too valuable to exhaust the list—And the announcements in this Chicago paper were not unique; they are to be found in the great dailies of every large city. The eye is curious as it scans the novel names of the religious fads, but the heart is made sad at the thought of so many blind guides endeavoring to lead struggling souls into the light of truth. If the blind lead the blind, will they not fall into the ditch? How can they lead aright who themselves do not follow him who said, "I am come a light into the world that men might not walk in darkness?" The eternal quest goes on and men are giving ear to teachers of every sort; whoever gives promise of leading to the truth has a hearing and secures a following. And how many and pathetic are the disappointments that come to the hungry truth-seekers, because they seek of every one save of him who himself is truth.

These freak religious societies (Our hearts should not be bitter towards them but pitying) are grasping after the truth. However misguided their efforts or disappointing their experiences, they are actuated by the universal desire of the human heart that they might come into the knowledge of the truth. Some catch a glimmer of light shining from the life or teaching of some fellow-creature and, fixing their eyes on it, they see no other light, neither think they to be in need of any other. They do not know how dim is the light of truth that shines from these human teachers, neither do they realize that even that dim light is but a faint reflection of the glorious light that shines forth from the Son of God. Some lay hold on a little twig wrested from the great tree of eternal truth, exalt and magnify it until it becomes to them the whole tree. Others become so confused at the many conflicting claims and declarations concerning truth on the part of the self-appointed teachers, that they turn from all religious teaching and in their perplexity ask, "What is truth?"

Who will give them the answer they seek? Who will correct their perverted notions? Who will point them to the truth that is truth indeed, that they may know it and may be sanctified by it, even the holy word of God? If there is one people more responsible than any other for the satisfying of this soul hunger of the multitudes of God's spiritually unhoused children it is that people who are willing to take as their only creed and rule of faith and practice that which Jesus himself declared to be the truth that should abide forever—the word of God. What has the Brethren church done, and what is it doing to bring the light of the knowledge of the glory of God which is revealed in the face of Jesus Christ to those whose souls have not been enlightened by the brightness of heaven-revealed truth? Whatever we have done or may be doing, it is not a tithe of what we ought to be doing? For more than two centuries we have felt ourselves entrusted with the guardianship of the whole word of God as no other people have been, and yet there are those who tell us that we have been among the least concerned about giving that Word the chance of exercising the wide-sweeping influence upon the world and of performing its vitalizing and transforming work in the lives of individuals that is God's desire for it. Whether that be exactly true or an exaggeration, the fact we cannot evade is that we have not done all we could, and even today in this time of large vision, there are places where we ought to be working with great energy that our efforts are shamefully weak or entirely absent. And this fact, too, we must face, that there are great numbers of souls in the crowded centers of population that might be won to the acceptance of the whole truth as easily as a perverted form of it, if we were but there to teach it to them. "The restless millions wait the light whose dawning maketh all things new; Christ also waits, but we have been slow and late." And while they waited, other teachers, however sincere, yet self-deceived, have come to hosts of hungering men and women and offered them a substitute for the true light. We have no sorer lamentations than that there are possibly thousands who might today be living in the full light of God's truth, but are struggling away in religious twilight because we might have taken them the truth and did not. We might not now be faced with the necessity of turning thousands of people from religious fads, if we and other like-minded bodies of Christian people had been entirely faithful in letting the light of divine truth shine into the dark corners of the earth.

But we no longer have the opportunities of the past at our command; they are gone forever. Nor will it benefit us to dwell longer on our sins of omission than sufficiently to receive the lessons they have to teach us. The future is before us and the present is at hand. Never were the opportunities larger for turning the mind of the world back upon the revealed word of God than now, and at the same time, never was the struggle more life between the legion of freak sects and genuine Christianity than now. Never was there more need than now for a church that stands unequivocally upon the whole gospel of Jesus Christ to establish itself in the cities of our land where hosts of hungry souls are nifed except with curious religious fads. The hearts of men everywhere are yearning for the truth. But how shall they hear it except it be preached in its purity and simplicity? And how shall men preach except they be sent? And how shall they be sent in anything like adequate numbers except the church be aroused from its half-heartedness and receive a new baptism of consecration, power and zeal such as it has not received since the days of Pentecost?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Send your Home Mission offering to William A. Gearhart, 906 Conover Building, Dayton, Ohio.

You will notice from Brother Bauman's announcement that The Brethren Missionary is coming, though delayed.

The evangelistic campaign in progress at Goshen with Brother A. E. Thomas as preacher is meeting with satisfactory results. A goodly number of souls have already responded to the invitation and doubtless the harvest is not yet complete.

The narrative by Brother Bell, "From Long Beach to Spokane," is very interesting, and we can imagine how we would have appreciated such a period of relaxation as he must have experienced as he made his way over that long mountain trail.

Brother Glenn Carpenter, one of the pillars in the Ardmore (South Bend) mission reports the work in excellent condition and that they now have as their pastor, Brother A. T. Wirick. Their ambition to take Ardmore for Christ is a most laudable one.

Brother Barnhart writes that he closed his pastorate at Pleasant Hill, Ohio, on September 28th, and will be open to a call for evangelistic and Bible institute work. In a comment on a previous communication, we stated that he was open to a call to evangelistic and pastoral work, but we are now informed that we misunderstood his remarks and that he is not seeking a pastorate.

Whether the pastorate is long or short, there is always a reluctance about the separation of pastor and people when the relations have been very pleasant. This was the case with Brother Bryan Stoffer and his loyal people at Washington C. H., Ohio. He had a very short pastorate at that place, but it was a very pleasant one, and doubtless profitable as well. But he answered the call to prepare in a larger way for the work whereunto he has been called.

Every one seems to enjoy the bright Christian Endeavor page of The Evangelist, we frequently hear nice things about this page. Brother Garber and his co-workers are doing fine work. Let the young people keep on boosting and encouraging one another by their splendid reports and they will surely go over the top during this "Victory Year."

Our "Publication Number" of The Evangelist promised at the time of our entrance into our new building, but delayed because we were told it could not be made on the old press, will be published November 26th. Since it was delayed to this date we are delaying it further until after the Home Mission offering is lifted. We want everybody to think Home Missions until after Thanksgiving. That will be a good time to order some "extras" in an effort to put The Evangelist in every home of your congregation.

If there is one thing that is more important than any other at this particular time, so far as it concerns the whole brotherhood, it is the Home Mission offering to be taken at the Thanksgiving season, either on the Sunday preceding or the Sunday following that festival day. In the interest of that noble cause The Evangelist is giving large space and first attention, and it is our prayer that every leader in the church will co-operate just as heartily with the Home Mission Board and the plans of Brother Gearhart, the General Missionary Secretary, in the effort to make this the banner offering for that cause. You will not fail to read what certain members of the Home Board have to say on the "Mission" page. Keep in mind the "Special Home Mission Number of the Evangelist" to be issued November 19. If the paper is not going into every home of your congregation, and you wish the help of this issue in lifting a good offering, send immediately for extra copies to be sent to one address at 25c per dozen copies. We cannot supply any large number of extra copies unless the order reaches us by the 17th.

Social Program For Churches To Be Outlined By World Leaders

"The Church and the Man In the Industrial Center." By H. F. E. O'Neill

Address delivered at Pennsylvania State Conference, at Johnstown

Just what was in the mind of the committee when they assigned this subject to be presented at this conference is not clear to me, but having been left to my own conclusions regarding the matter, I assumed that what was desired was a survey of the industrial situation in which some of our churches find themselves. A survey of any district develops the condition and needs of that particular community, and having discovered these needs, offers a suggestion of how we as a church can help to meet them. These findings that I shall present are real ones and are based on the results of religious surveys in Pittsburgh and other cities, so that they are not imaginary or theoretical, but actual. Of course a survey of any one field could not meet in detail the conditions of every other community, but the principles involved would be the same.

The very first thing we find is that in an industrial center there is a large percentage of foreigners. These are in most cases members of the Roman Catholic church.

The second condition revealed is that of inadequate and inefficient housing. This is particularly true among European and colored people.

The third is the large number of unchurched people in any industrial community.

Another condition is the large number of people who have never brought into the community in which they are living their letters from the churches from which they came.

The matter of the Child Welfare Organization in the community, regarding the matter of sweat-shop trade and the employing of men, women and children under conditions that are not only not favorable but absolutely harmful to those employed.

Another condition is that of the breaking of the law by merchants, regarding the sale of cigarettes, and the condition which we hope has about passed out of existence forever is that of the saloon selling intoxicating liquor to minors.

There are other conditions that are revealed as the result of any survey in an industrial center, in fact, I should say they are too numerous to mention all of them, but methinks I hear some one say, "But what has this to do with the church, or what has the church to do with these conditions?" They are political, economic or social but not religious. The solution of these problems or the showing of the connection between the church and them, I assume is what the Committee had in mind when they assigned this topic.

Going back to the first condition, we suggested that of the foreign population or as they are more properly called the non-English speaking population, there is a relationship. I think that the church can and should sustain to these people. If you will just travel with me to any of the European countries and on landing at the port of debarkation, say France, for instance, after the inspection by government officials of your physical condition, you then go down the gangplank and probably for the first time in your life find yourself in a foreign country, and then you have your first idea of what being in a country in which the people do not speak the same language as you and do not have the same ideas and ideals as you have been accustomed to is like. You cannot step up to any person and tell them just what you want or ask for the information that you desire, for you do not both speak and understand the same language. After having tried for a half-hour or so to make the person understand what you want, you give up and leave them in disgust, try some other place or person, and after having put up at some restaurant and having secured little or nothing to eat and it commences to dawn on you that you have no place to sleep and that you are anywhere from 1 to 1,000 miles from the place for which you started, you will no doubt have formed the opinion in your contact with these European peoples that they do not care very much about whether you land at your destination or not. If you can imagine any such trip as this, only then can you begin to appreciate the position of these non-English speaking people in your community, and yet, how much different would your first experience in a European country be, as I have tried briefly to imagine it, than is the condition of the European people who come to this country. Oh, the feeling of strangeness in a strange land.

There is a language of love and fellowship which every human being understands which can be shown by use as Christian people to these strangers in our midst and this is the one place where the church has a vital relation with these people. If we would be more willing and ready to show a real Christian spirit, which carries with it the program of Christian social service, the results obtained in winning them for the Christian life would be marvelous. A great many of these people as they leave European and Asiatic countries have heard from missionaries and others of America as a Christian nation, and yet their first impression as they land in the communities in which we live, they receive by no means what they expect from a so-called Christian people, for as they approach us, they find us turning aside and gathering our skirts closely about us as though we were afraid we would be contaminated by the smell of garlic or something else that is not any more pleasant to our highly trained sensibilities. The meaning of fellowship is "two fellows in the same boat," and some such definition as this is what Jesus had in mind when he spoke of having fellowship one with another, and we cannot demonstrate or show the spirit of fellowship if we are so much afraid of the leeks and onions that we will go to the other side of the street or run into a storeroom or find some other excuse for avoiding these folks who have come to live in our midst. Christianity is Christlikeness and Christ's illustrations of his own actions regarding foreigners, I fear, would far outdo ours. When he came in contact with the woman of Samaria, whose people hated his, he did not treat her as we treat these folks from European countries whom we have no right to hate. There is plenty of opportunity for helping these folks get comfortably located and in case of sickness minister to them and in case of accident and death to sympathize with them, and to help them understand America as we understand it, (?) and to help them take advantage of its opportunities of educational and other helpful agencies. I cannot go farther into the detail of how our church can help these people, the number of whom mounts high in our industrial communities.

There are communities, but I think most of the churches represented here, are not situated where they have the Young Men's Christian Association, and kindred organizations to take the lead in the interdenominational way of doing this, therefore, in presenting this subject, I am thinking mostly of the communities which do not have these other organizations and where this is true, there is an unlimited opportunity for our church to take the lead in this work, as well as in the other lines I shall suggest, and where the Y. M. C. A. or other agencies are organized, it does not lessen the responsibility of the church, but simply affords them the opportunity of co-operation with said organizations. And can you tell me of any church that has a greater right to take the lead in these things than we who claim to be a "Whole Gospel church?" If the showing of the Christian spirit to a person who is in a real sense a stranger in our midst is not one of our first and foremost duties, I should be glad to have some person explain to me what is our duty.

The housing condition. This may or may not be related to the foreign population, but certainly as Christian business men, we should be interested in the right housing condition in our community, seeing to it that corporations are formed that can co-operate with the individuals in the securing of homes, seeing that the sanitary conditions of the town are what they should be, that the proper sewerage and disposal of garbage is looked after. This phase of our work may be more specifically related to the political side, but to my notion it is time that more Christian men become interested in the political and economic conditions of the community in which they live and that they shall not be afraid to manifest to the public and to the political leaders that they will no longer stand for graft and corruption as it has in some instances existed in the past.

In considering the subject of the church and the men in the industrial community, there is always the denominational aspect to consider, and we have been prone to show a spirit of timidity and unwillingness to take the initiative in the community lest we seem to be proselyting but the religious survey has revealed that there are a great many people in the industrial community who really have no church affiliation and no church preference, but are willing to follow in their church affiliations and in their religious life those who manifest most the spirit of Christ, as it is manifested by those leaders of religious thought and action in the interest of the things that are of vital concern to them. For instance, if a family in the community has been afflicted with a disease, and you go to them, regardless of whether they believe as you do or not, and help them in this hour of affliction, there will be no person in the community whose advice they will be willing to follow as they will yours. If a family is in distress and you help them, you can later talk religion and church to them and in most cases will not have any trouble winning them. I think in most every instance when Christ found a person in need of some physical aid, he rendered it first and then talked religion to them, and so if we will pour into these wounded hearts the oil of gladness when they are sorely afflicted, we will find little trouble in leading them into the Christian life, and regarding the matter of denominationalism, if you find a family whom you have visited or served have inclinations toward a particular denomination which has an organization in your community, the Christian thing to do is to immediately get in touch with the pastor or representative of that church, give him the name and address of the party, and the circumstances connected with them. This will win for you the highest spirit of respect and co-operation on the part of the other denominations in your community as well as for the family you have served.

It is a sad fact that a great many of the members of all the Protestant denominations in going from one community to another fail to take with them their church letters. A great service can be rendered in this matter. In making it your business to visit a family as soon as they locate in your community, and if they have been a member of a church in the town from which they came, urge them to bring their church letters at once. They are prone to leave this matter go from week to week and month to month. There are hundreds of church letters that are lifted when leaving a community that are never deposited on reaching another, and you can be of wonderful assistance in the matter of encouraging these people to deposit their church letter or unite with some church of the community, even though there is not in the community the same denomination from which they came.

The proper working condition of men, women and children is one to which the church of Jesus Christ can well relate itself. Long hours, overwork, and unsanitary and unhealthful surroundings should be a matter of concern to us and steps should be taken at once by the Christian people through civic and other organizations to remedy these. There are federal and state laws regarding hours especially for women and children and this should be adhered to as nearly as possible.

There is a law regarding the sale of cigarettes to boys under 16 years of age, and inasmuch as it is a physiological fact that the use of cigarettes is harmful to the mental and physical condition of the boy, it is a part of our religious duty to see to it that these laws are enforced and thereby try to keep from the boy as far as possible the use of cigarettes which will interfere with his proper all-around development.

You have all heard a great deal about the necessity of our churches changing their program of work because of our boys having been in the army. Most of this, I am frank to say, after a careful and prayerful consideration of the matter and considerable experience, is either the result of too great an imagination or else a lack of real knowledge of both the soldier and the church. I appreciate that having gone through an experience such as our boys did who were in the trenches in the European country that they may change their ideas concerning certain things and they may have a little different conception of God, and while it is a psychological fact that man having passed through such an experience does not come out of it exactly the same man as when he entered, yet they are in the large the same fellows that they were when they went in. The church that may have to change their plans and methods of work are those that failed before the war to manifest the spirit of Christ seven days a week. On the other hand, the church that has by the Christlike spirit of its members demonstrated to the world that it is interested in the mental, social, physical and spiritual needs of the man, will not need to change its plan and program, but simply to intensify it. The preacher and the lay-member of the church that demonstrates the spirit of Christ in meeting the needs of men will not want for hearers and followers.

You will note that I am not here discussing the institutional church, but while I am on this subject, this fact is connected with the institutional church,—if we were not so hide-bound in most of our churches about the use of the church building and would open it as a community center for activities that while in themselves might not be specifically religious, but would be a wonderful means of showing our interest in meeting and solving social, physical and educational needs, as well as eventually satisfying the spiritual interest of the people, the church would be more highly respected and would accomplish much more. I have no reference to using the church building for festival and other money making schemes, for I am not unmindful of the action of Jesus Christ himself regarding the selling of doves and oxen and the exchanging of money in his Father's house, but even in that instance it was the wrong spirit that was manifested, that of overcharging and profiteering, that the Lord objected to. Nor am I forgetful of what he said his Father's house was for, that it was specifically a house of prayer, and what I have just said regarding the use of the church building more as a community center would influence the public and be the means of securing larger attendance for the use of it as a place of prayer, but as I said before, most of the discoveries that I suggested as a result of the religious survey of the community can be done without any additional use of the church building. But I am convinced that in other ways than merely by holding services and preaching sermons on the Lord's Day will the church be able to gain from the people of the community a response to her teaching. Devotion and consecration on the part of the members, which will lead to a Christlike manifestation of the religion we profess in our everyday lives toward the people of the community will help to win them for Christ.

In addition to these things religious meetings might be held with profit in the industries at the noon hour, at which a plain practical gospel talk could be given to the men and the opportunity had for fellowship by the preacher with the men when they were in their daily pursuits. Here he would have the chance to grasp their hands that were covered with grime as the result of an honest day's toil, and this would give the preacher a chance to show his interest in them in other ways than simply securing church attendance.

While the picture that I have just been drawing for you is taken from an industrial community, the same principles might be worked out in a country community. The country grocery store could be made the center of attraction and instead of having the men waste all their leisure time sitting on counters and boxes and kegs, chewing and smoking tobacco and pouring forth foul stories, by a little discretion and judgment the situation could be changed so that men would gather for discussion of profitable subjects and the carrying out of programs that would benefit both performer and audience and the men could be related to service tasks and community interests that would revolutionize the country for miles around. Bible study groups could often be formed; cottage prayer meetings and "gospel sings" conducted. In these and many other ways they can extend its influence if it will but show itself a real friend to men in all situations in life.

Pride. By Mrs. C. E. Nicholas

Ethics classes pride with the rational emotions,—it is rational because it centers in self. It is an extremely pleasing emotion,—a proud heart is full of himself.

The types of pride—the TRUE and the FALSE—will enable us to determine whether this emotion is a virtue or whether it is a vice (even a virtue may become a vice).

Every individual has a perfect right to be proud; it is a God-given emotion. Every life,—and especially every Christian life—should be possessed of true pride. It is a just feeling every man should have for his moral dignity and should be cherished as a sacred right.

True pride is related to the sacred and divine in us, while false pride is related to the trifling and petty concerns of life. True pride frees us from oppression; false pride seeks to oppress us, to bind us to the fetters of sin. True pride is noble and uplifting; false pride, brutal and insolent.

We have people who are proud of their birth and ancestry,—this is as it should be; every man should keep his family name untarnished, though too much pride displayed in this respect becomes disgusting. There are those who are proud of their intellectual abilities—we can scarcely blame them. These abilities are blessings from heaven; they are a part of their personality, but too much of this becomes objectionable. There is still another class of people who are proud of their virtues,—of all prides this is the most pardonable, but pardonable as it is, it may be carried so far that it becomes a vice.

Every man and woman has a just right to be proud; every Christian must be possessed of true pride, but in this as in many other God-given principles man has allowed it to degenerate and today we are facing the woeful results of FALSE pride.

Oh! for more courage to hold fast to the true principles of a Christian life; it is the every-day living that speaks for or against the Christian profession.

It is this instinct of TRUE PRIDE that enables us to live an upright life before our God and fellow men. May that pride increase.

A Practical Phase of the Interchurch Movement. By George S. Baer

Nothing more promising has arisen in many years than the Interchurch World Movement. It is promising not only because it purposes to bring about a united front on the part of the Christian forces of the world, but because it would bring the wonderful influence of a united church to bear upon every phase of life which the church seeks to save. For many years the church was more or less justly criticised because of its indifference to the social and industrial conditions of man. While men have ever recognized that the highest function of the church is to bring about the regeneration of the inner life of man, yet there has been a wide-spread conviction on the part of the needy and distressed masses to whom the church sought to appeal, that if the church was actually sincere in its desire to give the whole gospel of Christ, it could not be entirely indifferent to the wretched conditions under which they were compelled to live. In spite of the church's most earnest entreaties to men of the world to get right with God and save their souls, there have been men who have refused to give heed to the church's divine message until it has followed its Master's example and administered physical relief and supplied the temporal bread for the lack of which their bodies were wearied and exhausted. And more and more the church has been led to see its responsibility for the well-being of the whole man. It recognizes today as never before that whatever interferes with man's physical development and health, denies him of his rights and cuts short his intellectual attainments and enjoyments, is an enemy of the church against which it must array itself with all the effectiveness of its united strength and wisdom. In the interest of an important phase of the church's practical service the Interchurch World Movement has established the Industrial Relations of which Fred B. Fisher is the director. This is only one phase of the Movement's great comprehensive program, but it is an important one. Following are the aims of this department:

"To formulate and give expression to the principles and policies of the Interchurch World Movement with reference to industrial relationships,

"To disseminate by means of lectures and publications a knowledge of the historic development of economic and social conditions.

"To represent the Movement in its relation to outside economic, social or governmental agencies, in the solution of industrial problems.

"To keep the various Units of the Organization informed as to the developments in the existing industrial and social conditions."

An Industrial Information Division will prepare literature and speeches on all current phases of the industrial situation, including such topics as the National Minimum Standard of Living, the History of Labor and Industry, Housing, Women in Industry, Agricultural Labor, Migratory Workers, Racial Relations, and Government Services and Information. It will also conduct a correspondence course for the training of ministers and speakers in industrial relations.

The Democracy in Industry and Industrial Disputes Division will make first hand study of industrial disputes and render whatever service seems possible looking toward a just settlement.

It will also study and catalog the occasions of the suppression of free speech, disseminate reliable information thereto, and furnish suppressed groups the place and opportunity for free discussion of any and all affairs short of advocacy of violence.

The Employment Management Division will disseminate information concerning relations between employer and employee, give publicity to plans in actual practice which have been conducive to bringing about harmonious relationships, and render service to industries in considering the relationships which should exist between themselves and employees and in setting up plans and organization for the conduct of such relationships.

This division also will promote among employers the idea of recognizing labor in management, looking ultimately to their having a voice in the financial control. It will promote the idea of responsibility among employees for production both on quality and quantity and develop their sense of individual responsibility.

A Co-operative Division will promote the formation of co-operative societies, a New Citizens Division will promote immigrant farm colonization schemes and assist new arrivals in other ways.

Atheism. By T. Darley Allen

Alfred Noyes puts a great deal into a few words when he says:

"And our bo'sun Bill was an atheist still Except—sometimes—in the dark!"

Man is instinctively religious. As H. L. Hastings said, the ancient Egyptians built pyramids and worshiped cats. Although intellectually great, their religion is, to us, the height of absurdity, thereby showing that a religion of some kind is a necessity to man. In spite of their intellectual greatness the Egyptians could not realize the folly of their religion, or at least could not do without it with all its absurdities. It was the best religion they were able to evolve, but it was better than none. To do without religion altogether was to them impossible.

Plutarch wrote: "You might find communities without walls, without letters, without kings, without houses, without money, with no need of coinage, without acquaintance with theaters and gymnasia; but a community without rite, without a god, that uses not prayer, nor oath nor divination, nor sacrifice to win good and avert evil, no man ever saw nor will see."

Atheism has no attraction except when the world looks bright. Men who proclaim themselves atheists are as likely as the rest of mankind to turn to God upon the approach of danger. Like the English coal miner who is said to have publicly referred to a companion who was an atheist until "a large cob of coal fell upon him," when he began "to holler and cry to God," we realize that "there is nothing like cobs of coal for knocking infidelity out of a man" and that a profession of atheism is not likely to exist long in the presence of danger.

John Fiske refers to the remark of Lalande the astronomer that he had swept the heavens with his telescope and had found no God there as an example of the flippant ease with which some minds can dispose of the gravest of questions. He also refers to the physiologist, Moleschott, who said, "No thought without phosphorus," and believed he had disposed of the question of man's immortality. With reference to these statements of Lalande and Moleschott, Fiske says: "Perhaps these are the two silliest remarks that ever appeared in print."

Did You Stop to Think? By E. E. Roberts

Are you in the habit of attending church and Sunday school on Sunday? No! Then you spend it in pleasures—visiting, automobiling or in sports. Did you ever stop to think what fearful results would follow should every one follow your example? In a short time there would be no churches; for they would all be closed and we would have a churchless, Godless nation. You would not want to live in such a land, much less have your children to grow up in it. Such conditions prevail in India, China and Africa. Where there are no churches there are no schools, consequently, ignorance prevails. There is no justice; night is right. He gets who can, and holds who's able. There is no liberty; the poor are enslaved to the rich and powerful. There are no hospitals; the sick are carted out to the jungles to die or be killed by wild beasts. There are no homes for the aged; they may beg if they can. There are no almshouses for the worthy poor; they too may beg if they can, or starve if they can not. There are no orphan children's homes; the children are fed to crocodiles. In fact, there is not one single blessing that we enjoy that is not the fruit of the church,

Are these blessings of no importance to YOU? or to YOUR'S? Do you feel no obligation resting upon you to perpetuate them by your presence? Think it over carefully. Have you not enjoyed these blessings without cost or effort long enough?

You would spurn the thought of being a "dead beat" in temporal things. Why be one in spiritual things? Be the man or woman God intended you to be. Give your heart to God. Consecrate your body to loving service to him. For the day is close at hand when Christ will come and gather his children out of this world, and you will be left to live in the world without the church and all the blessings that it provides,—live with thieves, liars, murderers,—and all the other children of hell. Not a very delightful prospect, you will admit. Oh! Be wise. Give God your life in loving service.

DO IT NOW!

Armenia's Call to America

In 1914, the Turco-Germans offered the Armenians of Turkey and those of Russia autonomy conditioned upon their lending united support to them against the Allies. The Armenians rejected the Turco-German offer and stated that they would not go beyond the limits imposed upon them by their allegiance to Turkey. The destruction of one million Armenians was the answer of the Turks to the refusal of the Armenians who lived in Turkish Armenia and other parts of Turkey in 1914 have been destroyed and the majority of the rest have been driven away from their homes.

Over two hundred thousand Armenians fought in the armies of the Allies and the Associated Powers. Following the defection of Russia in 1917, the Armenians of Russian Armenia, alone and surrounded by enemies on all sides, and without any outside help, improvised a force of 50,000 men, and for seven months fought the common enemy. Armenian contingents fought the Turks until the conclusion of the armistice in the Caucasus and in Palestine. The bitter experiences the Armenians have gone through during the war and the terrible sufferings to which they have been subjected since the conclusion of the armistice have disorganized the Armenian social system, and they have also strongly shaken the morale of the Armenian people. Having fought and suffered for the cause and faith of western civilization, the Armenians now turn to America for help to reconstitute the framework of an independent national life. They turn to America because they believe in the essential disinterestedness of America. They want America to lend them civil and military advisers, and they want America to help them organize their army with which to occupy their country. All the material help that America will be called upon to give them shall be made by way of loans. It is quite possible that 5,000 to 10,000 American troops may have to be sent to Armenia for police duty, while the Armenian forces are being organized. But all these things are of a provisional character. The thing they need most is the moral support of America. The knowledge that America is back of them will inspire and encourage them, and that fact will exert a tremendously great steady effect upon the native populations within and outside the boundaries of Armenia. If America gives them the help that they need, Armenians will become independent. But if, on the other hand, America declines that help to them, then it is extremely problematical if Armenia can secure independence. Because, if America were to decline that help to them, that will offer the Powers the opportunity to divide Armenia among themselves into spheres or zones of influences for their own benefit. It is precisely for America to say as to whether or not Armenia shall become independent. Very little help from great America will make possible the realization of the dreams of centuries, and with that realization there shall be in the Near East a Christian nation that will stand for the ideals and faith of America.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Content of the Gospel. By J. Wesley Platt

TEXT: "For I am not ashamed of the Gospel: for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth: to the Jew first; and also to the Greek."

Ever since Adam and Eve ate of the forbidden tree in the Garden of Eden, SIN has been the superior and dominant principle in and over man. It drove our first parents from the blessed place and conditions of a happy fellowship with God, the Father, and all the joys of primaevial innocence, out into a world of woe. Because of it the earth was cursed and the displeasure of the only true and righteous God was revealed to them, and since then upon their sinful posterity. Eve was told of the awful and terrible condition she had now caused to be visited upon the unborn generations of humanity. Adam was told of the grave and stupendous blunder he had made in hearkening to the voice of his wife instead of the voice of his Creator, and of the subsequent trials through which he and his kind should pass on account of his deliberate disobedience, for as far as the record indicates, the devil said nothing to him, only to his wife and he did not appear to be the least bit concerned about his act, just simply took and ate.

The serpent was cursed, in short, the cloud of wrath and judgment of God enshrouded the whole situation, and from that day to this the world has been full of sin and sorrow. Blame Adam and Eve for such an awful choice? YES. But let us remember that in the majority of instances, men have ever made the same response to the same challenge. Obey God and have blessed fellowship; they have disobeyed him and wandered hither and yon with no peace or guiding light. So the Apostle John declares, "The whole world lieth in the wicked one."

The choice was made. It was indeed a dark day when the spirit of man crashed into the basement of his being and became subordinated to his emotional and physical life, for instead of walking according to knowledge and divine intelligence he now lives on the lower planes of soul and body. In other words, man is living on a fallen plane, and the fall he made was a fall deep and downward. Yet I have often heard it said that here we have the beginning of the freedom of the human will. I ask you, friends, free from what? There is positively only one answer, free from the will of God. Am I not correct? Let's think again. Did man become an independent moral being by this choice to disobey God? Ah! there's the rub. Had the events in the garden been subjective and spontaneous and autonomous, man might have come to a place of independence, but the facts of the affair disclose this sad and awful truth, that the thing which freed man from the will of God put him under the will of the devil. The more I read the Word of God and observe the conduct of man, the more am I convinced that what some delight to call their independence is not so independent after all. The choice we make invariably runs in one of two directions; not one of three, as some would like to have us think: we either choose according to the will of God or according to the will of the devil. Our choices are either in the way of life or the way of death. There is no neutral position, nor is there a choice that does not affect God or Satan. Taking the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ himself concerning the final state of man, we are again made to realize that man will either spend his eternity with God, having been born again by the will of God, or he will spend it in hell with the devil and his angels. I find no other conclusion; I can come to no other. Where then is our boasting and what is the occasion of it? There is none save in the Christ who died that WE might be freed from the dominion of the devil by denying ourselves and taking up our cross to follow him.

We'll go back to Eden again. In the darkness of that cataclysmic hour God speaks once more, in grace he projects the good news, that the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head and the serpent shall bruise only the heel of the seed of the woman. Somehow it occurs to me that this bit of God's word is very essentially the gospel for it speaks of deliverance. At once there is evident anticipation for the promised deliverer, and at the birth of her first son Eve says, "I have gotten me a man from the Lord." But, alas, no, for he can not deliver from sin who himself was conceived and born in it. Yet there remains the promise and the hope of deliverance, and I believe if we realize even in a limited degree the eternal consequences of sin, there is nothing that will arrest our attention and occupy our thought like the idea of deliverance. Paul in some measure knew the strong hold of sin upon the spirit of man and in the extremity of his weakness, he cries out, "O wretched man that I am! Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" Here lies the content of the gospel. Here is good news. Think of it. Glory to God, there is a deliverance from the PENALTY of sin; there is a deliverance from the POWER AND DOMINION of sin, and, praise God, there is a deliverance from the very PRESENCE of sin when Jesus comes again. Sin will not forever have its strong grip on all the affairs of man. Just now it is appalling in its subtlety and power. There is no use in any effort to argue that there is sin. It is. And the most sensible thing for us to do is to recognize it and understand that it holds the place that God declares it holds, and set ourselves to the task of declaring to the world the gospel which Paul says is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. We must tell abroad that there is salvation from sin for everyone that believeth the gospel.

Spanning then the age from Eden to that memorable night when the angelic host sang, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased," and the leader of the heavenly messengers said to the shepherds, "Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior which is Christ the Lord," we view the high point of the love and grace of God. We come to the event which begins in time the great culminating work of God in making the promises of faith the realizations of sight. Jesus Christ came as the hymn writer so touchingly describes it, "Out of the ivory palaces, into a world of woe." He came to put away sin, to save the sinner. He not only came to teach us the way of salvation, but he came to save us by himself. HE IS THE SAVIOR. HE SAVES.

Thus far I have emphasized but one point or element of the gospel which is the occasion of the next thought we shall consider briefly but most clearly. Our conclusion to this consideration is Romans 5:12, "Therefore, as through one man SIN entered into the world, and death through sin; and so death passed unto all men, for that all sinned." Here is the black picture of a ruined and lost race that is absolutely without hope in the world. There is no hope of any considerable self improvement Godward. So we take up the next step or element which brings us to the DELIVERER and the DELIVERANCE. Here we have absolute and positive assurance. Here the anchor holds against all storms and tempests.

See, the black cloud breaks. Light appears. The night is spent and the day is at hand. God speaks again. Jesus, who speaks for God, tells the world, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life. For God sent not the Son into the world to judge the world; but that the world should be saved through him" (John 3:16, 17). "And in none other is there salvation: for neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, wherein we must be saved" (Acts 4:12). "Who (Jesus) was delivered up for our trespasses, and was raised for our justification" (Romans 4:25); "Now I make known unto you, brethren, the gospel which I preached unto you,* * * that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures; and that he was buried; and that he hath been raised on the third day according to the scriptures" (1 Cor. 15:1, 3, 4). "Him who knew no sin he made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in him" (2 Cor. 5:1). "Grace to you and peace from God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ, who gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us out of this present evil world, according to the will of our God and Father: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen" (Gal. 1:3, 4); "When he had by himself purged our sins, he sat down on the right hand of the majesty on high" Heb. 1:3).

These scriptures and numerous others present not only the act of our deliverance from sin but the Deliverer himself in the person of Jesus Christ.

In the gospel we are assured that we are delivered from sin by the personal work of Jesus. We realize this salvation by faith in the finished work of Christ. We only accept it. We become new creatures in him, having been born again. Our first look of faith turns back to the cross and Calvary; and the empty tomb and the risen Jesus; our next look is

Christ's Strength Sufficient

By Mrs. Arthur R. Baer

OUR SCRIPTURE

In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and strengthenest me with strength in my soul (Psalms 138:3). For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that he would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Jesus Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith (Ephesians 3:14-17a). For this cause we also, since the day we heard it, do not cease to pray for you, and to desire that ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding; that ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God; strengthened with all might, according to his glorious power, unto all patience and longsuffering with joyfulness (Colossians 1:9-11). Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me (2 Timothy 4:17a). I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me (Philippians 4:13).

OUR MEDITATIONS

In John 11:41, 42 we read these words. "Father. I thank thee that thou hast heard me. And I knew that thou hearest me always."

What a comfort it was, what a source of strength and power it was to our Master to know that his Father heard him always. Living in the Father as he did, yet at all times he found it best to ask for strength and power.

Then he comes to us with the message. "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock and it shall be opened unto you. For everyone that asketh, receiveth, and he that seeketh, findeth, and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened." How then can we be cowardly, timid disciples of Jesus Christ?

I am reminded of Nicodemus, the man who came to Jesus by night. A great deal of criticism had been aroused by Jesus' acts and words. Nicodemus had been impressed and wanted to learn more of him, so he goes by night and talks with him, and I feel that Nicodemus believed and loved Jesus after that night's interview, yet he could not be used by Jesus because of his timidity. John in his gospel makes plain the fact that Jesus suffered much from these secret, timid disciples. Many of the rulers, even those who plotted for his death, believed in Jesus, but for fear of the personal consequences, kept silent when they could have been of the most service to him. We see him as he weeps and says of Jerusalem, "How oft would I have gathered you together as a hen doth her brood under her wings, but ye would not." And he looks with the same pity and beseeching upon those who today claim to be his followers and yet are too timid outwardly to confess him in their daily life.

There are none of us who have the power within ourselves for the duties of life. It is only because of God's mercy in sending his blessings upon the unjust as well as the just that we all receive so bountifully from him. But we can receive more strength if we will. Too many of us are satisfied to sit by and leave the work to others. If we only lived as well as we knew how to live, we would be very good people. The trouble is, our doing lags far behind our knowledge of what ought to be done. There may be something in our lives which causes lack of freedom and power for Christ. We may be so tied up with the things of this world that we are not awake to our sense of duty to God. Possibly we hesitate because the steady pull day by day seems too much for us. It may be we are trying it in our own strength. But why carry our burdens when he has promised to carry them for us? Why not go to Christ and leave with him our burdens and carry away a new supply of power and strength for ourselves and others? He is the source of all power, and only as we receive from him are we able to work for him. We cannot lead others closer than we are ourselves. Just as surely as the flowers get the sunshine, the rain and the dew, just so surely may we depend upon God to supply all our needs.

But, first of all, we must seek his help and guidance. One thing is certain, Christ does want us to rely most completely on it; that asking, seeking and knocking cannot be in vain, for he says we shall receive and we shall find.

Christ thought it needful to present this truth because he knows our hearts, how doubt and distrust creep in, and how easily we are inclined to give up. He knows, too, that even though we believe that God hears prayer, yet to pray is something which often seems too high and too difficult for the timid disciple to do. He therefore seeks to impress upon us this truth, that prayer does avail much, and that we shall receive strength if we ask in faith believing. Then we shall receive those things which we need, for he knows before we ask him, the things we have need of. How comforting it is to know that he has promised, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you."

His promises are sure. Let us pray for faith to trust him more implicitly. As a child trusts its earthly father, may we much more trust him, and have confidence in him, knowing that "We can do all things through Christ who strengthens us."

OUR PRAYER

O Lord Jesus, we thank thee for these living blessed words which thou hast given us. Grant us a fuller understanding and a stronger faith in what thou has promised. We do believe thee. We believe in thee as the Father infinite in thy love and power. We know that all thou hast promised thou wilt perform. Increase our faith in thee. Let it so take possession of our hearts and lives that through faith, God alone may dwell there. May our trust in thee be as the fellowship of a child with its father. The child asks and the father gives. So may we bring our needs and our sins and our temptations to thee in confidence, knowing that thou dost care for all. We are thy children. We trust in thee for strength. May thy will become so much a part of our lives that thy power will be strength sufficient for every care and temptation and keep us sweet in our daily lives. Amen.

Marion, Indiana.

to the great High Priest who has gone into the heavens where he intercedes for his children and gives them power over the world, the flesh and the devil; our next look is forward to his glorious appearing when we shall be delivered from the presence of sin and so shall we ever be with the Lord. The gospel is always efficacious and can be appropriated in its glories by whomsoever will.

In conclusion, let me say that the gospel is the only answer to the multitude of perplexing problems that confront the human race at the present time or have ever needed solution. We find that upon putting it to the test, that it meets every need of body, soul and spirit. In believing and obey-ing the gospel we shall see better physical specimens, and become such ourselves. I find also that the boy or girl or man or woman who puts into practice the gospel, will find Jesus Christ a great purifying friend who keeps the emotions right and godly and directs them into a manner of life that enables only pure emotions can flow out and express themselves. And it goes without much emphasis that the gospel gives a spiritual vision to the person who is born of the Spirit of God according to the will of God.

Therefore let us preach the gospel wherever we go, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.

How Prohibition Works and Progresses

Boston Saving on Deer Island Expenses

The House of Correction on Deer Island in 1915 cost Boston $305,679.78. Since July first the number of inmates has declined so rapidly that there are now only 300 as against 1100 in 1915. This year it is estimated that the cost of Deer Island will be only $202,403.36, a saving of about $100,000. Already $25,000 of the appropriation granted for the institution this year has been turned back.

World's W. C. T. U. Convention in London

In April, 1920, from the 18 to the 23, the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union with national organizations in forty-one countries, will hold its tenth World's Convention in London, England. One of the historic sites in the city has been selected for the place of meeting—Westminster Central Hall, just opposite Westminster Abbey. On April 18 temperance sermons will be preached in Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral and the Roman Catholic Cathedral by prominent ecclesiastes.

Crime Decreases

Chief of Police, Scott A. Godley says in Kansas City Star, "It is my opinion that crime will be reduced 50 percent by prohibition. That effect is already noticeable. Packing houses note results. Men were usually absent from work Mondays and sometimes Tuesdays as well when saloons were open. Now each man is back at his job Monday morning."

The Baltimore Sun says, "The total number of arrests on the first Saturday after prohibition became effective was less than the number made at one police station when the city was wet." The police "were amazed at the change produced by prohibition."

Boston police department records show that the smallest number of arrests on a Saturday since records were kept, were reported for the twenty-four hours ending July 5 at midnight. Similar results are reported from many cities.

Real estate men declare that a dry nation will help business.

Insurance men say sobriety will increase number eligible for life insurance.

From a Starving to a Feeding Basis

A certain Ohio brewery, recently converted into a malted milk plant, now employs 278 men where formerly only 78 were engaged. The business has been changed and the plant enlarged at very little expense. Some one remarked to the head of the concern who was expressing his satisfaction at the change in his business. "You feed babies now instead of starving them." "I guess you are right," was the reply.

Labor Leader Kline on Prohibition

Mr. James W. Kline, president of the International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers says: "It is an awful price to pay, but the war will eliminate the American saloon. War has slain her thousands and the saloon her tens of thousands. If a saloon is bad in times of war, it certainly is not any better in times of peace. The government sees the necessity of a 'dry' nation and will eventually finish the job. The industrial classes as a whole appreciate the work of the church in that respect, notwithstanding the fact that some of our labor leaders have antagonized the abolition of the saloon. And the writer is of the opinion that the church has made friends with the industrial classes." "The Central Christian Advocate" in commenting upon this expression of opinion by Mr. Kline says, "there is abundant reason for believing that Mr. Kline rather than Mr. Gompers is the real spokesman for labor."

Reason for Fewer Delinquent Children

There were 128 fewer delinquent children before the Cleveland Juvenile Court this summer than there were last. Chief Clerk Costello gives as the reason that "Prohibition means sober parents, and sober parents take care of their children."

California Jails Lose Tenants

In the Santa Clara County jail at San Jose, California, during the latter part of July, 1919, there were only thirteen prisoners out of a population of approximately 100,000 people. This is only about one-fourth the average number of prisoners in the jail during the past five years. The number of vagrancy and petty larceny cases has been reduced more than 25 percent since war time prohibition went into effect.

In Redding, Shasta County, the chain gang, organized in 1900 has been discontinued because there are not enough prisoners in the jail for a working force. Only three men were there the last of July.

Value of Cocktail as Appetizer

The New York Tribune of August 25, 1919, gives the following statement by Copeland Townsend of the Majestic Hotel, New York, in regard to the value of a cocktail as an appetizer: "We have found that it not only failed to produce an appetite, but succeeded in consuming it. Since the public is not drinking cocktails or highballs before and with meals, the course dinner, luncheon and even breakfasts are becoming popular. Men who never before thought of ordering desserts or sweets in any form now take heavy desserts. The belief that liquor stimulates the appetite is an erroneous one."

The Englishman and Prohibition

Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, president Northwestern University, Chicago, who has recently returned from England, replied in answer to the question concerning prohibition in that country: "To the typical Englishman prohibition on a national scale is simply incomprehensible. He believes that it would not work in England and that it will not work in America. There is, however, a serious and growing body of public opinion which is inclined to take the prohibition movement in an earnest and open-minded way. And there are Englishmen who do not like it, who yet admit its power. Not long before I sailed, for instance, I was at a luncheon where the subject was discussed. Most of the guests were illustrating their opposition to prohibition while the discussion went on. Sir—well, I think I will mention his name, but he is an Englishman of real significance—was sitting to my left and he said: 'I do not believe in prohibition. I believe it is an invasion of personal rights. But I believe we Englishmen must do the drinking we are going to do in the next four or five years. The economic pressure is going to drive us to it.'"

Concerning the Challenges. By Dr. F. E. Clark

Those were great sessions in the two churches of Buffalo on August 7th, when the challenges flew back and forth, thick and fast, and no reasonable "stunt" was too large for eager Endeavorers to accept.

But that Challenge session was not scheduled for the sake of having a lively meeting, but to make the tasks of the two years to come stand out in bold relief and to stimulate a healthy emulation in accordance with the Apostle's words: "Provoke one another to love and to good works."

The thing to do now is to REMEMBER those challenges and to do our best to meet every obligation assumed at Buffalo. These were REAL obligations that were assumed. Of course we did not PROMISE to "mutually surpass each other," as Mr. Lincoln said of the two tall hats which the rival hatters presented to him at the same time, but we did promise, in the true Christian Endeavor spirit, "trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength," to STRIVE each to surpass the challenger or the challengee, not for the glory to our state or for the sake of surpassing a rival, but that through such generous rivalry Christian Endeavor might advance our Master's cause.

Now to make these challenges effective, every state executive committee should make a record of exactly what its representatives promised to TRY to do. I do not think that any state will repudiate the promise of its delegates, when it remembers that the pledge was to TRY, to STRIVE, which means to TRY EARNESTLY and PERSISTENTLY, to do the things promised by the challenges given and accepted. When the officers of each state have an exact knowledge of their own challenges, then the effort to reach the goals which the challenges set up, should be apportioned to the different counties or districts or local unions, and a systematic effort made to keep the matter before them for the coming twenty months, until the utmost has been accomplished.

The challenge meetings at Buffalo, too, should set an example for similar meetings in local unions and societies. Let local union challenge local union to get the most active or associate members; to pre-eminence in mission study classes or missionary giving; to the largest Alumni Associations, or to excellence in any other departments of our work that need strengthening. Local society, also, may challenge local society for enlargement and improvement in many lines.

In all these challenges, rivalries and efforts of every kind, it is only necessary to bear constantly in mind, "Whose we are and Whom we serve," and no unworthy motive or method will creep in.

Please keep up posted concerning your progress in meeting the Buffalo challenges, and the best methods you employ, and we will give them to others through the Christian Endeavor world (and so far as possible through The Brethren Evangelist.—Ed.).

Christian Endeavor Field Work

It was the writer's privilege to visit two societies over the week end of October third.

Columbus First

On Friday evening I met with part of the executive committee of the Columbus Christian Endeavor society. I was somewhat handicapped because I only had a few hours in the city and it was impossible to have a conference with the entire staff of Christian Endeavor officers. I talked "Loyalty campaign" to those present and left, feeling confident that the enthusiasm of Brother Christiansen would permeate the entire society. We are looking to Columbus for reports of Christian Endeavor increase during the winter. Since the slogan of both the society and pastor is "growth," I am confident that the Columbus society will soon be talking to you through the Evangelist.

Washington Court House

On Saturday afternoon for the first time I found myself in this much heard-of town. I had no more than reached the ground when all personal responsibility for finding my destination was taken from me by an enthusiastic Christian Endeavor worker, Milton Hegler. I was taken to his home where the prelude to the first Christian Endeavor session was given in the form of a real chicken dinner. Before reaching the Christian Endeavor session I wish to express my thanks to the Hegler family and all the good people at Washington Court House for their generous hospitality.

The Endeavor society was not working so the first thing to do at the meeting on Saturday evening was to re-organize the society. After selecting a president, we enjoyed a session together, talking about Christian Endeavor work as it relates to the "Loyalty Campaign." We were privileged to talk privately to individuals about Christian Endeavor work. On Sunday morning a very attentive audience listened to the writer at the usual church hour. At the Christian Endeavor hour we had a regular meeting and our visit closed with a short address on the purpose of the Christian Endeavor society. The meetings were well attended and the interest could not have been better. Soon Washington Court House will bring her message to your attention. Endeavorers, let us pray God to help us to labor that the day will soon dawn when Christian Endeavor will have a national field secretary.

E. A. ROWSEY.

Northern Indiana

Week before last the Evangelist supplied inspiring news from two conference districts. Pennsylvania must have had a real rally. So did Indiana. A report from Miss Culp, president of the Northern District, says that they had a meeting of Christian Endeavor representatives at Goshen, and it surely was great. She was agreeably surprised to discover an eagerness to do things, and believes that all our Endeavorers need is definite encouragement. She feels certain that the societies of Northern Indiana will go over the top attaining all goals. In fact, Nappanee, her home society, has already qualified on every point and expects to exceed the goals. (Congratulations Nappanee; three cheers for you). Northern Indiana plans to come into the station not as cabooses but double-headers. Look out for this train, Dr. Bame. On October 19th, Miss Culp visited Teegarden and North Liberty, and she hopes to visit all the societies by the first of the year.

The Way to Spiritual Bankruptcy

These are new days of human history when God has challenged the world to think in terms so big, so far-reaching that we dare not turn aside. Any man or any institution in these days who thinks in pre-war terms, stands on the slippery edge of spiritual and moral bankruptcy. We dare not think in the terms of old ecclesiasticisms or the old Christian program. God has broken the hearts of the world and left us where we simply must plan with a new daring of adequacy for the capture of his world. If we dare now as Christ's nail-pierced hand beckons us to go on with courage, with unshaken faith, God is ready to let the streams flow out so great and deep that no man can cross them.—W. E. Doughty.

MISSIONS

THESE MEMBERS OF THE HOME BOARD CALL FOR A BANNER OFFERING

L. G. WOOD

WHY SHOULD THIS BE THE BANNER YEAR FOR HOME MISSIONS?

That this should be the banner year for our home mission work, we take for granted; I am sure we are all agreed upon this fact. But the reasons why it should be are many and a few of these it is my desire to point out.

FIRST. This is the VICTORY year of our Four Year Program, and our past accomplishments and our present standing in relation to this program is demanding a "Cap Sheaf." Let us put it on NOW. As the great aim of the program has been the "deepening and quickening of the spiritual life of EVERY MEMBER of the church" so now we should justly expect the evidence of such "quickening" by an offering for Home Missions from EVERY MEMBER.

SECOND. Because we as a denomination are much more able to make this a banner offering than ever before and, being able to do so, we can not afford not to do it.

THIRD. It is to be made as a THANKSGIVING offering to the work of the Kingdom of Christ. Certainly there are no stints in our reasons for thanksgiving this year.

FOURTH. The most excellent growth of our Home Mission work during the last few years has disclosed to us great possibilities in many needy and waiting fields.

FIFTH. We have come to a new day, which is a day of great demands for great achievements. We are told that the "world is hungry for a twentieth century gospel." But the twentieth century gospel is the one that was first proclaimed by the Son of God twenty centuries ago, and NOW it must be proclaimed by the energy, power and enthusiasm of the twentieth century.

We who have in a peculiar way espoused the great cause of "The Whole Gospel to the Whole World" must keep abreast with the spirit of our time to prove our sincerity in Christian faith. Yes, Brethren, let us make this our motto—"A Liberal Offering of Thanksgiving from Every Member, for Home Missions." Then behold what God will do.

L. G. WOOD.

"WHY THE GREATEST HOME MISSION OFFERING EVER?"

Some of the reasons for the greatest Home Missionary offering this year are:

First, The needs are greater. The calls for help from the Home Field are growing continually. Therefore the means of support must grow also.

Second, We are growing. The fact that the calls are louder and more frequent is an evidence that we are growing and we are therefore under obligations to the Father for Home Mission work.

Third, We are gaining favor with the people. The fact that the calls are multiplying is also proof of our growing in favor among the people. I believe in the Brethren cause and the oft repeated words, "If the Brethren church wants to succeed" she must do so and so, has become nauseous to some, and I think causes a spirit of doubt in the minds of the young and inexperienced. The Brethren church is not headed toward doubt and gloom, but to victory. Brethren, cut out that insinuation that causes suspicion.

We are growing and need more mission funds, and missionaries, more ministers who are true and loyal to God and the church.

Z. T. LIVENGOOD
LANARK, ILLINOIS

We are quite sure that the Home and Foreign Missionary Board are doing their best to build up the Brethren church, and have succeeded in jointly securing a very consecrated and competent General Secretary, who will do efficient work. This too is why we should do our best on the Thanksgiving offering, and make it the "Greatest Ever."

Z. T. LIVENGOOD.

WHY THIS SHOULD BE THE BANNER OFFERING

Because of the opportunity before the church. The church like all other institutions is going through a crisis. The great war has left the world changed. What the world will become depends upon the work that is done in the next ten years. This is the church's opportunity for the life-time of the men now living at least. Never again while we live will the church have such an opportunity to impress its ideals upon men. The whole mind of society has been shaken into plasticity by the events of the last four years. Four million men have returned from the army and are re-adjusting themselves to new circumstances of life. New thoughts are pulsing through the world. New ideas are presenting themselves. The anchors are dragging. The ship of society is moving from the place where it was previously moored. What shall be society's ideals will be determined largely in the next ten years. The church that does not put forth its best efforts to reform American life and American ideals will have missed the greatest opportunity in its history. Therefore, the general mission offering should be the largest in the history of the church.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CALIFORNIA TO WASHINGTON

We closed our work in Long Beach the first of June. We shall always remember with great pleasure our stay in the Queen City of the Pacific Beach. It has never been our privilege to associate with a more loyal people to Jesus Christ. Our work here was very satisfactory and made pleasant by the fullest co-operation of the pastor and members. On the 16th of June we packed our Ford and with the family started on our way north for Washington.

We were very fortunate in having in our party another car of very congenial friends who like ourselves desired to visit the National Yosemite park, which was three days' run from Los Angeles. We spent a week in this wonderland of the most magnificent scenery in the world, and were made to appreciate the wisdom and effort of our country in preserving and maintaining these great places of natural beauty. Words and space make it impossible for me to express the wonderful things to be seen in the park. Our first visit was to the Mariposa Big Grove of trees, these giants of the forests lifting their heads hundreds of feet in the air, through whose bodies tunnels had been made through which we drove our cars, the bark thicker than the bodies of some trees, whose ages were estimated by thousands of years, made one feel that they had entered another world,—truly a wonderland. Our drive from the Mariposa Grove was over the scenic Wawona Road to Glacier Point, some 8,000 feet in elevation and from this scenic point, the marvelous Yosemite Valley could be seen with the naked eye, their spread out before us waterfalls five times greater in height than the Niagara, surrounded with peculiar and interesting rock and mountain formation. This bird's eye view only made us the more anxious to hasten on our way and get a nearer contact with the park proper. Leaving Glacier Point we went to Yosemite Valley which is only seven miles long and averages about one mile in width; here we were shown every courtesy by government officials and got our assignment to one of the camps, where all conveniences for camping were furnished free, such as water, lights and wood; provision is furnished for a nominal cost and a more beautiful place to spend a summer vacation would be hard to find. The wonderful Yosemite, Vernal, Ribbon and Bridal Veil Falls drop their waters thousands of feet from the summit of huge mountain walls surrounding the Valley, which gather themselves in the beautiful Merced river which abounds with mountain trout, the coveted prize of every sport. After a few days here we regretfully left, over the Big Oak Flat road, for Sacramento, on our way we stopped and called on Brother Leatherman at Ripon and Brother Platt at Manteca. Sacramento was of interest inasmuch as this is the capital city of California; we found here one of the best equipped Tourist parks in all our travels, situated in the center of the city and adjoining the city park; here we found stoves, shower baths and camping booths furnished free to the many auto travelers. All the western towns of any size have free camp grounds for auto tourists. I must speak a word of appreciation for the great road system of California, as one can travel nearly the entire length of the state on the finest boulevard made roads.

From Sacramento we made our way to the famous Mt. Shasta and Shasta Springs. This majestic mountain of perpetual snow and the lithia water of Shasta Springs is the pride of California. It was our privilege to camp under the shadows of this mighty giant of the Cascades and drink from the fountain of its youth (Shasta's springs). We had anticipated for days a visit to Ashland, Oregon, the place where the palm and pine meets and here in one of the most beautiful parks eye ever looked upon we spent four days. It was our privilege to meet our Dr. Brower and his family with others who we had known in times past. As there was being held in the city a typical western "Round Up" and my wife never having seen the "Com Punchers and Buckaroos" in action we spent a pleasant afternoon in witnessing the "wild and woolly." Ashland is wonderfully endowed with nature's gift, such as mineral springs of lithia, soda, and sulphur, and Mt. Ashland covered with perpetual snow.

Several years ago when in Oregon I visited the great Crater Lake, which the government has made into a National Park. My family being anxious to visit the lake we turned from Ashland toward the top of the Cascade mountain range and arrived there on the 6th of July, after driving through snow drifts 4 feet deep. Here is located the largest extinct crater in the world, 8,000 feet above sea level, nearly thirty miles in circumference. The water of the lake is 1800 feet from the rim of the crater and is over 3000 feet deep in places; it has an underground outlet and contains the purest water to be found. The lake is well stocked with famous rainbow trout, the gamest of all fish, those of you who know me, appreciate the fact that I was willing to camp at Crater Lake for several days and to my enjoyment caught rainbow trout to my satisfaction. (Beachler, take a tip and go to Crater Lake while in the west). The government maintains here a hotel and also a good camp ground. Our next stopping place was at the head of Klamath Lake near Pelican Bay where Harriman the well known railroad king had while living, a lodge, this place is a sportsman's retreat, suffice to say we had a pleasant stay and made a prize catch. Having been up the Coast road of Oregon several times we decided to drive up through Central Oregon to the Columbia River by the way of Bend, Redmond and the Deschutes Valley to the Dalles, while this part of the trip was interesting, yet nothing in comparison to the things already mentioned. We spent two days at the Dalles in camp on the Columbia River, whose scenery is only to be compared to the Hudson River. We crossed the river at the Dallas and once again were in the best state of all, Washington, hurrying on we drove through by, the way of Goldendale to the place that seems like home, Sunnyside, Washington, and it never looked better than the day we finished our 1850 mile trip from Los Angeles with only one puncture for the entire trip put down in the error square against "Henry F." Here we were greeted by old friends and our trip was completed.

I never saw the Yakima Valley look better and a people more contented and prosperous. The work of our church has been well taken care of by our Brother Ashman, who has the united support of the membership. We have turned "Henry F." out to pasture, located my family in a cozy home, while I turn my face with grip in hand for the campaign before me.

MY PASTORATE AT WASHINGTON C H., OHIO

The writer assumed the pastoral duties and privileges at the Fairview church near Washington C. H., Ohio, at the beginning of the year 1919. When he arrived on the field he discovered that this country congregation had a parsonage, which was rather unusual for a small country church. This presented a rather unique situation for the prospective pastor as he had not entered the conjugal state of life. However, this difficulty was overcome when the ladies of the S. S. C. E. came to the rescue and assisted the writer in beginning his bachelor's type of living.

The first few weeks of my pastorate were very encouraging, but a second outbreak of the influenza, more severe than the first all but broke up our meetings. Even if our work was deterred we had reason to be thankful as no fatalities occurred in our immediate community. We were recovering gradually from this break in our services but the pastor never felt that the recovery was quite complete during his eight months' stay in this field.

When the writer came to take charge of this work it was the understanding that he would only remain until General Conference, at which time he intended to pursue his further preparation of which he felt a need.

These eight months passed all too soon, for the writer as he was just becoming well acquainted in his field and was beginning to appreciate in a large measure the kind, hearty and loyal support of this splendid body of people. The number of active members in this congregation is not large and I doubt very much if any church of equal size in our brotherhood is supporting a resident pastor. moreover, these people support him well as their former pastor will testify. The numerous gifts brought in to the parsonage were all very much appreciated. And in addition to this, the pastor always felt himself warmly welcomed in every home. He was sorry that time would not permit more of these pleasant visits.

The consummation of these pleasant experiences was reached upon the last evening of his pastoral work when a large number of members and friends gathered at the parsonage for a farewell visit. It was a most enjoyable evening and yet there was brought to our minds that tinge of sadness known only to parting friends. May God richly bless this people and their new pastor wherever he may be.

INDIANA CONFERENCE REPORT

The thirty-second conference of Brethren churches of Indiana, convened in the First Brethren church of Goshen, October 6, 7, 8, and 9. All of the conference sessions were presided over by G. W. Rench of South Bend who in his unique way aided very materially in making the conference one of the best ever held in the district.

The conference was thoroughly a missionary conference, from the first address to the last.

H. H. Wolford, who brought the first message endeavored to show the tremendousness of the task before the church of Jesus Christ in this day, making an earnest appeal to the Brethren church of awake to the task. It is a glorious cause in which Jesus Christ calls his church. He cannot fail. The church has marched triumphantly through the centuries. Wherever and wherever she has taken an hold of her task she has succeeded. He will eventually reign and control the affairs of the world.

J. A. Bame, of North Manchester, delivered the annual conference sermon, using for his theme, "The Christian." Brother Bame brought a very timely message, presenting in his characteristic way, leading the attention of his audience throughout.

The moderator's report was crowded with good things. His suggestions and recommendations for the future of our cause in Indiana were so numerous that a special committee was appointed to consider them and report to conference. A new constitution and by-laws for the district having passed the Ministerium was unanimously adopted by the conference. These by-laws, together with the report of the Board of Church Extension, have been ordered printed in pamphlet form to be distributed among the various churches. This pamphlet will contain chapters one and two of the Manual of Procedure as adopted by the National Conference.

Charles Anderson was taken up in a conference song, "District Superintendents." The first address was brought by W. M. Lytle, District Secretary of the Four Year Program, who made reference to the various goals and the possibility of their attainment in this our twenty year. A. J. Wink presented the "Appeal of the Task Church." He led his subject by saying that "Some are weak in faith. Some are weak in love. Some are weak in hope. Some are lacking in holiness." His final appeal was for some effort to be put forth to secure a pastor and an evangelist for every one of our struggling churches in the coming year.

A. M. Inman gave a very carefully prepared message to the lay and ordained members of the churches. This paper should have been read the theme of the Evangelist.

J. C. Frick spoke briefly from the subject of "The Christian." He urged that the Christians along the Spirit "A. A. festival in every congregation in Indiana this coming year. Also gave some plans and suggestions as to how the slogan could be realized.

Brother George S. Baer, our own beloved editor, brought to the conference a very timely address on Tuesday evening, using as a theme, "Serving our Church with the Pen." He spoke not of his service but ours and told us to thus serve the church was not an easy task, but one that required training and long continued practice and development. He said nothing was more vital to the extension of the Brethren church than to loyally stand by and support our publishing house and its publications. If it is to grow, its growth must depend upon Brethren people. Brethren churches and Brethren Sunday schools.

Dr. E. E. Jacobs followed Brother Baer and brought to the conference the greetings of Ashland College. "The Four-fold Opportunity of the Church" was the theme of his timely and eloquent message. His outline is briefly: 1. The church should take advantage of the liberality of mankind as concerns stewardship of life.

2. The church's opportunity to secure a genuine religious education.

3. The church's opportunity to unite their efforts against the great problems and evils of the day.

4. To assume a very large moral and spiritual leadership in the world. It is needless to say that the conference very much appreciated the presence of Brother Baer and Dr. Jacobs.

Some Aivance Steps

The committee to consider Moderator's Report offered the following resolutions:

1. That two Bible Institutes be held in the district during the year. One in the south at Peru, and one in the northern part, at Elkhart.

2. This conference urges a revival in every church and commissions the Board of Evangelists to awake the plans and raise the funds to supply any deficit that may come over what the evangelists may raise in said meetings. We further urge that each congregation lead its pastor for one such revival in Indiana. These resolutions were unanimously passed by conference.

State Missions

The reports of the various members of the Board as well as the reports of mission pastors showed our state mission work to be in a splendid condition. This year the Board has helped at Peru, Muncie, Huntington and Deception. Their expenses were $18,551. With a balance of $24,000 in the treasury, J. H. Collins was elected as a member of the Board to succeed himself.

The Board asked the Member to adopt the following budget:

Huntington, $800. Peru, $400. Muncie, $800. Deception, $100. For evangelistic services, $20,000. Total, $18,551, which means a total of 45 cents per capita for members reported in attendance in 1920.

Another Great Session

Wednesday evening Dr. W. S. Bell spoke Wednesday evening Dr. W. S. Bell spoke in his characteristic way in the interests of the Evangelist and Bible study League. G. C. Carpenter delivered the sermon of the evening, using for his theme, "Some Gospel Beatitudes." These beatitudes are: "Blessed is the serving church. Blessed is the church. Blessed is the hopeful church. Blessed is the serving church. Blessed is the surrounding church." After this very practical message, the South Bend sisterhood of Mary and Martha gave a very well prepared missionary program. At the request of the Ministerium the offering given at the the "Kitchen and Light Fund" at Riverdale of the program was to be turned into the Keweenaw. The offering amounted to $100.

Woman's Missionary Society Conference Reported by Mrs. C. E. Kolb.

Mrs. U. J. Shively, the district president, presided over all the sessions. The president reported that there were more reports and that these were more complete than formerly. There are at present 1925 women in Indiana congregations; 1037 women in the W. M. S., showing a net gain of 72. Total funds raised, $6822.81, a gain of $1936.84 over last year. There are 705 subscriptions to the "Woman's Outlook." The following officers for the society were elected and installed by Moderator Rench: President, Mrs. Elmer Berkley of Goshen; Vice-president, Mrs. J. J. Wolfe, North Manchester; Secretary, Mrs. C. E. Kolb, Milford; Treasurer, Mrs. W. T. Lytle, Bprington. W. M. S. goals for the district for the new year are 1350 members, 350 in Mission Study, 50 girls in Mission Study classes, 760 subscriptions to Outlook, 360 girls in Sisterhoods and a Student Fund offering in every society by June 1st.

At a public session of the society, Rev. A. H. Doeseher of Napanee, Evangelical church, brought a very helpful message from the subject "Christian Internationalism." A further detailed report of the district and conference work, also of the Sisterhood work will appear in the Woman's Outlook.

Y. P. S. C. E. Conference

One session was given to the interests of the Y. P. S. C. E. Lee Myer of Flora, presided.

The work of the two districts were reported by Lee Myer and Miss Corn Culp.

Two very timely messages were delivered by L. A. Myers and Willis E. Ronk. Miss Culp will visit every church in her district the coming year and endeavor to organize a society in each church.

Ministerium

There were three sessions of the Ministerium during the conference. One session was given to the discussion of the new by-laws for the district. At the other sessions the subject of "The Affiliated Brethren Churches," and some very able addresses by S. C. Henderson and A. E. Thomas were special features.

Chas. A. Bame was elected president and C. A. Stewart was elected secretary of the association for the ensuing year.

Some Other Things

The report of the Sunday school work of the conference will appear in separate articles and will be reported by L. L. Kimmel.

The attendance during the conference was all that could be hoped for. There were 136 registered delegates in attendance, besides many others who were not delegates.

The devotional hours were helpful and uplifting lending much to the work of the conference.

The song service was conducted by Herman Roscoe, C. E. Kolb, J. E. Collins and C. C. Grisso.

The Goshen church did their part well in making the entertainment of delegates pleasant and profitable.

The general opinion was that the conference of 1920 was the best ever held in Indiana.

The conference of 1921 will be held in the First Brethren church at Flora, during the first full week of October.

C. C. GRISSO, Secretary.

North Liberty, Indiana.

Report of the Indiana Sunday Schools, Given at State Conference at Goshen

Two inspiring addresses by Brethren W. E. Thomas of Flora and C. A. Stewart of Bunker Hill, together with a summary of the attainments of the different schools toward the Front Line Standard were given in the fifty minutes of the conference program allotted to the Sunday school.

Out of a possible 35 schools in the district,

36 sent in reports. From these reports and those sent to Brother Trent for General Conference the following statistics were compiled:

No. keeping records	32
No. having Cradle Rolls	32
No. having organized classes	32
No. having Home Department	24
No. having Teacher Training	10
No. having Graded Schools	25
No. having Graded Instruction	23
No. having Missionary Instruction	23
No. having delegates to Sunday School Conventions	29
No. having Temperance Instruction	23
No. having Brethren Publications	36 (100%)
No. having reported and sent offerings	31
No. having pupils taking Reading Course	9
No. having cabinet meetings	12
No. reading Evangelist	32
No. observing Rally Day	21
No. of teacher training students	91
No. of teacher training graduates	18
No. of teacher training diplomas (1st course)	187
No. uniting with church from Sunday school	300

Rev. Thomas spoke on the subject of Better Sunday Schools in Indiana, and suggested that we might have better Sunday schools by (1) Beginning on Time, (2) Teachers and Officers Coming Prepared (3) The Introduction of a Varied Program, (4) Equipped Teachers assigned to Proper Classes, (5) Having Organized Classes Working, (6) The Use of Graded Lessons, (7) A Working Home Department, (8) An Active Cradle Roll. In closing Brother Thomas made an appeal for enthusiastic effort to make Sunday schools an effective power for Christ.

Rev. Stewart spoke on Teacher Training. He suggested that the Sunday school had not done all that was possible. That something must be wrong. Many teachers were not equipped for their work of teaching a practical religion. That the teacher has a stupendous task, she not only prepares the individual for this life but for eternity as well. Therefore the great problem in Sunday school work is giving the teacher proper training.

Brother H. H. Wolford announced that the National Association proposed sending a worker to visit each school or a group of several schools in this next year and giving two evening addresses and an Open Forum at each place. It was hoped to bring encouragement to all the schools so that great results could be attained for the Victory Year of the Four Year Program.

At a later conference session, Brother Sylvester Whetstone of Delphi, Indiana, a member of the Flor Sunday school was elected as district superintendent. The writer had the pleasure of meeting Brother Whetstone for the first time at conference and is greatly gratified as to the outlook for a Victory Year in Sunday school work in Indiana, under the direction of Brethren Whetstone and Wolford. Brother Whetstone has filled the office of superintendent of the Flora Sunday school for a long time. In that capacity he was much interested and sent in reports promptly when asked. He led the forces there and the Sunday school reached Front Line. Greater fields of labor have called him and he resigned as superintendent of the local school and is serving as secretary-treasurer of the county organization in which he lives. His election as superintendent of the Indiana District fell upon worthy and competent shoulders. We can consistently urge upon the workers of the different schools to make an effort to attain the tasks he sets before them. For he in his experience will not ask anything but what each school can do, if the proper effort is made.

May God's omnipotent blessings come to him and Brethren Sunday school workers everywhere. L. LEMUEL KILMER, Retiring Superintendent.

PLEASANT HILL, OHIO

On Sunday, September 28th, we closed our pastoral service with the Pleasant Hill congregation after nearly two years with them. The morning service was especially for the membership. A voluntary movement started among the other churches of the town resulted in the dismissal of all their Sunday evening services for this day and these three churches came over to our church to attend the pastor's farewell service. We certainly appreciated this hearty expression of good will and respect from the churches of the community.

For several weeks we have been engaged in secular work. When we made our terms with the church we reserved the privilege of secular labor if we saw fit or necessary and as the church could not meet our entire support we accepted what they could give and in the past two years have added by secular work sufficient to make up the balance. We have served as night fireman and watchman in the famous Beery School of Horsemanship and went with a hay baler crew and helped our fellow churchman and townsman, Brother Perry Deeter in his cane mill for several weeks last season and are so engaged this season, but expect to quit soon to enter upon our evangelistic work.

The second Sunday of November we expect to begin a meeting in the Palestine, West Virginia congregation. It was an unintentional error that the editor in a recent issue of the Evangelist stated that I was open for evangelistic or pastoral work. The first is true, but the second not. It is my purpose as far as church work is concerned, to give my attention exclusively to evangelistic service and Bible Institutes. We still have some time open for the winter months in this work and any church needing such service may address us at Pleasant Hill for the present. We expect to change our place of residence but are not certain where it will be.

We are prepared to give some Bible Institute work in some very helpful lines of Bible study, combining this with evangelistic engagements or the Bible work alone. We will follow for the most part the plans and ideals proposed in the evangelistic project launched before our conference at Winona and we recognize that project as one of the greatest forward steps for the church.

W. J. BARNHART.

ARDMORE, SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Sunday, October 19, was Rally Day at Ardmore. Our goal for attendance was 75, but we had 85 with an offering of $16.81—a report which compares very favorably with that of our Ashland Brethren about which I just read in the Evangelist. On October 16 and 17, the county Sunday school convention was held in South Bend. Ardmore was represented at the various sessions by sixty percent of her members. This being the largest representation from the rural schools a banner was presented to our school. Rev. Frank B. Yoder is chairman of our township Sunday school organization and the enthusiasm displayed by our school was largely the result of his efforts.

You will pardon us for being a little proud of our record at Ardmore. We have been organized but little over a year, and most of the time have been without a regular pastor. At present, Rev. A. T. Wirick is our pastor, preaching for us every two weeks. Under his leadership we are going to strengthen our forces so that we can take all of Ardmore for Christ. Sunday evening an aged lady confessed Christ as her Savior and on Wednesday evening she was baptized at the church by our pastor.

Last month our Christian Endeavor society reorganized and placed all young people in the offices. A year ago when we first organized some of the older members took the lead in getting the work started, but now the younger members are capable of carrying on the work. We believe with Brother J. A. Garber that the Christian Endeavor society is an indispensable organization of the church, and we older ones mean to stand by the young folks and work with them continually.

The Women's Missionary Society of our church has been doing splendid work. The members pledged $200 to our building fund and this they paid promptly.

We expect soon to complete our church basement and to install our baptism. Then we will have everything in fine running order.

A. GLENN CARPENTER.

NOTICE

"The Brethren Missionary"

will be issued late. The October issue should be out now, but we have been delaying to the last minute for the BIG news—A letter from the field telling of the permission to go forward, and of the line of advance. We have not yet received it, though it should be in our hands now. If it does not come within a few days, the copy will have to go to the printer without that. All the news we have at this date (October 24th) is the brief news in a cablegram, telling us of a new address, which we took to mean that permission has been received to go forward.

The next issue of The Missionary will have in the annual reports, and in many ways will be of intense interest. Are you on the subscription list? Subscription, 25c a year.

W. R. DEETER, Pastor.

The Gratis Brethren church will observe the communion service on the evening of November 9th. An invitation is extended to all who may find it possible to share this service with us. C. E. BEEKLEY, Pastor.

GOSHEN, INDIANA

The evangelistic meetings at Goshen are in progress at present and for the past two weeks Brother A. E. Thomas has been preaching powerful sermons. It seems almost impossible to move people nowadays. But since Friday night there have been confessions at each service. We had a fine service today; we observed Mother's Day and Sunday School Decision Day. This evening Brother Thomas gave his most powerful sermon on "God's Last Payday" to a crowded house. Eighteen have responded to the call to date. The meetings will continue this week. Pray for the success of this effort.

IN THE SHADOW

THORLEY—Samuel W. Thorley, son of William and Catherine Thorley, was born June 10, 1843, and departed this life October 2, 1919, aged 76 years, 8 months and 22 days. He was united in marriage to Miss Anna McFadden, February 15, 1877, to which union were born four children, 2 girls and 2 boys. He was a faithful husband, a man loved by all and united by baptism with the Brethren church and remained faithful until death. Tribute ought to be paid to his devoted companion, who, during his illness, cared for him very tenderly, and at the same time was concerned about the interests of the Master's kingdom that during Brother Beacher's canvass for college endowment, while her husband lay a helpless invalid, she subscribed $50 for Ashland College. Brother Thorley was also very devoted to the interests of his church and school. He leaves to mourn his departure, beside his wife, 4 children, 2 grandchildren, 2 brothers, 1 sister and a host of friends. Funeral by his pastor, the undersigned.

EENJ. F. OWEN.

HELSE—J. Samuel Helser, son of Rufus and Louise Helser, was born January 30, 1890, and departed this life September 26, 1919, aged 29 years, 7 months and 26 days. He was united with the Brethren church August 26, 1901. Death came very suddenly; while he was working a ton of material fell on him, crushing the life out of him instantly. Those left to mourn his loss are his wife, two children, father and mother, two sisters, a brother and a host of friends. Funeral services at the Glenford church by.

F. F. OWEN.

ESTELL—Mrs. Maggie Estell, wife of Fred M. Estell and daughter of W. F. and V. M. Whiteleather, departed this life August 27, 1919, aged 29 years and 9 months. She was a faithful member of the Brethren church at North Georgetown, Ohio. June 3 was the writer's first day of service at this church. We anointed this sister on our first visit. This was a real blessing and joy to her.

Her pastor, brother Carpenter, at the time of her death, the funeral services were conducted by the pastor of the Friends church, Rev. Haworth, assisted by Rev. S. H. Wolford.

May God bless the bereaved.

E. M. RIDDLE.

MYERS—Myrtle Alice Studebaker was born near Sidney, Kaskascio county, Indiana, December 8, 1877, and died October 2, 1919, being 41 years, 9 months and 24 days old.

On December 24, 1899, she was united in marriage to Cyrus Myers and to this union were born five children, two of whom died in infancy. She leaves as survivors, her husband, three children, Herman, Gordon and Morris, her aged parents and four brothers and one sister.

In 1915 she, with her husband, united with the Brethren church of Reann and she has always been true to its teachings. She was also a member of the "Ever Faithful Sunday School Class" and it was her great desire that her children should be reared in the Christian faith.

Mrs. Myers was a kind and affectionate wife and mother and we know that our loss is a sore to all who loved her.

Services in the church, conducted by Rev. H. H. Wolford, assisted by the writer.

WILLIS E. ROKK.

TOWNER—Dr. D. B. Towner, the last but one of the great gospel singers intimately associated with D. Moody, D. P. F. Jones, Ira D. Sankey, James H. McGranahan, D. B. Towner and George C. Stebbins—died suddenly on October 3 at Longwood, Missouri, where he was conducting evangelistic meetings.

Dr. Towner was born in Rome, Pa., in 1850 and received early musical training from his father. Later he studied under the distinguished musician, George F. Root, John Howard and Frederick Root. His first association with Mr. Moody was in Cincinnati, where, in 1883, he conducted a chorus of 1,000 voices for the evangelistic meetings. Thereafter he was associated with Mr. Moody until the latter's death. For 26 years Dr. Towner was director of the Music Course of The Moody Bible Institute and was also for many years a member of the Moody choir.

He composed more than 2,000 Gospel songs and edited twenty-three hymnals. The best known of his songs include "Trust and Jesus," "Anywhere with Jesus," "Only a Sinner Saved by Grace," "Come Home," "My Anchor Holds" and a score of others which are known wherever gospel music is sung. His aged mother, past 93, survives him together with his wife, a daughter and a brother.

COOPER—Harry A. Cooper was born June 21st, 1856, and departed to be with the Lord on Friday morning, September 19th, 1919. Since the beginning of the Tenth and Daughters' Great Brethren church, he had been a regular attendant with his family. Under the ministry of Brother Eppley he confessed Christ as Lord and was received into the fellowship of the church, and until the day of his departure he maintained an unusual interest in the church and her work. Even during the past year in which he suffered much from bodily ailments, he never missed a service in the church and Bible class which he loved. Let the church pray for the wife, three daughters and two sons whose hearts are sad at the loss of their home in which he was a loved and honored father. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor.

ALVA J. McCLAIN.

BEAM—Mr. Lawrence W. Beam was born February 5, 1866 and departed this life October 4, 1919, aged 53 years, 7 months and 4 days.

He was a member of the Conemaugh Brethren church and continued faithfully in his faith until called home.

Besides many friends who mourn his departure, he is survived by his faithful wife; one daughter, Mrs. Edward Lynch; two sons, William and Alvin; and three daughters, and George N. Beam and three sisters, Miss Bessie Beam, Mrs. John Dick and Mrs. J. C. Hildebrand.

Brother Beam was a consistent Christian and all through his severe suffering, his faith never wavered in the goodness and mercy of God. He was anointed before he died.

Funeral services were conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church.

HOFFMAN—Elizabeth Jane, was born in Fayette county, Ohio, June 26, 1838, and departed this life, September 22, 1919, aged 81 years, 2 months and 26 days. She leaves to mourn their loss two sons, Lawrence and Jacob Hoffman of Wabash, Indiana, and two daughters, Mrs. Laura Torrence of Peru, Indiana, and Emma F. Fournell of Ellettsville, Indiana, besides one son by a former marriage, James Backus of Peru.

Mrs. Hoffman was a member of the New Hope church, and a devoted Christian for more than thirty years. Funeral services from the Christian church at Akron, by the writer. May God bless and comfort the bereaved.

H. H. WOLFORD.

WILDEN—Thad Barnhart, departed this life September 16, 1919, aged 56 years, 1 month and 28 days, died from leucemia resulting from his work as a railway trainman. He leaves to mourn their loss a loving wife, one son, Forey, aged 4 and two daughters, Winifred, aged 2 and Ruth, aged 9 months. Mr. Wilden was an active member of the First Brethren church at Goshen. It is sad that he was taken in his young manhood when he was so much needed as a husband and father. But the wife and friends rejoice in the fact that he was a Christian man and active in Christ's service. May God aid his loved ones to keep his precepts.

H. H. WOLFORD.

BAER—Hiram Baer was born in Crawford county, Ohio, October 24, 1864, and died October 15, 1919, aged 54 years and 11 days. He leaves one son William Baer, with whom he made his home in Elkhardt. Brother Baer was a member of the First Brethren church here for more than twenty-eight years. He was one of the founders of the work here. He held the office of deacon and was a Sunday school teacher for years. Only a few of the early members of the church remain. The church remembers with pride the sacrifices of those who made this work possible. May God bless the remaining son.

H. H. WOLFORD.

STOUT—Richard H. Stout died at his late home in West Bethlehem, Pa., October 1, 1919, aged 49. Brother Stout was one of the early members of the Bethlehem mission and, as long as he continued to live, he was liberal in his contribution to the work. He is survived by his wife, a son and a daughter and a host of friends in and out of the Brethren church. Service from the house of October 5th, by the writer, assisted by Brother Fehnel.

How the Church May Meet Her Challenge

That the church is facing a challenge today such as she has seldom ever faced no one of understanding will deny. Nor will the fact fill the men of faith with pessimism about the outcome. A challenge has a charm and fascination about it that stirs men's souls and fills them with courage and strength. It sets before them definite purpose and stiffens their determination. It moves the heart and nerves to action. It brings forward the best that is in one. Who can be indifferent in the presence of a challenge? Who can be lukewarm or unconcerned? Who can be satisfied with the commonplace? A challenge kindles fire in the blood; it makes the nerves tingle with eagerness; it causes the muscles to become tense with strength and determination. The word "challenge" is peculiarly a word for this time; it is everywhere in the air. There never was a time when the conflict between the forces of good and the forces of evil was so fiercely waged, when men were so quick to challenge the conduct and plans of others and when the very conditions were challenging every man so much as is the case today. These are strenuous days and they compel men and institutions to live and act with decision and courage or be cast aside.

In many and varied ways is the church of Christ challenged today. It is facing a world that is torn with unrest and injustices, lawlessness and revolution. Everything is in a turmoil; the public mind is a festering sore. In the industrial world the long pent-up ill feelings resulting from dishonesty, over-reaching and oppression are bursting like a volcano. In the social world shallow class distinctions and exclusions are causing jealousy and dissensions. In the political world there is upheaval; many governments are being disrupted and even the most stable are being greatly troubled. In the moral world the disturbance is greater than anywhere else. Old forms and practices once defended even by the best people are now being tabooed by the masses, and indulgences once winked at as necessary evils are now declared to be intolerable. Change, uncertainty and disturbance are everywhere to be met with. The whole world, our own land included, is being rocked in a storm of unrest and unrestraint. Human society is everywhere like a seething caldron. Something must set it at rest and hold it steady. Something must give tone to its spirit and direct its conduct. Something must have a steady, moulding, controlling, uplifting, sanctifying influence upon this sin-sick world. That is the challenge to the church at this hour.

Jesus says to it,—to your church and to mine, "Ye are the light of the world," "Ye are my witnesses," my representatives. You are to be the steady, saving influence in the world. The world cannot save itself. Social amelioration cannot alone save it. Political regeneration and the enactment of worthy laws cannot save it of themselves. Education and enlightenment are not sufficient to save it. These are all worthy aids, but they are helpless alone. The only agency that has the power to remake, purify and ennoble this old earth with all its wickedness is the church of Jesus Christ, infilled and empowered with the Holy Spirit. It has not always done all it could. It has sometimes held its peace and withheld its effort when it could have spoken the word and applied balm that would have been comfort and healing in times of the world's sorest needs. But she has back of her a power that is all-sufficient, the power of the infinite God, if she will but use it. To quiet the unrest of the world and men, and to bring all souls to the feet of the risen Christ is a big task even for the church of Christ. If it is to succeed it must be strong and efficient. How shall it be able to accomplish the great work with which it is challenged?

Most important of all is the deepening and quickening of the spiritual life of the church. At this point it will stand or fall. The tremendous tasks before the church are primarily a challenge to spiritual attainment. God has placed within its reach spiritual possibilities and power which will enable it for anything that becomes its duty to perform. The development within every member of the church of a broad and deep spirituality is the most urgent and vital need of the brotherhood. If our people do not keep growing in their spiritual lives; if their piety is not constantly becoming deeper and more vigorous; if their consciousness of God's presence in their lives is not becoming ever more distinct and certain; and if that deepened spirituality is not continually becoming more expressive and effective in their social relations, we are failing in that which is most fundamental and our church will be found weak and helpless before the great tasks with which she is faced. The church that has not spiritual power has no power at all. The church that does not encourage the spiritual development of its members and does not exercise an out-going spiritual influence is of no more consequence in solving the world's fundamental problems than a literary society, a social clique or a fraternal order. Failure here means failure in the church's chief function, and that which we have thought to be a divine, invincible institution turns out to be only a passing fad. Failure in spiritual attainment means failure in every other ideal or goal we may set before ourselves. None but spiritually minded men whose hearts have learned the language of prayer and whose souls have become keen to sense the divine presence will co-operate with God in all the sacrificial service that he may require of them. But get men thoroughly consecrated and they will not deny their Lord anything he may require of them.

If the church is to meet the challenge of this critical hour there must be an ever increasing enlargement of harmonious effort. Friction, inharmony and lack of team work has hindered the church from accomplishing that which it had sincere purpose in doing, more than anything else that may have entered into such failure. There have been times when the various denominations spent more time and energy competing with and seeking to undermine each other than they did in fighting their common enemies. That time, thank God, is all but past, and every denomination is the stronger for it. A new day has dawned in which the spirit of co-operation and harmony is becoming prevalent. The Interchurch World Movement is a demonstration that the denominations are coming to believe what God's individual spokesmen have been preaching since the days of Paul, that "we are workers together with God." The affiliation of churches in social, philanthropic, moral and evangelistic campaigns is proof that they have come to recognize the fact that they are sharers together of the grace of God and of the responsibility for advancing the interests of the kingdom of God. Things that are transpiring at this very hour throughout Christendom make it unmistakably certain that the churches are coming to appreciate the fact that harmony of spirit and unity of effort redounds to their individual advantage as well as to the advantages of the church universal.

What is true of the relation between churches is true also of the relation between individual Christians in the churches. Where the spirit of harmony prevails there the chances of success are good, but factions exist and where friction makes the church machinery work hard, success is practically impossible. Likewise, between the various churches in a denomination there is nothing worth-while accomplished where there is inharmony and lack of co-operation. There is always the danger in churches of congregational policy that jealousy for the congregation's independence of action may interfere with large and far-reaching plans of the denomination, and thus hinder the largest possible denominational growth, and kingdom building. If this is to be our "victory year" as a church, the various congregations throughout the brotherhood must be willing to co-operate with the plans and accept as their own the purposes of the whole church. If any congregation makes plans which conflict with the plans laid by the conference of all the churches, or for any reason fails to support the general work of the brotherhood, by so much that congregation hinders the Brethren fraternity in its effort to accomplish the work with which it is challenged and to realize the oft-repeated slogan, "A Greater Brethren Church."

If the church is to meet the challenge of the needy world today, it must be characterized by an increased love both for God and man. As this is realized it may be found that all other problems will have been solved. If every church member loved God more, there would be less disobedience but more consecrated effort to carry the gospel to all the world and bring salvation to every heart. Jesus said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say," "If ye love me keep my commandments." And if every professed follower of Jesus loved the Brethren more, and loved more those who are unlovely and sinful, there would be more harmonious co-operation in carrying on the work of the church and greater success in winning the hitherto unyielding souls to Christian discipleship. Love will hold Christians together and keep them clinging to the uplifted Christ just as the electric current holds the steel filings together and to the electro-magnet. There are many things that will magnify and strengthen the church and help it to meet the challenge of his day, "but the greatest of these is love. Follow after love."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Business Manager states that the Brethren Annual and Conference Minutes is being made up and that if any of the ministers or church officials wish changes of address or more specific address to appear, now is the time to notify him or the fact. Do it now.

A letter from Brother B. H. Flora, who has been making his home in Canada for several years, informs us that he is returning to the States and will be "ready to assist pastors and churches. He may be addressed at Wabash, Indiana, R. F. D., after November 15th.

Home Missions! Home Missions! HOME MISSIONS! HOME MISSIONS! That is the one big thing that Brethren people are called upon to think about at this particular season; not only to think about, but to pray about as well and then to follow the lead of their prayers. The church extension and church building program of the Missionary Board is dependent upon the offering that we make at Thanksgiving time. All we are asked to give is an amount that will average 40 cents per member throughout the brotherhood. But some will not heed the call and others will have to give large amounts to make up for those who fail. For we dare not let our program for church extension fail. Read what some of the Board members have to say on the "Mission" page.

The evangelistic campaign begun at Canton, Ohio, in connection with the Ohio state conference started off with much promise. On Thursday night, the last night of the conference two confessions were received. Brother Bell, the evangelist was in fine form and we dare say he and the pastor, Brother Belote will leave no stone unturned in their effort to realize the greatest possible success for the kingdom of God.

Brother E. M. Riddle, in charge of the Louisville-North Georgetown, Ohio, pastorate reports an encouraging meeting with the North Georgetown Brethren. They are getting back of him in splendid style and doubtless under his efficient leadership they will go forward. They showed their high regard for the Riddles by loading their machine with good things to eat.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes at length concerning his campaign for soul saving at Lost Creek. He is greatly impressed with his experiences and writes in the highest praise of our workers and the great work they are doing. He had a very successful meeting for which all friends of Kentucky will be thankful.

Sister Detwiler always has interesting news, but this time her letter is of unusual interest. It is not often that a mission church has the strength and leadership to maintain another mission in another part of the same city, but that is what the Spokane people are doing. We often hear of "hikes", but seldom of "prayer hikes." Wouldn't it be splendid for others to follow the example of Sister Detwiler's girls!

Good reports are coming in on every hand. Brother Grisso writes: "My work here (North Liberty, Indiana) is moving nicely, had 151 present at Sunday school and a $25 offering. Our work here has reached high water mark. Brother Rench will begin a revival for us November 17 and will deliver his course of lectures on "Our Lord's Return."

The Ohio conference was a great success; the attendance was good and the interest was fine. Plans were launched for stirring the Ohio churches with the fine spirit of evangelism and the religious instruction of both children and adults. These plans will soon be published for the information of all, and effort will be made to put them into execution.

On the 23rd of October Brother and Sister R. R. Teeter celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary by entertaining a number of their friends during the evening. After the rendering of an interesting program of music and speeches, the guests presented the happy couple with some beautiful pieces of silverware as tokens of friendship and good wishes. Dainty refreshments were served and the evening was pronounced a pleasant one by all present. We hope to be able to help our business manager and his good wife celebrate their golden wedding anniversary.

FOR YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

On the last Sunday in November the Sunday school world will be studying the thirteenth chapter of John's Gospel, a passage of peculiar interest to Brethren people. Brother A. D. Gnagay, ever watchful to meet the special needs of the brotherhood, has prepared a special study for that day, both for the adults and for the children. For the adults he has prepared a pamphlet of eight pages dealing with this distinctive practice of the Brethren church. In this pamphlet is to be found in very brief compass the best thought of twelve or fifteen representative men of the church on this subject. This is an opportunity to get something new and to the point on this subject, and the world needs the truths taught by this passage as never before. Every school should get a large supply of these pamphlets both for this occasion and for general distribution. Get also a supply of the pamphlets being printed for the children. This treats this same lesson by means of pictures and simple language so that the little folk will understand and come to love this Brethren doctrine. If you want your children to remain loyal to the Brethren church, now is the time to teach them Brethren fundamentals. Send for a supply of both tracts. For prices see advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

The MUST of the Four Year Program

(An address by W. C. Benshoff before the Pennsylvania Conference)

The one thing in the Brethren church which has brought most prominently before us and which has held our attention during the last three years, has been the work of the Four Year Program. This program represents the church's greatest undertaking and the work of completing the task involved, is worthy of our best effort. The executive committee evidently believes that there are some things which must be done if the goals of this program are to be realized. In this the committee has thought well. There are some things which MUST be done.

But what is the Program? First, it is a challenge. It has been this from the beginning. It has stood before us as a giant eager for combat. It has dared us and just how young and full of life and ambition we are, is determined by the manner in which we have met the challenge.

Note in the second place that the program is a measuring rule. Just how big we are is being revealed. After three years of actual effort we see ourselves in the light of a great task.

And note, in the light of what has been accomplished, we are not so small. The program has, to a degree, awakened the Brethren church. Interest has been created, latent talents have been developed and many forces that were running wide have been harnessed and become powers among us. This program has tended to unify and direct our efforts and thus has made us more nearly one in Christ.

But there is much which MUST yet be done if we are to realize a VICTORY. In the first place, we must better acquaint ourselves with the program. Fellow pastors, we must know the goals but especially must we figure out just what is implied and how much work it is going to take in order to reach these goals.

And this leads to the second point, What is our present standing? Taking a wide view of things as our worthy editor has pointed out, the goals most easily gained are those pertaining to the raising of money and the ones lost have a close relation to the things of the spirit. What this reveals is apparent. It is so easy to give, "money is so cheap," but to attend prayermeeting and communion, to win others to Christ, this is different. Where do we stand as a district?

Where should we stand? We stand first in the number of churches and are blessed with talent and equipment and should occupy first place but the report shows that we occupy a place at the opposite end. Where does your congregation stand in the attainment of goals? How many did you make last year; which ones were lost?

Having determined our standing in the light of our successes and failures, let us lay plans for the future. Perhaps it is not mine to accuse and if I am wrong, forgive me. But I have a conviction that a number of congregations are failing to gain the goals because their pastors have no definite plans and have never presented the matter of the church's program squarely to their people. The pastor is the key man. This becomes all the more apparent when we consider the fact that in every congregation there are brethren who are ready to follow an aggressive pastor in any movement which means the building up of the church.

And brethren we must send in reports. There has been so much said on this point that I hesitate to say anything further. But we do not feel a sense of responsibility; have we no desire to see the church grow; are we not interested in the extension of his kingdom? No well regulated organization among men would long tolerate a man in a responsible position if he failed to report or do the work assigned him. We pastors alone are responsible for the YELLOW on the chart. Let us eliminate it.

If this is to be a victory year, if we are to be successful in the attainment of the task set before us, our efforts must be backed by much prayer. Christ pointed out that some things can be accomplished only by prayer and fasting. Some goals can be gained by the opening of the pocketbook, but if there is to be a deepening and a quickening of the spiritual life, if many are to be won to Christ we must spend more time in fasting and prayer. The danger is that we will overlook and forget to use the means by which success is realized. Yes, it is a great program, a great challenge. And let us regard it not as the call of the conference; not as the call of any man or set of men; but let us regard the Four Year Program as God's call to the Brethren church.

Altoona, Pennsylvania.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Stewardship.

By E. M. Cobb

It does seem that ten good, thoroughly converted men who are filled with the Holy Ghost, could in twelve calendar months, lead one lost soul to the Lamb of God. If it be possible for ten men to do this one year, they ought to do it the following year, and ten other men ought to do the same thing, everything else being equal; in other words, a 10 percent gain in evangelism ought to be altogether responsible, feasible, and practical for a people who stand on THE BIBLE, THE WHOLE BIBLE AND NOTHING BUT THE BIBLE.

But what are the facts? Two hundred years ago the Brethren church began operations on the American continent in the name of the Lord Jesus, with a communion of eight souls. On the basis of an annual ten percent net gain, the communicants of the Brethren church in 1919 should number 3,884,005,362. Counting half of these to be women who by the very nature of the constituency of the Brethren church, are home makers and not salary producers, would leave 1,942,002,681; again, for the sake of safety in computation, and to prevent exaggeration, we divide this sum by two on account of children, superannuated people, and the usual percentage of parasites and excess baggage. This extraction would still leave 971,001,340 stout, hearty, able-bodied male members of the Brethren church with a good earning power.

In a group of men like this, all occupations and avocations would be represented, from the preacher and college professor at $2.00 a day, down to the common laborer at a wage of from $7.00 to 10.00 a day; but for fear of criticism, let us say the average man would earn $1,500.00 a year.

Once more we will extract one-third of his salary for sickness, accidents, and other things over which he has no control, which, logically, should not be done, leaving him $1,000.00 as his average earning power. On the basis of 10 percent his Christian tithe to the Lord would be even $100.00. This would bring as an annual budget for the Brethren church, the modest sum of $97,100,134,000.00. Instead of this we are pottering along, apologizing to the general public for being so rigidly cruel on our membership as to ask them 40c per capita per annum for Home Missions.

Now, honestly, Brethren, what's wrong? It cannot be denied that for many years our teaching has been wrong. There are many other excuses that might be paraded and ventilated, but did you ever stop to think after excuses are used, however profusely, and however well grounded they may be, they never produce the originally desired result; they are still nothing but excuses, they are not substitutes for duty.

Calls on every hand today are for money, money, money. These calls may be classified under three heads: patriotic, humanitarian, and religious. The great demands of the world today upon the people for money are staggering, but did you ever know or stop to think when comes all this great stream of money that moves the church and all charitable and civic institutions? Practically from the same givers. The only relief in sight is a campaign of education to enlarge the number of givers. Perhaps one of the first lessons in this great education should be not to listen to every appeal, nor to every sentimental story; nor when giving distresses the family; nor when giving hinders the true work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Personally, I attribute a very large percentage of our failures among our churches, to incorrect systems of raising money, among which I shall name a few.

1. In almost every congregation there are a few liberal givers who are too lazy to train others to give. As an excuse they will usually say that they would rather give it than ask others to give. This is wrong in principle. This is just as wrong as to do all the singing, praying, or preaching.

2. Some congregations have a method of raising money by calling a business council and declaring a budget; this is also wrong. The tight-wad gets wise and absents himself from business meeting, and when accosted as to his absence replies, "Aw, they are just after money at them business meetin's." The consecrated portion of the membership bear the burden plus the parasites and excess baggage.

3. In some congregations "the committee plan" has been adopted. By this I mean that a separate and special committee is appointed, whose function it is to canvass personally the membership for funds for the various calls made upon the church, e. g., one committee for Home Missions, one for Foreign Missions, one for Current Expenses, etc. etc. This plan has some virtue and commendable features, in that it gets a larger number of people at work, and that each individual member is compelled to give, or refuse to give, which at once declares his standing either for or against the service of giving. But the system is all wrong because giving is not a collection of lodge dues or the annual assessment on an insurance policy. It is an act of worship and should be voluntary and cheerful, and not a case requiring a solicitation, argument, battle, or even an anaesthetic.

4. But the system most to be despised, of all the Devil's handicaps, is the "Soup kitchen heresy." This system is a regular tell-tale. It at once shows lack of consecration, lack of business acumen, and a dearth of teaching on the part of the ministry. Bills, debts and other liabilities are allowed to drag along until something must be done in order to save credit and respectability. Then some well meaning, but unsophisticated, and perhaps unconsecrated ring leader proposes bazaars, fairs, and suppers, card parties, balls, etc., in order to raise money to liquidate their inebriations.

None of the above systems are real "Christian Stewardship." If the Lord's plan for taking care of his money were faithfully carried out, there would be no lack of funds in the budget, and every bill could be shortened by a cash discount. The Lord promised Israel that if they would bring his tithe into the storehouse, that there would always be plenty in the Lord's pantry, and that, if they would do so, he would open the windows of heaven and pour out such a blessing that there would not be room enough to receive it, and he just double-dares them to prove him on his proposition by the tithe (Malachi 3:10). It's no use for Annanias or Mrs. Annanias to begin to argue that the tithe was a Hebrew institution and is not intended for the church, because Abraham was a tither before Moses was born. Abraham was the father of the faithful, and he didn't sit down to the communion table with Melchizedek (Melchizedek) until he had laid his tithe before the Lord, and we know this was not Jewish because the Jews did not take the communion. It is true that the Jews were great tithers, and not nation on the earth has ever been blessed like the Jews for that very reason. They gave a tenth for the priests, a tenth for religious feasts, and a tenth every third year for the poor. This included their civil taxes. While their customs and laws really have nothing to do with our Christian giving, yet we can deduce some very profitable teachings and suggestions therefrom.

CHRISTIANS SHOULD GIVE SYSTEMATICALLY

The Scriptures say "Lay by on the first day of the week." This is not only a perfect system of giving, but it is as well, religious worship. It insures opportunity for each individual member to participate regularly in this Christian grace, whether he give much or little, whether he be rich or poor, whether he be present or absent. It affords a stable income for the church, it insures an adequate fund from which to draw at all times, for all causes, whether they be charitable or religious; it teaches the habit of giving; it makes it comparatively easy to give regularly and oftener, because the amount is comparatively small; it secures consecrated offerings; it puts responsibility on the conscience, and last but not least, it makes all compromising methods of the Devil unnecessary.

UNIVERSAL GIVING IS THE CHRISTIAN WAY

The Lord intended that all his children should share in this grace. Poverty is positively no excuse for not giving; the man who earns ten cents a week owes one cent to the Lord, just as much as the man who earns $10,000.00 owes $1,000.00 to the Lord. We are his stewards and are held responsible for the use we make of his property. Remember, everything we have, including ourselves, belongs to him. He asks us to hold ourselves and our property intact ready to surrender on a moment's notice, for it is payable on demand; and yet he only asks an annual rental of ten percent.

CHEERFUL GIVING IS THE CHRISTIAN WAY

Jesus says it is more blessed to give than to receive. Paul says we should give willingly (2 Cor. 8:3); Liberally (2 Cor. 8:2); hilariously (2 Cor. 9:7).

True giving is not a painful parting, but a joyful accounting of a faithful steward to the Lord of his own. A steward has no right to say to God, "All thine is mine" until he can first say "All mine is thine." It is to be regretted that so many people drop a nickel in the basket and shed tears in a $2.00 silk handkerchief, and then lift their voice and sing

"When we asunder part
It gives us inward pain, or
"God be with you till we meet again."

What's wrong with a person when he does not want to give, or when he blames the preacher for making calls for funds or when he makes the excuse that he doesn't want to let his "left hand know what his right hand does?" You hear men pray for the power to sing, for the gift of speech, grace to endure trial and temptation, but whoever heard a tight-wad pray, "Lord, be merciful to me a tight-wad," or "O Lord, bless my stingy soul?" And why not, if he is honest with the Lord? Why is it when reverses come and the earnings are running a little low, that some will say, "Stop my subscription to the Evangelist?" or reduce my pledge, and never think once of lessening the allowance for Fatimas, Star, Horseshoe, or Prince Albert.

WHY CHRISTIANS SHOULD GIVE

Because he is a recipient of great grace.
Because giving is an expression of real Christianity.
Because it is a real test of love for God.
Because it is a test of real faith in God.
Because giving and Christianity are vitally connected.
Because it is a real Christian grace.

If Christians could only realize the attitude of the Lord Jesus towards money matters, it evidently would change their attitude wonderfully. Do you realize that the thief on the cross met Jesus face to face and got by with his case, but the capitalist Dives postponed his prayer meeting until he was compelled to beg for ice water at a summer resort. Jesus neither condemned the prodigal for leaving home, nor for squandering his fortune, but he did land on the rich young ruler for crumming a roll of bills in his hip pocket and going off with a frown.

And it came to pass that the rich man before he died, attended church, and when the basket was passed, he dropped a nickel into it. He wore a ten cent carnation on the lapel of his coat, but he dropped a nickel in the basket. It cost him ten cents on Saturday to get his shoes shined, but he gave a nickel to the Lord.

Saturday evening he got a shave for fifteen cents, and took a quart of ice cream home to his wife. On Sunday he had some gold in his pocket and a lot of silver, but he fished around for this poor little nickel, and finding it, he gave it grudgingly to help the church militant fight its great battles against the world, the flesh and the devil. Selah.

And it came to pass that this man who fared sumptuously every day, said he believed the Lord was the creator of the universe, the One who put the stars in order and by whose immutable decrees the heavens stand, so he dropped a nickel into the basket to help the Lord out. The church militant is that great organization on earth that represents the church triumphant of the great God to whom the man gave the nickel.

And the man knew he was but an atom in space, and he knew that the Almighty was without limitations, and knowing this he put his hand in his pocket and picked out a nickel and gave it unto the Lord. And the Lord being gracious and slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy, did not slay the miserly wretch for the meanness of his offering, but gave him his daily bread. Selah.

But the nickel was ashamed even if the man was not, and hid itself under a quarter which was given by the woman who washes and irons for the rich man, but the Lord saw it, for he is able to see even the thoughts and intents of the heart. Selah.

The Problem of the Church to Hold Her Youth

By E. F. Byers

In taking up the discussion of this subject, we must be mindful of the fact that the future growth of the church depends largely if not entirely upon the spiritual life and intellectual development of her young people. For years past, the problem of the church to hold her young people, has been a question of much discussion and little success. We need but glance at the situation in order to see that youth today is being carried away on the wings of social function and amusements. People today are not so anxious to hear the gospel preached as they are to be amused. The dance, the theatre, the movie, the card parties and other such amusements are foremost in the minds of the majority of our people,—“and I'm sorry to say, some of the older people as well.” For years past these amusements just mentioned have been the targets at which professing Christians have aimed their heaviest artillery. It is true that they have within them a certain immoral tendency that brands them as being detrimental, not only to the church, but to society in general. But we as thinking people must not be forgetful of the fact that we are living in the twentieth century, in what is known as the new day.

A century or two ago, our forefathers lived in log houses usually with one room, seldom if ever more than two; they did their cooking in iron pots hung over burning log-heaps, swept their rough clapboard floors with brooms made of hickory splints and drove many miles to church in their ox-carts. We would not think of living that way today. We have our modern homes with every possible convenience, rooms for every purpose, a modern gas range or electric cooking devices to replace the burning log-heap, electric sweepers to take the place of the hickory broom and a modern Ford in which we drive to church. The answer is this: We are living in a new day, in a day of progress and we are modernizing our equipment to meet the demands of the time in which we live. And it is essential that we do.

Now, how are we as a church going to hold our young people? By simply modernizing our equipment to meet the demands of the time in which we live. In order to do this, it may be necessary for us to hedge a little on some of these eighteenth century ideas. Youth, today is demanding their social functions and amusements and they are going to have them; we as a church may just as well, with our hands try to brush back the waves of the ocean, as to attempt to curtail their energy. It has been truthfully said, “The lower philanthropy tries to put right what social conditions have put wrong. The higher philanthropy tries to put right the social conditions.” So, rather than criticizing our young people for wanting to participate in amusements that are questionable, why may we not, as thinking people, make provision whereby they may have the privilege of participating in amusements under efficient leadership and proper conditions. The time is coming,—yea, it is here, when the church that will hold her young people, will be the church that can furnish them with good clean, healthy Christian amusements under the fostering care of the church.

Now, what are some of these amusements that the church may furnish for her young people? Will it be safe for the church to harbor the public dance? Will the public dance assist in the developing of one's spiritual life or intellectual ability? In answer to these questions I will give you a statement made to me sometime ago by the Rev. Father Farren. He said: “It will be necessary for us to provide some new means of amusement for our young people, our church has just recently legislated against the dance.” On being asked why such action had been taken he informed me that it was not only leading their young people astray, but that it was hindering the progress of the church, morally, physically, spiritually and intellectually.” These young people have put it to the test and we have every reason to believe that they know of what they speak. Further, let me give you a statement which appeared in the “Christian Advocate,” just recently. This statement was written by Dr. James Law, a prominent minister of the Methodist Episcopal church of Pittsburgh on Worldly Amusements, in defending the clause as it now appears in the Methodist Discipline.

The article was as follows, “As the general conference draws near the question is being asked will the law against worldly amusements be stricken out of the Methodist Discipline? Especially the law against the dance.

“Some of our strong ministers have expressed their views so far as to say that they did not believe that the effort to sanction dancing would be made a subject of debate at the general conference, but may I ask the question: ‘Why will it not be discussed, or, if it be debated, why will it be defeated?’

“My answer to these questions is this: It will be defeated because the pulse of the great Methodist Episcopal church still beats right. The rank and file of godly men and women who have the spiritual interest and life of the church at heart, who have seen the results of these worldly amusements, especially the dance, speak with no uncertain sound against any change; and whoever would vote for a change in the Discipline on this question would do so against an overwhelming protest of our great church, for we delight in the thought that only a few, comparatively speaking, want such a change.

"The arguments put forth are these: 'The law making body of our church should not place such prohibitions on its membership, for they do not prohibit and that in spite of such a rule may persist in dancing. Such being the case the rule should be eliminated from the Discipline.'

"But why not use the same argument against the ten commandments, which says, 'Thou shalt not kill,' giving warning against this and other evils, and yet every day these commandments are being broken. For what reason, would any one suggest that they be eliminated from the Holy Scriptures? No, they will remain in God's book giving the moral tone against things that are wrong. God has warned and expressed his will, whether men heed it or not.

"The law making body of the Methodist Episcopal church has ruled against the dance as a questionable indulgence, but in spite of such a law some persist in dancing, so for this reason the Discipline should be changed.

"We say no, a thousand times no. We trust the law will continue in our Discipline unchanged, giving the moral tone and warning against an amusement that has a tendency to slay the vitals of true Christian Godliness."

The Methodist church is not the only church opposed to the dance. The book written by M. B. Williams, "Where Satan Sows His Seed," shows clearly that every protestant church has pronounced itself against the dance, both, private and public, and many Catholic bishops have spoken with no uncertain sound against this worldly amusement. "I believe that you will agree with these people when they say that it is not fit to practice. However, we are not forgetful that they teach dancing in some of the high schools, and when asked why they teach it, they say that it is done to make the young people graceful and to assist them in getting along in the world. This calls to my mind a statement that I once read under the title of 'Words and Weapons.' It was as follows:

"One evening in the parlor of a summer watering place, the young people were dancing. There was one young lady who was not taking any part. 'Does not your daughter dance?' asked another lady of the girl's mother. 'No,' was the reply. 'Why, how will she get along in the world?' 'I am not bringing her up for this world,' was the quiet answer. That young lady is now a woman, and it is said that the influence of her consecrated life is being felt in many of the Christian interests of the great city in which she lives." Brethren, I believe that God wants us to be as graceful and to look just as nice as possible, but there is a vast difference in being GRACEFUL and full of GRACE. The latter is the one that will count most in our spiritual development and the one that I think we should strive most to cultivate.

The next questionable amusement I wish to call attention to is that of card playing. We cannot blink at the fact that card parties, such as euchres, whists, etc., are quite the rage. And again, will this assist in the developing of the best that is in one, spiritually and intellectually? In answer to this question, I will say that it is wrong to gamble. Cards, is a game of chance and any game of chance, I care not what it is, will incite one to gamble sooner or later, and therefore it is wrong. Some have said that the devil is in the cards. I do not know if the devil is in them or not. But I do know that there is a legion of devils in their influence on the church and society in general. Some have said that there can be no harm in cards if you do not gamble, but you cannot play cards long and not gamble. However, there are differences in different people's conception of gambling, and to polish up your ideas on this point, let me give you an illustration, an article I read in the "Interior." "A mother had returned from a card party where she had come very near winning a most costly prize. Her disappointment was so great that it actually made her ill enough to go to bed. Her son, who dearly loved her, found upon inquiring that there was a duplicate of the costly vase to be had in the city, so he bought it and brought it to her bedside. 'Where did you get the money, my boy?' she asked. 'I won it' he frankly stated. 'I won it last night down at the club.' 'You won it!' she almost shrieked with horror. 'O, my son, you surely never play cards for money! Don't tell your mother that her only son is a gambler?' 'Mother,' came the reply. 'Before you call me that name, let me ask you a question. 'What is the difference between playing cards for a prize as you do up town with your friends, and playing them down town at the club for money, as I do?' The mother had no answer. Unthinkingly she had sown to the wind and was reaping the whirlwind. 'Can you see any difference?'"

Rev. Dr. J. G. Holland said, "I have ringing in my ears the dying injunction of my father's early friend, 'KEEP YOUR SON FROM CARDS. OVER THEM I HAVE MURDERED TIME AND LOST HEAVEN.'"

Now, another one of the great amusements of the day is the theatre. Does the theatre inspire one to do good, or fit them for greater work in church or state? Now, we must give the theatrical management credit for staging some fine plays, such as, "The Shepherd King," Shakespeare's "Richard the Third," and a few others. These are instructive and have within them a moral that will be helpful to one, morally, spiritually and intellectually. But the harm is this: where you find one such play staged, you will find fifty others that are hatched out of the bottomless pit and not fit to be seen. It was said some years ago by the president of the theatrical management of New York city in one of their meetings, that managers today find it a problem to meet the demands of the present class of theatre going people, that if you were to stage a play such as was attended by President Lincoln and some of our forefathers, the receipts would not pay the expenses. But if on the other hand, you were to stage a modern musical comedy or burlesque, bill it as such and add that no one except adults would be admitted, you could expect to have a full house, and if old Nero, who witnessed his hellish carnivals by the light of burning human beings were to come back here today and look upon a modern musical comedy or burlesque, he would declare that he had lived 1850 years before his time.

Then too, there is the movie. When I speak of the theatre I do not include the movie. Of this we may say to some extent the same as we have said about the theatre. There are some mighty fine pictures screened, but where you see one of these, you will usually see one or more others at the same time that is not only silly, but degrading. However, the movies do not have quite the immoral effect on the church and society as has the opera. The philosophy of this, is the fact, that what we see in the form of a picture does not play on the emotions as does that which we see in real life. I believe that we may see every day in our daily papers and magazines, pictures that are as offensive to good taste as are any we may see in the movies. (I wonder if newspapers and certain magazines could not stand censoring—Ed.) In fact the harm in the movies as I see it, is the waste. It is a waste of time, a waste of energy and a waste of money. Why all this waste when our life here is short? Our mission here is not to be amused. But to prepare for the future the life that is to come.

Just as a summary to the amusements just mentioned, I wish to quote from Bishop John H. Vincent. He said, "My advice is, don't dance, don't play cards, don't attend the theaters. Even though you prove that there is nothing necessarily or essentially wicked in what we call a social dance, a game of cards or a play at the theatre. The fact remains that each thing represents an institution, and that the institutions, the dance, the card table and the theatre, on the

"Investing for Eternity." By H. M. Harley

TEXTS: Wherefore do ye spend your money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.—ISAIAH 55:2.

Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you.—JOHN 6:27.

(A Pennsylvania Conference Sermon)

All persons are interested in investments that promise good and substantial returns to them. Yea, who is there, who, if they do not have sufficient money to invest in good interest-bearing securities, does hope that some day they may have some. Well, the fact of the matter is that we are all making investments of one kind or another, every day, whether we realize it or not.

Every life that is loved, is an investment either for time or for eternity. The things that we do, or say, the way we spend our time and our money, our effort and our influence,—all is done with the hope that we shall gain certain results, whether material or otherwise, whether now or at some future time. And the one question that should be uppermost in every mind is, "What things are most worth while in life?" Or to state it a little differently, "How can I invest my life and effort so that it will bring the greatest returns?" This question should precede every definite plan or action, because the answer we make to it will determine our whole future life-course, whether it shall be for gain or for loss.

Now we find that man is so constituted that he desires a great many different things in life, and often with the greatest eagerness, stopping at nothing in order that he may acquire them. But rarely does he find in these things, when he has reached them, the joy and the satisfaction that he thought for, or hoped might be his. It is true of most things that have to do particularly with this life here, that anticipation is better than realization. The large majority of lives, as they pertain to this world, are a long series of disappointments. The boy desires freedom from home restraint, so that he may do with himself as he sees fit. But no sooner does he obtain his wish, than he finds that time hangs heavy on his hands, and he wishes he were back home with father and mother.

The best-loved amusement doesn't please very long. The praise of men, distinction, fame, when they have been enjoyed for a season, come to mean little or nothing. Wealth, comfort, ease, all in time fail to satisfy. Men labor as a rule during a good part of their lives for that which satisfieth not. The great mass of people have their heart set on worldly things, making a better living, enriching themselves with this world's goods, adding luxury to comfort, and land to houses. They care little or nothing for spiritual things, much less hunger and thirst for them. Their whole time and thought and effort is bent on acquiring those things which do not and cannot satisfy the soul of man, no not even the soul of the worldly minded. Why don't you know that those who have most of this world's goods, are the very ones who complain most of being dissatisfied with life and with all in it. No, this world's goods doesn't satisfy the inner desire of the souls of men. Soul-hunger cannot be satisfied with "things."

But somebody says, "Well, if this is all true, then are men not foolish to spend so much of their time and effort and means on the things of earth." They certainly are, but they don't seem to be able to realize that fact until it is too late. It's just like that fond parent who has great hopes for the future of the son or the daughter in the home. The father has built up a great business, and amassed a fortune. He is looking forward to the time when his son shall succeed him in business. Or the mother has great ambitions for her daughter. And so the children are sent away to college, that they may fit themselves for some great and noble life-work. But, instead of applying themselves for a larger life, that son spends all his time in the frivolous things of college life, while the daughter is engrossed in the social whirl of the same. And they come home poorer instead of richer, for their college career. You say, "Foolish." Yes, unfair; yea, criminal. And yet, you and I are heirs to all eternity, and yet how many are spending their time and effort in interests that are just as transient, fleeting, and perishing.

During the recent war times, one of the loudest complaints that went up from the American people was that they had to pay such high prices for the poor, and sometimes almost uneatable "war bread." Yet how very common it is for men to pay out time and energy for what might be called "Sham bread,"—the bread of fortune, the bread of gold, the bread of popularity, the bread of pleasure,—all of which positively do not satisfy, but which will leave the soul hungry, and in a starving condition.

A very striking illustration of unsatisfactory food came to the writer's notice recently. A strange plant known as "The Nardoo" grows in the deserts of Australia. Its seed formed for months almost the sole food for a party of English explorers, who several years ago crossed that great island continent. The natives used this seed, together with other foods, and live. And so it happened that these poor, unfortunate explorers perished of starvation, every one, while feeding day after day upon that food which failed to satisfy the demands of the body. And yet this is exactly what a large part of the world is doing today, wasting their time and strength and effort on the things which are unprofitable, while with the same effort and investment in other fields, they might be doing great and good things, and find real joy and satisfaction, if only they would labor for "Bread" rather than for the husks. If some people would provide for eternity with the same eagerness that they do for this life, they could not fail heaven. But only so few people, comparatively speaking, have yet learned to set their affections on objects of that more important nature. Don't you know, friends, that all which has to do with God, with Christ and with heaven, positively satisfies. Jesus says, "I am the water of life; he that drinks of that water shall never thirst again. I am the Bread of Life. He that eateth of that Bread, shall never more hunger." Heavenly things do not pass away because heaven itself is eternal. Everything that we do for God or give to God, is actually laying up for us in heaven, a treasure that is incorruptible and unfailing. It is as it were, transferred from this insecure and uncertain world, to the high place of that safe bank. And it has merely gone before, to await us there, against the time when we ourselves shall come to claim it.

And note this too, the rate of interest on our investment is the very highest possible. Living for God, and working with him and for his every interest, is the very best possible investment that we can make of our lives.

A young woman was giving rather largely of her none too abundant means and time, as well as of her strength and effort, for a little mission church with which she was connected. Her friends remonstrated with her that she was giving more and doing more than her share. "No, I'm not," she replied. "It's merely an investment with me. You know, my brother is a business man, and he works literally day and night, and every spare dollar that he has goes into his business. He very seldom takes off a day. He thinks and eats and sleeps business. I once asked him why he did so, and his answer was, "I'm putting my life into my business, and some of these times I am going to get dividends." And so you see, I'm merely putting my life into that little church, and it promises me both immediate and future returns, yea dividends throughout eternity."

Don't forget this, friends, that nothing is eternal but that which is done for God and for the good of others. That which we do for ourselves, dies, and there is positively nothing more to it. We will have nothing to show for our investment.

Now, when Christ says that "We are not to labor for the meat which perisheth, but for that which endureth unto everlasting life," He does not mean that men are not to toil for their daily bread, in order that they make a decent living. What he does mean is that we are not to make an idol out of our bodies or our homes, all of which will in time pass away. No, Christianity has always demanded labor from those who expect anything out of life. No man has a right to expect more from life, than he is willing to put into it. "If any man will not work, neither shall he eat." And we are told to be diligent in whatsoever our hands find to do. But, we are not to spend all of our time laboring for the merely outward, vanishing and perishing things like meat, drink, clothing, money, or pleasure, for if we work merely for these, they will be with us only for a time. God would have you and me invest our time and effort in those things that are certain to declare the greatest possible dividends for the greatest length of time, without a possible chance for reverses. And the truly practical man today is the one who arranges his life so that it will count most for eternity. There is a food that is imperishable and incorruptible, that heavenly manna that comes from above, and which becomes divine life itself. Eternal life is described in the Word as a life of perfect blessedness, irrespective of time or sense or flesh or the world, or even of death.

In the earnest, faithful service of a loving Savior can be found that happiness and satisfaction of the truest kind, blessing life to the full. Christ's wish for his people was that his joy might be in them, and that their joy might be full. To those who will hearken to and labor for God and with God, there is promised a perfect luxurious life, maybe not all of this life's luxuries, but all that is needed to make for that real, abiding joy which all men are seeking in one way or another. The prophet Isaiah says, "Hearken diligently unto me, let your soul delight itself in fatness," inferring that the spiritual blessings of the Kingdom of God are richer and more worth while than any that this world has to offer. The soul that obtains them shall delight in them, and shall be satisfied. And Jesus adds, "Blessed is he that hungers and thirsts after righteousness, for he shall be filled,"—satisfied, content.

Now the question remains, Where is the world to look for this soul satisfaction, which it so much needs today? The church of Jesus Christ is the only institution or organization that has been divinely authorized to feed the spiritual hunger of the souls of men. This is beautifully illustrated in the story of the feeding of the 5,000. Have you ever thought of it, that Jesus himself did not feed the multitude? He created the food and blessed it, and then asked his disciples to distribute it. Jesus was the creator, but not the waiter at that great banquet. And even so, Jesus has made possible that food which will satisfy the spiritual hunger of the world, but the task of distributing it is in the hands of his followers, the church. True it is, there are many organizations which preach certain phases of religion, and which do a great deal of good. They talk about justice and a square deal and the like. And they minister to the physical and social, and maybe even to the moral needs of the people. But it is to the church of Jesus Christ that humanity must ever turn for the last word in the problems of human life, and of the salvation of the soul, and of its eternal destiny. And Christ is saying to the church today, "Do not send the hungry, restless world away. Give ye them to eat."

And what shall we give? "Social service?" That's right and good as far as it goes. Some of it is needed today. Jesus himself did a great deal of that kind of work when he was in the world. But the one thing above all others that the world needs so much today is Jesus himself. This old world is sick as it has never been before, and Jesus is the Great Specialist who alone can cure the ills of humanity, because he alone can reach the heart, and work from the heart outward. And that's what the world needs today. The spirit of Jesus Christ applied to the life of today would solve every difficulty and problem, whether of the individual, the family, society, the city, state or nation, or even so far as international life is concerned. The church has the truth of God, which when accepted and practically applied, will free men from self, bigotry, injustice, cruelty, extortion, profiteering. I say, the church has that to offer which will make capital and labor shake hands, until capital will give labor a square deal, and until labor will do the same thing with capital. The church has that which will cleanse and purify society of every evil, whether individual or social. Men everywhere are waking up to this fact as never before.

Why not then be more true and loyal to the church of Jesus Christ, that organization that has already done more for the world than all else besides, and which today has more of good to offer than all other organizations combined? Why should not we who are a part of that church, give of our time and effort and means as we have never done before, in these crisis times, so that God's work may be done NOW, when so badly needed, realizing that as we do it, we ourselves will enjoy perfect peace and contentment, even as Paul, through all of his trials and adversities, rejoiced in. Let us every one, not be content merely with having our names enrolled on the records of the church, but let us all enlist for Christian service in his name, and for the general welfare, both material and spiritual, of humanity. And as we do it, shall we really have a part in bringing in that new day that Christianity alone can usher in, and great will be our reward, and greater still our joy.

Victory Through Death

"I WILL draw all men," is the sweeping challenge. "All men." These certainly are astonishing words coming from the lips of a poor peasant who had not where to lay his head, a man unknown to kings and rulers, a man who failed to rally his own nation to his side, a man without army or navy or wealth or influence or reserves of any kind to add significance to his claims.

Most men have more influence in life than in death. In life Napoleon was a world figure; but in death he was a weakling. In the Hall of Battles there is a famous statue of the great Corsican. He is represented as sitting in a chair dying, and the hands which wielded the sceptre of almost all Europe, hang limp and helpless by his side; the cheeks are sunken, the face is pale.

Abraham Lincoln's influence was vastly greater after his death than it was during his life, but he relied on his death to bring it about. Christ did. He pointed forward in unmistakable words to his death as the secret of his power. He declares that his death and his world empire are related. The power of Jesus as displayed in his life is as nothing to the power evidenced in his death. He is the only man in the history of the race who ever put forward such an astonishing pronouncement. There have been great prophets and martyrs and saints and apostles, but they all pointed to the past. Jesus does not point to the past; he points to the future. He points to his death. He claims to be the Conqueror of death.—Songs of the Night.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Trained Teacher. By Freeman Ankrum

There has been much spoken upon the subject of trained teachers for the Sunday school; the matter has rested mainly with the speaking. We are prone to learn the remedy and then neglect the use of the same. When we consider the fact that eighty-three percent of the communicant members of the Protestant churches come into the church from the ranks of the Sunday school we are ill guarding the future interests of our churches by neglecting to enlist and properly train Sunday school teachers for this great work. Much has been said in regard to pulpit preparation, and little in regard to the training of the younger constituents of the congregation. The importance of thoroughly training teachers, in order that they may likewise instruct, cannot be too highly magnified. When we consider the progress that has been made during the past years with the limited preparation at hand, we may indeed consider the future outlook bright with an adequate force of trained teachers. There are few of us blind to the fact that the success and strength of the church of the next generation, will rest alone upon the efforts put forth in the present generation. Truly the future lieth not in the land of Tomorrow but in the Present.

Too often in the hurry and rush of life in the present day, the burden of the moral and spiritual training of the boys and girls is placed upon the shoulders of the day and Sabbath school teachers. The modern tendency seems to lean toward group instruction. That which had once been given around the family fireside, we now permit to be given at the hands of outsiders. With the teacher of the day school monopolizing some two-thirds of the child's time for the instruction in the common arts, we find that the Sabbath school teacher has only part of the remaining time for spiritual instruction. If the teacher of the day school were no better prepared to teach than the average Sunday school teacher, he or she would not be granted a certificate. According to the length of time that the scholar may be in the hands of the teacher, we perceive that the Sunday school teacher should be at least one-third better prepared to teach than the teacher of the public schools.

The Son of Man, that day when he pointed out to the little group of children and said, "Of such is the Kingdom," implied more than some of us have as yet discovered. There are those teachers who have yet to learn that the privilege of instructing the minds of the children is the opportunity of shaping the trend of many lives. There are many who teach a class as though it were a task to be performed, and gotten rid of, instead of a great opportunity. It is asking much of a child to willingly come to class when he may be taught by an unwilling and unsympathetic teacher. We often expect the scholar to attend regularly when the teacher, herself may not be at all noted for promptness and regularity.

As to the theory and principles of the training that a prospective teacher should undergo, I would not make bold to say. Too many theories have already been advanced. What we need now is a getting to solid ground upon which the scholar walks each day of his life. The trouble with the Sunday school lessons differ in part from those of the Christian Endeavor. One reason why we have so many dead Endeavor societies and others almost so, is because the men who prepare the questions lose sight of the fact that the bulk of them will not be answered by college graduates. The teacher of the Sunday school has the privilege of shaping her own course.

No one should be expected as a teacher to lead his charges over a path of religious experience he has not traveled himself. He should be conscientious and above all consistent. He should be willing to ask no sacrifice that he would not undergo himself. He should be a teacher, not because it would be doing a favor to some one else, but because of a love of the work. The student must be understood before the highest instruction may be given; therefore the teacher must be a student of human nature. Then with an indelible impression upon the mind of the teacher that the child of today is the church of tomorrow, such progress will be made that has not been approached in days that have past.

whole, do more harm than they do good. Now a Christian is one who lives not to please himself but to do good to others; therefore, he could not encourage in the slightest degree any insitution that on the whole, does to society more harm than good."

Now, some one may say, Is it wrong to play pool? Pool was for years, and is yet by many good people, considered harmful amusement. However, pool is not a game of chance but rather a game of science or skill, and therefore it is less apt to incite one to gamble than is the card game, neither does it have the immoral effect on society as has the dance, or the musical comedy. Therefore, I believe that it should be left to the best of one's own judgment to decide for him- or herself, as the case may be. (Paul's injunction to abstain from all appearance of evil might help in deciding the rightness or wrongness of this amusement.—Ed.).

Now as to bowling. This is in my mind good, clean healthy amusement, and outside of baseball and swimming, I know of nothing that will aid more in the developing of one's physical body than will bowling. And these, bowling, swimming, base ball, basket ball and gymnasium work, I believe should not only be permitted by the church, but urged. It has proven to be a fact beyond the shadow of doubt that the only way to build up and to develop the best that is in one, mentally, spiritually or intellectually, is to first develop a strong clean physical body, and if you will notice, the best colleges and universities in our land today, are usually those that rank highest in athletics.

Christian people are beginning to realize this fact more and more every day, and you will find that many of the modern church buildings that are being erected today, especially in the larger cities, have installed within, or in connection with them, bowling alleys, swimming pools, gymnasiums with the best of instructors, employed, rest rooms or parlors for both women and men, libraries, open at all times where their membership have access to all the latest and best books on all the greatest and most important subjects of the day. Also offices where they employ physicians and attorneys who will furnish them with the best of advice both, medical and legal, at the expense and under the fostering care of the church. This, to my mind, is modernizing our equipment to meet the demands of the time in which we live. And where it is being done, the result for good is beyond our comprehension.

We cannot account for personal constitution, for singularities of mind; in this profound problem there are metaphysics not to be penetrated by human reason, and the expositor, how careful and anxious seever he may be, can only begin where the facts themselves begin. What lies beyond his ken also lies beyond his criticism. The solemn and awful fact is that every man has a constitution of his own, a peculiarity and specialty that makes him an individual, and separates him from all other men, giving him an accent and a signature incommunicably his own. And God deals with every man according to the conditions which the man himself supplies.—Joseph Parker.

A Few Echoes From the Springfield Y. M. C. A. Conference

Report in General and on "Dad" Elliott

By Earl H. Detsch

Food is better than gold. Good thoughts are better than money. Food sustains life. Good thought sustains character. Food rots. Life is capable of immortality. Money corrodes, is lost, is stolen. Character is invincible against thieves, never rusts and is good currency anywhere.

The thought and the inspiration derived from a great conference is greater than the money spent to attend, as is the mountain greater than the anti-hill. The men who attended the Springfield, Y. M. C. A. Conference left with as little regret as the laborer leaves the pay-master on Saturday evening.

The main speakers were Dr. I. E. Bosworth, of Oberlin College, Mr. Hurrey of the International Student Movement, Dr. H. V. Ward the noted sociologist, and "Dad" A. J. Elliott, that ardent lecturer, renowned among all the United States colleges. The audience was composed of the flower of Ohio's young intellectual and spiritual life. Wittenberg College was the hospitable hostess of this conference. She entertained the men in college style. Her football game with Wilmington, her band, instrumental quintette and vocal quartette on the night of the banquet were a few manifestations of her good fellowship and cheer, notwithstanding the fact that

"It is always fair weather

Ashland College was well represented at Wittenberg, having six present.

The speaker who impressed me most was "Dad" A. J. Elliott. The boys have called him "Dad," I suppose because of his baldness but more likely on account of account of his fatherly attitude to college men in general. He has been a college man himself. As to strength he was and is a Hercules; concerning spirituality and good influence, a Paul, and touching preaching, he is just "Dad" Elliott. He knows the students' problems. He has been "through the mill," and preaches and teaches well because he "Feels the hearts of all men in his breast," as Taylor says, "and knows their strength or weakness through his own." His voice is challenging and appealing; now filled with the tremor of pathos, and now with the quietness and serenity of a summer twilight; at one time, loud and thundering as a storm; at another time as passionate and appealing as the voice of a mother pleading with a wayward son. Such is "Dad" Elliott, a man who thousands of students could arise today and call "blessed."

His great sex lecture turned twenty young men to true living as he gave it Sunday evening, October 26th. They were all sincere, coming forward with set, firm jaws and earnest eyes to take "Dad" by the hand as a symbol of their inner purpose.

And now in closing I wish to express the theme of Mr. Elliott's Sex Lecture in quoting an illustration as he told it that evening.

"A young man living in the west went to school in one of our eastern universities. His mother was very proud of him, and could not wait until the holidays came to visit him. Thanksgiving found the mother at the son's school in the east. She went in his room, and noted immediately the decorations on the walls. There to the left were his boxing gloves, his baseball gloves, tennis racket and football paraphernalia; and there was mother's picture and father's, and sweetheart's. But here to the right on the wall were some obscene pictures! She, like a wise mother said nothing. But when she went home she sent him a picture of the boy Christ in the temple. Christmas time came and she visited him again. There on the left wall hung all his athletic paraphernalia as before, there was his loved one's portraits as before, and here to the right hung the picture of Christ. She turned to him and said in a very soft, tender tone, "Where are the other pictures, son, which were here when I came at Thanksgiving time?" He replied frankly, "Mother, they just simply WOULD NOT GO WITH HIM."

That was "Dad's" theme.

Mr. Hurrey on "Our Guests"

By W. R. Deeter

Mr. Hurrey, of New York, spoke on "Our Guests From Other Lands" impressing the wonderful opportunity that the colleges of Ohio have in assisting an international spirit to prevail in her vital institutions. The whole world is represented in the schools of Cincinnati, having 34 students from Russia, 5 from Germany, 1 from Mexico, etc. There are 128 nationalities represented in 142 foreign students. Ten thousand are in schools in the United States. Hence our country is indeed international. There are people from every land. They are here with motives that are unquestioned, ready to serve their country 18 hours a day to help their fellowmen. And for all this we must admire them. We may not like the color of their face or hair, but we have got to admire their backbone. Frenchmen of wealth gave money to send several young folks to America to learn our democratic spirit. We are trying to do for them what we would like for them to do for us. The practical Christian message is the one fundamental which must be given them. We can give them a new idea of the Book. Not as a Bolivian once said, "That Book ought to be locked up in a museum. It's a book of the past." This Book is vital and must be used to teach the principles of Jesus in order that the new world brotherhood may become an actuality. Yes, the pendulum is swinging the other way and we must go and grasp it before it turns back. On every ship that John R. Mott boards he finds some representative of Japan going elsewhere to learn something new to take back to help form their national life. The question for us is, "What are the principles which we teach our foreign brother?" Ah! they must be based on the Christian Scriptures.

Report on Dr. Harry F. Ward

By John Perry Horlacher

It is not often that one meets such a personality as Dr. Ward. His presence at the recent Ohio State Student Y. M. C. A. Conference was one of the striking features of the convocation. Although small of stature, he undoubtedly is a giant mentally. His black attire bespoke neatness and modesty. His general appearance and decorum was that of becoming culture. As he rose to address that body of over three hundred college men, an expectant hush settled upon the assembly. Then with measured speech and well chosen words he first impressed his listeners with the fact of the new social order. No one, but with mediocre intelligence, he declared, who was aware of what was occurring daily both in America and Europe could fail to sense the change that was gradually taking place in the social order of the world. The very heart of this change could be seen in the recognition that the middle class was demanding, and more, was receiving. He further maintained that it was no less the duty than the privilege of every college man, who dared call himself Christian, to aid in bringing about this change. This he proved conclusively by presenting with his quiet but fiery eloquence, point after point upholding the original proposition. One might aptly characterize him and his utterances as highly profitable, a great asset to any convention program.

MISSIONS

WHY THE GREATEST HOME MISSION OFFERING?

This is to be the "Victory Year" in the accomplishments of the Brethren church. During the conference year, September 1, 1919 to September 1, 1920, our beloved church is to make greater strides than ever before for the promulgation of the interests of our fraternity.

A great conference with a great moderator gave us the inspiration. The needs in all avenues were shown in such a large way, that we almost shudder at our tasks, but thank God for the possibilities.

BRETHREN CHURCH MEET THE GREAT CHALLENGE?

THANKSGIVING DAY has been set apart for the great Home Mission offering. Our budget has been increased to $9,000.00, an average of 40 cents per member. Oh, how small, when we consider our wonderful possibilities. Will every Brethren church seek to be on the Honor Roll by meeting this apportionment or going far over the top,

Our new General Missionary Secretary,

The East, the Central West, the West and the Northwest, are all calling for help in a larger way than ever before. Great virgin fields, white unto the harvest, are beckoning the Brethren to come.

A few years from now will be too late. We must go now and possess the land. WILL THE

ORION E. BOWMAN.

THE GREATEST HOME MISSION OFFERING EVER

That this should be our banner year in the interests of Home Missions is altogether possible. There are many reasons why it should be. One very striking reason to me is her present opportunities. It is my natural conviction that the Brethren church never faced a more hopeful outlook than just right now.

Two hundred years ago God selected a few men to reveal his will to this old world more perfectly, and to lead men out of the chaos of bigotry and sectarian hate. These men thought and toiled and suffered much. They planted whole gospel churches and established the cause that is dear to us all in many places, but today these very places are languishing, and holding out their palsied hands for help. Shall God's plans be defeated by us to whom this trust has been committed? The Brethren church has always believed in missions. She has always believed in the New Testament as being a sufficient rule of faith and practice. But Brethren, it is not enough to simply believe; it is not the faith we profess; but it is what we accomplish; it is how much we are willing to spend and be spent, that is going to determine our place in the affairs of the kingdom. What shall be the end of such a movement as ours. Shall we go forward? Or shall we stay easy going and conservative, maintaining a snail's pace and eventually fall to the rear?

On to new fields of conquest! Should be our rallying cry in this our victory year. The enthusiasm incident to great commercial achievements ought to very materially effect the religious life of our people and move us out to work, to give and to win for Jesus Christ and the church as never before. Would that the whole life of the Brethren church would be absorbed in it. My very prayerful and anxious desire is that we each get something of the spirit of our common Master, and do much in bringing this old sin-cursed world to the foot of the cross. Personally I am very optimistic. I have a great faith. I believe our faces are in the right direction. I believe we are going to prove ourselves true men and women by making this Thanksgiving offering the greatest offering ever.

C. C. GRISSO.

THE BIGGEST OFFERING EVER

Surely we have a right to urge and expect the fulfillment of the above caption while our Home Missionary offering is being taken this Thanksgiving time. There are reasons aplenty why we should approach every Thanksgiving time in just this spirit and with this purpose.

We cannot believe and practice the "Press on" philosophy of St. Paul unless we go forward each year. Progress is the battle cry of this age. And the most pitiable man in the world is the man who places himself in the direct way of progress and allows its wheels to grind him to powder. This is precisely the position every member of the Brethren church places himself in, when he for any reason hinders the progress of missions. For missions must and will succeed in a "Whole Gospel church." If they are to succeed in the strictest sense, we must go forward. Our offering must be MUCH larger than on any previous year. In fact, I see no good reason why it should not be doubled. It can be when spirituality reaches the entire confines of our brotherhood. Our limitations have been brought about in the past by our half-gospel churches, not Whole Gospel ones. For the whole gospel is for the whole world, and a lot of our churches do not work on that basis.

Our Board, understanding as never before, the great opportunities before us, such opportunities as we have never had, took into consideration your profession as well as your practice, and planned a budget far in excess of what it has ever been. Some there are in the church who will say, Well, they made the budget, now let them get the extra money to meet it. Your Board was elected by the delegates you sent to conference to represent you and, being your representatives placed there by your wish, we feel that we have a right to plan, and plan largely for the Brethren church. And to make such a plan a success, we must have your co-operation. The offering must be the biggest ever, because the demands are the biggest ever.

If we love our church and are jealous of her standing, then we can do no less than give of our means to support her growth, through Home Missions. If we delight in seeing the pictures of new churches in The Evangelist, and read of the organization of new churches, let us get behind our Home Board this Thanksgiving time. We can do it, if all the churches will give. Let us who have been giving double and triple our gifts that this coming offering may be the biggest ever.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

WHY THE BANNER OFFERING THIS YEAR?

In the Thanksgiving-tide offering this year the Brethren church is facing the greatest challenge of its history. For several years we have met in conferences and planned a great program as a whole gospel people should; we have believed and prayed and talked as though we were the nearest to the apostolic church of any of the people of God; but we have still stood practically still as to church growth. All this in spite of the clamoring calls coming from a dozen fields where opportunities for the Brethren are ripe but rapidly slipping away from us.

This offering for church extension should be the banner one of our history because the Boards must have the money to take the needy fields crying for Brethren teaching; and because it will be a folly almost bordering on crime for us to sit idly down in the presence of the open doors that God would have us enter. If we are the people of God we must go forward. With our thousands of comfortable homes and luxurious automobiles it is folly to talk of the burden of 40c or more per capita. Before this message can possibly reach Ashland and be set in type every child in the Brethren church will have spent more than that on the movies, sundae, candies or gum; and the men of the Brethren church will have chewed up more money than that and spit it out before Jehovah. Isn't it preposterous once you get an airplane view of it?

The General Missionary Board of the Brethren church, representing every district of the Brethren church, at the recent conference, could no longer turn down these despairing cries for help and made such allotments of help for the coming year as it seemed the great God would wish us to make. We did this in the full faith that the devoted people of the Brethren church would stand by the colors till the eventide. The per capita is 40c; but the able churches must do far better. This money is not being spent in slum work, meritorious as that may be. It is to build new Brethren churches and spread abroad the faith "once for all delivered unto the saints." It is to build a new wing on the plant for larger production, if you please. Let all the saints of God stand by "the faith of our fathers."

Faith of our fathers! living still

In spite of dungeon, fire and sword:

O how our hearts beat high with joy,

Where'er we hear that glorious word:

Faith of our fathers, holy faith!

We will be true to thee till death.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HOLLYWOOD REVIVAL

It was a typical northwest pioneer evangelistic meeting, with the preacher of the same type, Brother Paul Miller, who gave excellent sermons. The number of confessions were 50 present to study on. Yesterday, the A week has passed since we took the tent down, and I was asked to report to you then, but I wanted to assure you of the genuineness of the revival, which a week of follow-up work shows.

The only available place to continue services is in an empty store building. A hint, and the new sisters were there with brush and soap. The next day 13 came for the other kind of knee-work, imploring the Throne for the rest of the names on the prayer list. Nor would they leave till I had explained the Bible charts on the wall. They wanted a starter for the next day, when the regular Friday night Bible study began. There were 50 present to study on. Yesterday, the afternoon Sunday school was re-organized with 56 to enroll. The owner of the building, is one of the new converts and they generously opened the front room with the piano, (next door) for the primary department, and another room for the young ladies' class.

Having announced that I might be leaving Spokane soon, and that they would need a leader to keep up their prayer-group, they decided to meet this week to organize a Sister's Society in connection with the S. S. C. E. at the main church. The young girls have held prayer meetings from the first week of the tent. Six of the "Girls Club" came forward in a group near the beginning of the revival.

The girls of my Sunday school class had been organized for a long time as a "Girls' Club" and it was on the third night of the meeting, that the six above mentioned came forward to confess Christ. They invited me to share their secret, and go with them on a "hike" the following Saturday. We tramped on out still farther north, climbed one of the many pine hills surrounding Spokane. They went "over the top" and just where the slope began to grow steep into a winding gulch, stood a veteran of a pine, which marks a signal victory for the girls that day. There were no "wicenors" or marshmallows, no one even thought of them, but there was a list of boy's names, and the rest of the girls who hadn't yet enlisted in the only winning cause; for this was to be a "prayer hike." We recalled the instances when the Captain of our salvation had likewise withdrawn; talked of the great need of prayer, the privilege of thus co-operating with the Father in getting souls saved, the joy of it and its wonderful results. We knelt and when it came their turn,—an awkward pause, no stir, then a tittering outburst of honesty, "We don't know what to say." It was a helpless moment all around. Will they fail in the very purpose of their hike? We faced about, saw the importance of the cause for which they were to plead, the simplicity of talking with One we love much, and with the disciples' prayer, "Lord teach us to pray," first one and then another made their first audible prayer, a victory for the Hollywood work.

Prayer changes things. Prayer gives God a better chance to work. To the place given to prayer, weeks and months preceding the meetings, may be attributed the success of the present effort. When the change came to the Baltimore work, and the Mission Board wrote me to go to Spokane, I prayed that God would save at least 20 souls by fall, as one of the results of my return to the northwest, and more than that number have united with the First Brethren church, since my coming and starting the Bible classes. Only I had expected the ingathering to take place sooner, directly after the dedication of our building, but a few matters had to be adjusted before a revival could be possible. The last of September was rather chilly for a tent meeting, but it was the quickest way to attract the crowd of indifferent ones.

Hollywood is about 4 miles north west, at the end of the car lines, where people used to go to escape the "eye of the world." We were flatly told that a revival was impossible as it had been tried before, with failure each time, for the people would not go to church. But the seed had been sown by gentle hands and sweet faith. Sister Ollie, Brother Goche-nour's eldest daughter, had moved among them a year before, faithful in her Home Department mission. She caught the vision of what could be done in that long neglected district, and God gave her a harvest of souls saved, when they attended the evangelistic meetings at the main church when Brother Ashman was preaching. Sister Ollie felt unable to carry the work farther and she kept writing for me to come to which invitations I had to turn a deaf ear till in the late summer. I found her strength spent, but her faith strong, though I could see little left in Hollywood to inspire hope. About two months ago the doctor announced that she could not live through the day, that there was positively no human help. I had hoped also by deferring this letter a week, I might report her healing. I trust for this occasion next week, as Hollywood is planning for her help again after I leave. She is greatly beloved by all. From the hospital she was brought here to her mother's home, and while the tent meetings were on, in her conscious moments when we would report the converts, her face would light up till it seemed a reflection of the angels in heaven rejoicing over a sinner coming home. We are grateful that God allowed her to see the fruits of her efforts.

Brethren Day

On account of building operations and dedication and then the Hollywood work, Brethren Day was not observed till October 12th. The Sunday school had the same day for Rally Day. It was an all-day meeting and lunch was eaten together in the basement. Our special speakers in the afternoon were of home talent, and unacquainted with any other Brethren church, but to hear them you would have thought they had been come through with Alexander Mack for this larger cause. In the evening a "say so" meeting, then a line of 19 passed through the baptismal waters, followed with the laying on of hands, and to crown it, a sermon from the Revelation by the pastor. It made a heavy day for him, but everybody seemed in good spirits, and rejoicing to see what God had wrought among us.

COLLEGE NEWS

Memorial services were held last Tuesday morning at the chapel hour for Elder J. C. Cassel and Brother John Lichty. Both of these brethren had been members of the Board of Trustees so the local Board members joined with the College in paying a tribute of respect to their sainted memory. Dr. R. E. Teeter and Dr. A. D. Guage spoke of the Board and Dr. Miller and the writer spoke in behalf of the College. Miss Puterbaugh, teacher of Voice sang, and Dr. L. L. Garber read a selection from In Memoriam.

The senior roster at present stands thus: eight A. B's, one M. A.'s seven E. D's, and six Academy Normals, making twenty-two Seniors. The M. A. man is doing a year's extra work in course.

The writer recently preached for Brother Thomas in his church at Warsaw, Indiana. The attendance was good and I have a very pleasant memory of the Warsaw people.

The Philadelphia church holds the palm for the largest number of men sent to the Seminary, if the memory of the writer is correct.

I can now recount six young men from that one congregation alone who have come here and prepared for the ministry. If there is another congregation which can show an equal number, I can not now recall the name. There are two in the Seminary now from that congregation, Brethren Horlacher and Detsch.

The College has come into the possession of some rather fine pictures which need framing. A frame would cost about $1.50. There are fifteen pictures. If any one wants to do something useful here is an opportunity in getting these pictures framed. This may appeal to some organized Sunday school class. Our walls certainly need a little brightening up.

The janitors are constantly working upon the old building; today they are cleaning out the tower, a task that perhaps has not been undertaken for a quarter of a century. Mr. Landry has already started the flower beds for next year, setting out the border of showy perennials.

I hear very excellent reports from last year's graduates. It is hoped that an increasing number of Brethren young people will enter Ashland's Normal work.

I recently received a letter with a check of fifty dollars, the gift from a brother and sister's tithing fund for the support of two worthy young people, members of the Seminary. Ponder this for a moment! First of all it means that these two friends of the College have a very great faith in the two young people. Moreover, it means that they have faith in the College. But what is more, they have faith in God and his church. Neither of these two young people dare fail with this faith behind them, the College dare not disappoint, and the church WILL go forward, when our people see the urgency and the scriptural basis of stewardship.

The College covets an interest in your prayers.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES

I have just closed a two and a half weeks' meeting at Lost Creek, Kentucky. We surely had a glorious time. During the first week there were no conversions. The first night of the second week the break came. At the end of the second week we had about twenty-five. The last half week there was much rain and some who were almost persuaded were kept away. We gathered in the most that lived close, and the rainy nights hindered those of a distance. We closed the meeting on Sunday night, October 12, with communion, one of the best communion services I have ever attended. Splendid young men of the school who were converted during the meeting attended, also a number of young ladies, also middle aged men and women who were converted during the meeting; with these and the old standby members, we surely had a spiritually uplifting meeting.

Nineteen were baptized and eight confessed Christ but are not yet baptized, making a total of twenty-seven confessions. Some of the most influential people became very deeply convicted and attended almost nightly who perhaps would have also come in had it not been for the rainy nights at the close of the meeting. We believe that several of them will come very soon. As usual the meeting was too short but we could not stay a day longer as we stayed four days longer than we had expected to stay.

I have made a study of the Kentucky work and I am sure that the best part of the work is the school. I have never seen anything like it before. They are positively revolutionizing the whole community. They have the public school in connection with their other school, that is, in the same building. From the least to the greatest they drill them in all fundamental Bible doctrines. The memorizing and quoting of Scriptures,—I have seen nothing like it in any school. They teach them repentance, the love of God, and to pray, so that all who come in touch with the school not only are greatly benefited but nearly all are soundly converted. Nearly all who were old enough joined the Brethren church while I was there. They come for miles around; become converted while living at the school, and then when school is out they return to their country homes and the towns in which they live and spread the Brethren doctrine, which is a whole gospel.

If the Lord should delay his coming and this kind of teaching is kept up for ten years and these boys and girls become married and become the fathers and mothers of the community, it will become the most spiritual and one of the most intelligent Christian communities in our entire brotherhood.

It seems indeed a pity that the cost of living is so high that they are compelled to keep the price of board above what it ought to be and yet they can not make expenses, although they have the most economical boarding house for ladies they ever had. The brotherhood could do nothing better than to ship boxes of food to this place.

I am not paid to advertise their work and Brother Drushal knows nothing about this article but I feel that the Lord will greatly bless all who will help in this noble work.

The old time preachers have falsely taught these people upon the grace of giving so that it will take careful and tactful teaching to bring them up to the gospel standard but if it continues to develop in the future as in the few years of the past, the time will come when it will be self supporting. When these spiritual young people who are thus daily drilled in Bible truth become the landholders and liberal giving and tithing practiced they will abundantly supply all temporal needs as well as helping foreign fields.

I cannot say too much in favor of one of my spiritual children from Canada and also his splendid wife that he found at Los Angeles, California, namely, Brother and Sister Pierce. I wept with joy when I saw how he drills the pupils from the smallest to the greatest to love Jesus and to take a delight in the study of the Bible and to memorize it, to hate sin and to love God, etc. It is wonderful and it bore splendid fruit during our meeting as all but a very very few of the pupils who were old enough were converted and joined the church. He emphasizes the new birth and real genuine conversion. It has been a number of years since I held a meeting in a church where young and old would so promptly volunteer to pray and quote the Bible and work for the salvation of souls as these dear people here.

A community that was hardly fit to live in was thus revolutionized in a dozen years. They run along the ONLY lines that will succeed anywhere permanently—real consecration, the prayer and faith life with Bible study. I could name church after church that succeeded along this line and as soon as they introduced paid suppers, bazaars, entertainments, socials, etc., the spiritual power began to wane, and many of them made a great failure, and among the few that apparently succeeded you would have to have a large magnifying glass to distinguish the average member from the average man of the world.

I had a most royal home at Brother and Sister Drushal's. I shall never forget it and I am sure from this time on they shall have my prayers and sympathy, as they never had it before. I am very sure that the brotherhood is making no mistake in their loyal support of this work.

My article is now too lengthy but I cannot close without saying a word about Krypton, Kentucky. My train was 8 hours late and when I arrived at Haddix the nearest station to Lost Creek, the conductor failed to take the slip out of my hat and took me past my destination. When I discovered the mistake I found I could not get back for services that night, I then decided I would go over 20 miles further to Krypton where Brother and Sister Rempel live. I could not get back to Lost Creek in time for service so I phoned Brother Drushal and I stayed over night and attended prayer meeting at Krypton and preached for them. I found Brother and Sister Rempel wonderfully praying Christians. They indeed need the special prayers and support of the brotherhood for this work. They felt very sure that the Lord let me run past my station to encourage and help them in their service.

I found that dear Brother Cook had so endeared himself in the hearts and minds of some of these people that it will indeed be EXCEEDINGLY hard for any other man to get the hold upon them necessary for the success of that work. I am sure if dear Brother Cook would know the lasting good he could do for that work, for himself, and for dear Brother and Sister Rempel by writing each one of his dear friends and say, "You will continue to be my BEST friend, if you will enthusiastically work with and under the direction of dear Brother and Sister Rempel."

This is the home of dear Brother Smith, who was at National Conference. I had a very pleasant visit with him. And I feel sure that there are many others like him who are capable of developing into strong spiritual Christian men and women.

Brother and Sister Rempel are thoroughly orthodox and live a beautiful prayer life and once the dear people there come to understand them rightly they will develop that place into a wonderful spiritual church. But like Brother Drushal's work it will take years of time to do so. The material is there and these Godly, sacrificing, faithful children of God are the right people in the right place. Pray for them.

NORTH GEORGETOWN, OHIO ON THE MAP

June 8, we began our pastorate at Georgetown in connection with Louisville. This work had been without regular preaching and pastoral care since the first of the year. With the use of our car, Mrs. Riddle and I have visited the most of the homes of this community. October 6, we began a series of meetings. We extend this effort with the thought in mind, first to awaken and revive an interest in the work; secondly to win souls for the Kingdom.

The interest and attendance was very good. We must not forget too that these were only, three days of the two weeks that we had good weather and roads. We all braved the storm and mud to make the meeting a success. During the two weeks 38 pastoral calls were made, 3 schools visited, and one sister nearly 90 years old, anointed. This personal effort brought people to church who had not been punctual heretofore. Last but not least, 3 were received into the church by baptism.

Through the efforts of Mrs. Riddle the Women's Missionary Society was restored to life and a new organization effected.

We had some interested helpers. Our male quartette gave valuable assistance. Sunday evening the 12th, several cars of people from Louisville motored to Georgetown. Earl Bratten furnished a violin solo and the Bratten-Clapper male quartette responded with a beautiful selection. On the 15th the "Home-worth male chorus came and furnished all the singing for the evening. This chorus consists of 20 voices, under the direction of our chorister at Georgetown, Brother Leander Stoffer. These men sing a great message to many people of this locality.

Sunday morning of the 12th, we had our Harvest Home services. This service was very effective and unique because of the beautiful decorative and display of fruits, vegetables, grains and flowers. The writer has never seen anything more beautiful at a county fair than was exhibited here.

Last but not least as we were getting ready to start home, we had our attention called to a large pile of boxes, sacks, packages and jars. A donation, indeed. As we journeyed homeward we remarked that the "Allen" looked like a delivery truck direct from the farm.

The spirit that prevailed throughout the meeting causes us all to rejoice and feel that it was a real success.

In the service.

E. M. RIDDLE, Pastor.

You need only to be careful about one thing, never to displease God, and you will see how lovingly God will direct all that concerns you: material interests, sympathies, worldly cares,—you will be astonished at the sudden enlightenment that will come to you, and the wondrous peace that will come from your labor and your toil.—Gold Dust.

I'll sing you a lay ere I wing on my way,
Cheer up! Cheer up! Cheer up!
Whenever you're blue find something to do
For somebody else who is sadder than you,
Cheer up! Cheer up! Cheer up!

What is contrary to God's will, grieves him, and does you harm, that alone you need fear; the thought that will stain your soul; the wish that troubles your heart; that unwholesome action, that will weaken your intellect and destroy your peace.—Gold Dust.

Business Manager's Corner

"MICE AND MEN"

Was it Bernard Shaw or "Bobby" Burns that had something to say about "The best laid plans of mice and men" frequently hitting the toboggan? Well, whoever it was, it was some one who had had his "pegs" knocked from beneath him on more than one occasion so that he was made to feel that hopes and plans are many times as un dependable as a pair of "skis" on the feet of a South-sea islander. However, in this day of political, industrial, social and religious unrest, one hardly expects to have any plans fully materialized any more than a rank materialist who goes into a spiritualistic seance expects to have the medium call up the spirit of his great-grandfather who died at Valley Forge.

So it has been with the work of the Brethren Publishing Company for more than a month. We have planned and planned, but it has been impossible to fully realize our plans. Changing our plant from a gas engine power plant to an individual motor driven plant has been some problem, for in the place of one big engine driving a long line shaft and many counter shafts to run the different presses and machines, we are installing nine electric motors so that any one press or machine in the plant may be operated independent from the power that drives any other machine. But the electrical world is about the busiest world in the universe at this time and it has been impossible to secure a prompt shipment of motors, and we still have three motors to come.

All these things have caused unavoidable delays and have caused us much annoyance in every branch of the work of the Publishing Company. We have tried to serve our patrons to the best of our ability, but we realize that the service has not been satisfactory. Answers to letters have been greatly delayed, and orders for supplies have sometimes been delayed unduly and even some mistakes have been made in filling the orders, and some orders may not have been filled at all. Most any housewife will understand when we say a great deal of our work for several weeks has been done under just about as favorable conditions as she would have if she had all her goods moved out of one house and simply set into another and then have company come for dinner before anything had been unpacked or set up in the new home.

But we are pretty well set up now and we can really walk the entire length of the building without running into anything or anybody, so we will be able to give proper attention to business from now on.

Future Prospects

Every day we are re-convinced that this change of location of the Publishing House has been the most advanced step taken since the plant was moved from the College basement ten years ago. New business has been coming to us almost every day, much of which we have had to refuse just at present because we try to do much extra, but we hope to catch up with everything within the next month and we must catch up with our own work before then be able to increase our outside work very largely.

Yet the FIRST duty of the Publishing House at all times is to serve the Brethren church by producing its literature as needed and to do it as promptly and as carefully as possible. This ideal we shall ever keep before us, but at the same time remembering that with a constituency no larger than that of the Brethren church, unless we have the loyal support of practically every church and every pastor, it will be impossible to do so.

The more support we receive from our own people the less outside work we will have to do to meet the expense of maintaining a Brethren Publishing House.

The Brethren Evangelist

We are glad to be able to announce that we are still compelled to print considerably more than FIVE THOUSAND copies of the Evangelist each week to supply our subscribers, but there are a number of churches that have been on the Honor Roll for a year or more that will have to renew their covenant within a very short time or we will fall back to less than five thousand once again. We plan to run the Honor Roll in the paper only when a new church has been added to the roll, so it will not be run this week, but we are glad to announce that a number of churches are striving earnestly to win this place and others are laying all their plans to continue to hold the place they have occupied for from one to three years. Several changes in the pastors of some of these Honor Roll churches have taken place and we have been asked to make such changes as may be necessary. A. T. Wierick is now pastor at Ardmore, Indiana; I. A. Duker at New Paris, Indiana; S. G. Henderson at Clay City, Indiana; W. E. Thomas at Flora, Indiana and C. C. Grisso at Tiosa, Indiana. While E. S. Flora informs us that the Beaver City, Nebraska church is no longer vacant, and no doubt there are still others of which we have not yet learned, but we will try to revise the Roll thoroughly the next time it appears in the paper.

A Little Information

Please don't ask us for any back numbers of the Evangelist if you have missed any during the last month as we are not able to furnish them for at least some of the issues. We will lay the blame to our moving. Then let us explain once again the meaning of the label on your paper. If your paper is marked 12-19 that does not mean your subscription is paid up to December, the twelfth month in the year, but it does mean that it is paid to NUMBER TWELVE of the Evangelist which would mean to the last of March. Recently a subscriber whose paper was marked 12-19 wrote that they thought their subscription was paid until the end of the year.

Who Makes the Changes

Don't write to Brother Baer and ask him to change your address or to renew your subscription. That is not his "job" and he does not know how it is done. Moreover I would feel inclined to throw him out if he tried it, so to save him from bodily harm and to save yourselves from disappointment send all subscriptions and all instructions for change of address to the Business Manager. He is responsible for this part of the work, and though he may not do the work personally he is responsible for having it properly done, and he will take the blame when mistakes are made, and sometimes they are made as we have learned on more than one occasion. But let us follow the motto that an Ashland concrete contractor stamps upon every job of cement walk he lays, "Keep Sweet," and we will all live longer and enjoy life more.

Something That Will Interest

Every Church and Sunday School; Every Pastor, Sunday School Officer and Teacher,—in Fact Every Member of the Brethren Church, —and Many Others.

NOVEMBER 30, 1919 the Sunday Schools of the World will use as the basis of study the THIRTEENTH CHAPTER OF JOHN'S GOSPEL. Among our own people this passage should be used in EVERY Department from the Beginner's on up through all the Grades.

Something New for this Occasion

The Brethren Publishing Company, Ashland, Ohio, through its Sunday school literature editor, has prepared a unique pamphlet, setting forth as clearly as the English language is capable of, the MEANING OF CHRIST'S TEACHING IN JOHN THIRTEEN. This publication is a compilation to which almost a core of representative men of the church have contributed their BEST thought on the subject.

JOHN THIRTEEN contains one of the distinctive teachings of the Brethren church, teachings of which the world stands in greater need today than ever before, and yet at the same time a teaching called in QUESTION more than any other.

Letters containing full particulars and prices have been mailed to every pastor in the brotherhood, with request that they co-operate with the Sunday schools in securing a generous supply of what will likely be the best thing ever issued on the subject for Brethren people and those of Brethren inclinations.

The Children Not Forgotten

For the little people we have something most attractive and interesting to be used on the same day. It is an enlarged and specially illustrated edition of Primary Bible Stories, a publication used by many of our schools in the Primary Department.

The Purpose of this little paper is to set forth in the simplest language possible the teachings of JOHN THIRTEEN, NOT in words only, but in PICTURE also.

Beginners will get their impression from the pictures through the medium of the eye, while Primary and Junior boys and girls will get their impression both from the pictures and the reading which accompanies the illustrations.

This Is an Opportunity that may not come to your school and church for a long time, and we suggest that you secure as generous a supply of both publications as your funds permit. You will want copies for future as well as for present use.

Price (regular edition) per 100 copies $1.50. In smaller quantities, 20 cents per dozen.

Price (children's paper) per dozen, 15 cents; 50 copies or more, one cent each.

Schools using Primary Bible Stories in their Primary Department will receive free as many copies as their order calls for. Extra copies at the same price as other schools.

Every Home should have a supply of BOTH publications. It is a rare opportunity to secure what is not likely to be duplicated for a long time, if ever. Every one of our more than 500 isolated members should order at least a dozen copies of each, but do it NOW,—a second edition is not likely to be printed.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON THE TASK OF HOME MISSIONS

The most important consideration before the Brethren fraternity at this Thanksgiving season is the making provision for our Home Mission advance. The time is opportune and the cause is timely and urgent. What could be more appropriate at the time when our thoughts are turned back to the kneeling of the little colony of Christian souls on the soil of a new world to thank God for home, harvest and religious liberty than to bring our offerings of thanksgiving to Almighty God for the unmeasured bounty of his goodness, and by our gifts make possible the distribution of divine grace into other lives? And what is more urgent at this particular time of unrest and uncertainty, greed and overreaching, class hatred and reactionary tendencies, godlessness and infidelity than that the church of Christ should put forth its wisest, strongest and most persistent effort to bring to the heart of your own troubled land the knowledge of God which alone can give peace?

The church is recognizing as never before the necessity of making America truly Christian. The burden of leadership that America bears was never so heavy as now. All the world is looking to her, and her conduct at home and her leadership abroad will determine the courses of nations, and generations will be required to witness the final results. The world was never more willing to be led into new paths than now. The terrible war shook it loose from its allegiance to the old principles of selfishness; it became sick of the awful fruits of its own sowing. This is a day of beginning again, and at this very moment the world is hesitating whether or not to enter upon a new era of unselfishness and brotherhood or to build again the old walls of international selfishness and exclusiveness. The first English statesman of this or the preceding generation, James Bryce, said to Dr. Frederick Lynch when pleading for him to use the influence of his voice and pen in favor of an American Mandate for Armenia, said, "All the world trusts America; it is her great opportunity—her sacred obligation." When Dr. Lynch wrote later, recalling this interview with this great man, he said, "Alas, he did not know how strong the feeling was among our Senators that America has no obligations beyond herself!" God is challenging America to show herself genuinely Christian, to think and plan in big and unselfish terms. Will she accept the challenge? It seems that she is hardly big enough; she is hardly Christian enough. And the church is the only power or agency that can make America genuinely Christian and prepare her for a worthy leadership of the nations.

The church is beginning to feel the weight of her responsibility for the disturbed internal conditions of America. That there is need of some mighty steadying influence and some great saving power in our land at this hour, every serious minded person recognizes. Many causes contribute to make conditions as they are, but back of them all is the one force—sin. And the church is arrayed against every sin, whether it be styled social, political, industrial or individual. She must seek to drive sin out of the individual heart and at the same time out of the community in which a man lives. She must encourage men to think clean thoughts and at the same time destroy the evil influences that counteract her own. She must teach men to love one another and at the same time seek to do away with conditions that provoke strife. She must "preach the gospel to all men" and at the same time "teach them to observe it. She must establish herself in every community and seek to mould it for God. Wherever men are there must the church be found also. She must not permit men to go into new communities, build homes and establish industries without the saving influence of the gospel. She must entwine herself in all the relations of men and make herself essential to the life of every community. Every unchurched community or unevangelized soul or unconquered evil in our land is a challenge to the church to give of money, prayer and effort as she has never done before to bring in the kingdom of God.

The church is coming to see her duty to the foreigner in America in a new and Christian light. For a long time she gave little or no attention to him; she scarcely recognized his presence. The world war made us all conscious of the fact that we were not assimilating him as rapidly as we had thought. We found that he was living a foreigner, with a foreigner's modes of living, ideals and allegiance. And when our nation was passing through a crisis we realized as we had not before that the presence of such an individual was a menace to our national welfare. The nation was about to cope with the situation in the emergency, but the foreigner is still with us and is still as much a menace as ever. The church cannot advocate his expulsion or the exclusion of his brothers who will come in still greater numbers, while she is sending missionaries to his home land across the sea. The church must Christianize the foreigner; she must make of him a Christian American citizen. It is true that the Chinaman is less fascinating when he delivers our laundry to our doors than when he is far away and lost in the masses of his fellow-countrymen. The Italian is less attractive as he builds our railroads and lives in box cars than he is when we read about him in far away Italy. How we love to sing of sending missionaries to "Africa's sunny climes," but we have given very little serious attention to the Negro problem in America. Foreign missions is a great business, but many with little consecration co-operate in it because "distance lends enchantment to the view." But when a little sample of the foreign conditions comes to our shores, they pull their righteous robes about them and scowl at the intrusion. Thank God, these kind of Christians are becoming fewer and the broad visioned and deeply sympathized kind are increasing. Yet the church has yet to be aroused to the greatness of this phase of her task in the homeland.

Other phases of the church's mission to our own land might be considered, but let it suffice to say for them all, that they are urgent;

this is the day of opportunity. God has disturbed the hearts of men and prepared them for the reception of the gospel or something else that gives promise of relief. He wants us, with a daring never before exemplified, to capture the world for himself. We cannot think, pray, plan or give on a pre-war basis. The world has grown used to the doing of big things; it is prepared for the doing of a great thing by the experiencing of a great need; it looks to the church as the mightiest and divinest institution in the world and expects of it the doing of the biggest thing yet undertaken. This is the day of all days when the church needs the sympathetic, aggressive and prayerful co-operation of every member.

Remember, we are stewards of the manifold grace of God. As we receive the bread of life broken and blessed by the Master may we not forget to distribute to the hungry multitudes, and as we receive the water of life may we not drink in selfish satisfaction but carry a refreshing draught to those who are thirsting after righteousness. Thus we shall experience a fellowship in their sufferings and enable them to rejoice in the fellowship of our joys.

Chaplain Tiplady, in speaking to an audience, told of one of those supreme moments of his life at the close of one of the great battles in Flanders when the streams of wounded were unusually heavy and many of the men who had been wounded were parched with thirst. All the drinking vessel he could find was a great big cup. He filled it with water and then passed along those tragic lines and pressed the cup to the lips of one after another of these soldiers. As each man pressed his lips to the edge of the cup he left a bit of crimson where his lips touched the cup and it mingled with the water. He passed it to the next and the next right down the line, and all those Canadian and British soldiers drank of the blood of their fellow soldiers. Chaplain Tiplady said in a very quiet tone. It was the greatest comradeship of service I ever saw." It may be that this home mission task may prove to be a comradeship of service like that. Are we ready for it?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

SEND ALL HOME MISSION MONEY TO WILLIAM A. GEARHART, 906 CONOVER BUILDING, DAYTON, OHIO.

We will give you a glimpse of our new Publishing House next week. It is a good time to order some extras to give out to your friends. Send for some of the extras we are printing, and use them to get some new subscriptions.

You will not fail to notice the call coming from Brother Drushal for a cook for the dormitory. Sister Woodmansee is giving most faithful service but she cannot do everything about the dormitory and look after the welfare of the students. She has become sick from overwork. Help is needed, who will answer the call?

On account of the numerous conference minutes, church news and "specials" at this particular season, our church news department has proven to be very much under capacity. Numerous reports are in hand awaiting a chance for publication. But if our contributors will be patient we will be able to release all articles soon. We expect to give extra space to conference reports and church news in the issue of December 3. So keep on sending your reports and we will keep the brotherhood informed as to your work.

We regret that we are not able to present to our readers the pictures of all our home mission churches and their pastors, but we have given you all we received. They will appeal to you more strongly than words could for "The Largest Home Missionary Offering Ever." The pastors are men of ability and experience and the churches are such that we need not be ashamed to show them and own them. Notice this, that we are beginning to see the wisdom in building mission churches in a large and substantial way at the very outset. As a rule when you build a little "two by four" church house in a large promising mission field, you set a limit to the progress of that church at the start. Our new churches must be built in such a way as to command respect and inspire confidence; if we do, they will not long remain mission churches. Let us thank God for these fields that have been and are being so thoroughly occupied, and let us make an offering of such a size that will enable the Home Mission Board to take for Christ and the church other fields that are calling to us.

We are in receipt of another neat little parish paper and calendar from North Manchester, Indiana, edited by the pastor, Brother Bame. The issue we received is devoted almost entirely to the boosting of the evangelistic campaign soon to be held at that place with Brother McInturf of Goshen as the preacher.

This announcement comes from the home of Brother C. C. Grisso: "The very latest addition to the permanent fixtures of the parsonage is an eleven pound boy born October 27, who shall be known as Charles Hillis Grisso." Congratulations, Brother and Sister Grisso, and may you be able to make a preacher of him.

In a letter from Brother McInturf of Goshen, Indiana, he states, The "Irish" and the "Welsh" made a good team and the result of "The meeting is over and fifty added to the church. Sixteen came the last evening. Thomas was at his best and did good work for us." their work will bring joy to the hearts of God's believing children.

Brother James S. Cook who is pastor of the Salem church at Clayton, Ohio, and whose address is Brockville, Ohio, writes, "We are in a revival and I am doing the preaching. We are in our second week with good crowds and interest and three confessions. We are hoping for big things and the church is being greatly revived. They have a big faith and that goes a long way in the doing of big things for the Lord." Yes, Brother Cook, you are right, faith is in fact the key to the unlocking of God's treasure house, and we believe you and your good people will be able to bring God's blessings

The editor has recently been in receipt of church calendars or parish papers from Dayton, Ohio; Goshen, Indiana; Pittsburgh, and Johnstown, Pennsylvania. Each one has its own peculiar attractiveness and value. On the front page of the Johnstown calendar is this unique invitation:

To all who mourn and need comfort;
To all who are weary and need rest;
To all who are friendless and want friendship;
To all who are homeless and want sheltering love;
To all who pray and to all who do not, but ought;
To all who sin and need a Savior;
To all the faithful who "war a good warfare!"

And to whosoever will—the Somerset Street Brethren church opens wide its door and in the name of Jesus our Lord, says "WELCOME."

The Brethren church for the first time must know what it means to receive news of the death of one of its foreign missionaries. We received a letter which we cannot publish until next week, from little Marguerite telling us of the death of Sister Mary Rollier in Africa. Practically all in the company have had the malarial fever, and Sister Rollier has become its victim. It will be a shock to all, but let it be also a call to earnest prayer in behalf of Brother Rollier and his two daughters, and as well for the entire missionary party. They need our support in prayer now in a special way. It would be a fine thing if at the public services immediately after receiving the news, every church would make public prayer in behalf of our sorrowing friends in the midst of Africa. The one beautiful thing about it all is the sublime faith they exercise in the promises of God's word.

It is seldom that the passing of a layman makes a profounder impression on the church than that of Brother John Lichty of Falls City, Nebraska. The words of appreciation written by his former pastors are witness of his great usefulness in the church and community of which he was a part. He has contributed much to the church not only by means of his own personal service, but also through his splendid family, two of whom, Brother A. H. Lichty and Sister Marie Lichty are respected by the entire brotherhood for what they have done and are doing in the great work of Kingdom building. Brother John Lichty was a trustee of Ashland College and a member of the Home Missionary Board. Brother Lichty was called home before he was permitted to unite with his fellow Board members in calling for the Banner offering. But the memory of his active interest will be a stronger call than any words he might have written had he been spared. We bespeak in behalf of the Evangelist family sincere sympathy with the sorrowing wife and children.

GENERAL ARTICLES

An Old Testament View Of Thanks-Giving---A Meditation. By A. G. Gnagey

The religion of the Bible is not only a religion of joy: it is also one of thanksgiving and causes of thanksgiving from its first to its last page. The Bible is the one and only book in which every good gift is traced directly back to God, a kind and beneficent heavenly Father, every single joy of life is represented as originating in him. The prevalent note running all the way through the Bible is one of brightness and cheerfulness. Creation itself is marked by a song of gladness and joy, for we read that the morning stars sang together when the earth came into being.

Of course it is only natural that portions of the Bible should be written in the minor key, else it would not be true to actual life. Life, all life, has its sense of weakness, times of disappointed hopes, its hours of dismay and discouragement, and sometimes of despair. Every life has its Gethsemane, when the heart is stricken with grief and overwhelmed with sorrow; when our best friends deny or forsake, or even betray us. Like the Jews of old we hang our harps upon the willows in silence, for it is well-nigh grievous to sing the songs of the Lord in the strange land of our hardships and deprivations. Nevertheless, the prevalent tone of the Bible is one of joy and gladness with an implied exhortation to thanksgiving for the wonderful goodness of God.

It has been well said that while we call the Bible "The Word of God," and correctly so, we must not overlook the fact that it is also "The Word of Man," for the "Bible is a treasure house of man's utterances as he tries to tell his fellows how glorious God is, and to sing the praises of God in fitting language."

If we were to take out of the Psalms and many other portions of the Bible the note of praise and thanksgiving in which selected men have voiced their own soul and in so doing have voiced the universal longings of all souls who love and trust God,—I say if this note or element were to be eliminated from the Bible the blessed book would be mutilated beyond recognition and our greatest help to exalted living would be gone, leaving naught but a dreary wilderness to the soul, without a single oasis in all its broad expanse.

Let us take a glance at the 103rd psalm in which the writer calls upon all that is within him to bless God for all his benefits, and then proceeds to enumerate five or six of these benefits,—all-inclusive and inspiring.

The first of these is God's forgiveness: "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities. Sometimes we really wonder how it is possible for God to forgive those who have deliberately turned away from the light, spurned all his appeals and irreverently trampled beneath their feet the most exalted privileges to make the most of life. The religion of the Bible is the only religion that represents God as freely forgiving those who have sinned against him. No one is so eager to welcome the returning penitent as is God. "There is but one time in the Bible when God is described as running, and that is when God sees a wrong-doer penitently turning toward him." O yes, it IS wonderful that God should thus forgive, but it is his very nature to do so. Have we truly appreciated this divine forgiveness which remembers our sins and all our wrong-doings no more forever? Do we give expression to our appreciation in songs of praise and thanksgiving?

The psalmist names as a second cause for praise and thanksgiving God's health: "Who healeth all thy diseases." Yes, God does heal,—he heals the evil of our hearts and shows us how we may have clean souls and a body free from disease. I do not believe that God directly wastes the body with disease: it is because, knowingly or unknowingly, we have violated his laws that we suffer physical pain and gradually lose our strength. Disobedience to his laws results in disease of both body and soul. One can not enjoy the blessings of health who gives way to his passions and gratifies every lust of the flesh. How beautiful is God's "saving health!" health of body and spirit. Are we truly grateful to God for those laws, obedience to which means health both of body, mind, and spirit?

The psalmist finds a third benefit for which he calls upon his soul to bless the Lord,—it is God's liberty: "Who redeemeth thy life from destruction." Yes, he has redeemed your life and mine from destruction,—the destruction of sin. Nothing else so wastes our powers and energies, our physical and spiritual well-being as sin, and only God can redeem us from this fearful and destructive malady. Where in all literature do we find another such a song as that which Moses and the children of Israel sang on this side the Red Sea when they turned their faces to behold the dead bodies of their pursuing enemy floating upon the waters, when God forever placed an impassable barrier between the spirit of bondage and their new freedom? Miriam's maidens danced in gratitude while the hosts of Israel sang the song of Moses to the "God of their fathers." Wonderful is this deliverance from destruction and this new freedom which God has bestowed upon us. Do we appreciate it?

There is a fourth benefit for which the psalmist finds cause for gratitude—God's gifts: "Who crowneth thee with loving kindness and tender mercies?" Is there any joy comparable to the joy of being crowned with the abundance of heaven and earth? Is there anything in all this wide world, any crowns of kings or queens to be preferred above God's kindness and tender mercies "lovingly" bestowed—his mercies coming as regularly as the morning and the evening and as "tenderly" as the dew rests upon the flowers! "How passingly beautiful it is to think of God's goodness to us and then to think that he bestows them upon us as we would bestow a crown upon one whom we wish to honor." Surely a bit of retrospection on this Thanksgiving Day will summon us to sing the songs of praise and thanksgiving to him who crowns us with his loving kindness and tender mercy.

And there is yet another, a summary of all the others and much more,—God's satisfaction: "Who satisfieth thy desire with good things so that thy youth is renewed like the eagles." Here the psalmist reaches the climax, the very summit of all possible joy on earth. SATISFACTION. Only God can satisfy the soul which he has created. "Things" never satisfy; the heart of man is too big to be satisfied with anything this world can supply. Neither wealth nor worldly pleasures can satisfy an immortal soul. "Life in God is so glad to me," once wrote a physician, "that the end of life always seems to me to be only the beginning of life." What can not be found anywhere else on earth is found when a man lets God fill his soul with the peace and joy of his friendship, his fellowship, his companionship,—this is life's supremest privilege and supremest reward. This and this only can satisfy the soul that was made in the image of God. It is the blessing of all blessings for which we should praise "the God of our fathers" that he has put that within us that satisfies all the longings of the human heart and meets all the hopes of the imagination. And he who practices daily thanksgiving, who calls upon his soul to bless the Lord for all the benefits that satisfy the immortal longings of the heart is preparing himself for the song of heaven where the forgiven, the sanctified, the redeemed, the crowned and satisfied hosts ascribe all thanksgiving to the God of their salvation.

Our Home Mission Needs and Why They Must Be Met

By G. C. Carpenter, President Home Missionary Board

Fair Democracy in "A Pageant of Democracy" says:
 "America, great country, I shall write
 Thy name upon the page of Freedom's book,
 For thou didst hear above the din of war
 The clarion call of service to the world."

Our home mission needs are the needs of America and of the world. This is the final analysis. The Christian's parish is no longer a village or state or nation but the whole round world, and what is needed for home missions in the Brethren church is needed for the establishing of the worldwide Kingdom of God. In other words our Thanksgiving offering for home mission will be given to meet certain needs in the home land to the end that the home church may have an ever increasing part in world evangelization.

Prayer

Every one who prays fervently for missions will be on the firing line to help meet all the other needs that may be named. Prayer is the first need. Prayer brings vision. Prayer sends workers. Prayer opens purses. Prayer makes men like God. Prayer compels men to do God's will. The conclusion is self-evident, namely, every pastor and every church member needs to pray fervently and much for home missions and that will mean a Thanksgiving offering in keeping with the prosperity of the Brethren people and far above the paltry forty cents per member asked as an apportionment. Prayer spells victory. Let the Brethren church pray for home missions.

Men

The need of consecrated men for home mission work is not a new need. If some pastors would pray faithfully for home missions they might find themselves called of God to the home mission work. Pastors should present to their people the need of men for pioneer work in home missions and some of the boys and young men would get the vision and the call and some would answer, "Here am I, send me." Home missions is a part of the business of the Kingdom and should be presented faithfully by the pastors who are the leaders in the churches and upon whom rests a tremendous responsibility in the face of the Master's great commission.

From a sermon on "The Men Who Made America" we quote the following: "To name the men who made America we would have to go back to the parish roll of the old church at the Cradle of Liberty. On that were such names as those of John Robinson and William Brewster and William Bradford and Roger Williams and others." And to name the men who are making America today we would have to go to the parish rolls of the many churches in our liberty-loving land. Strengthen the church in the homeland by helping weak churches and building new churches for that means saving America and we are told that saving America means saving the world. However that may be it is true that men are needed today for home mission work, men with the greatest consecration and the best education. Let the Brethren church pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth workers into the home mission field and enthusiastic supporters in pulpit and pew. The fields are many and the calls are pressing but the workers are few. The mission board can find hundreds of splendid openings for home mission work by the Brethren church but where are the hundreds of men to go to the front? Let pastors and parents and Sunday school teachers pray for the workers and search them out.

Money

Money is time transformed by labor of brain and brawn. Those who cannot go in person as mission workers can still have a part in the mission work by the giving of a portion of their time in the form of money. It is said on every hand that there is now more money in the pockets of the people of America than ever before. Most of this money is in the pockets of the church people. Again prayer and consecration are the first and vital need. The rule is that the man who prays is the man who pays. Every member of the church must go or send if he will obey the Master's great commission. The plain command is there; it is ours to obey."

Here are some sad facts: "The women of America pay more for artificial flowers for their hats and bonnets, a great deal more, than the whole church of God pays for missions. The men of America spend more in a year for tobacco than the whole church has spent in eighteen centuries to spread the Gospel."

A wounded soldier in the hospital wrote to his mother: "Mother, next time you send a box please send something that can be passed around, because there are other men here like myself." The Gospel must be passed around else it spoils and is gone. The strong must help the weak. Those who know him must make him known to those who do not know him, even to the uttermost parts. And it is quite significant that those who truly know him will make him known to others. They will go or send. They will give liberally of self and substance to build up the home base.

One man stood and watched other men digging the earth out of a trench where several workmen were nearly buried by the cave-in, until someone touched him on the shoulder and said, "Bill, your brother is down there." Oh! you should have seen the change. With coat off he worked as if he had the strength of ten men. "Am I my brother's keeper?" Our Lord says we are. Then give.

Thanksgiving

Count your blessings. Thank God for your church. Thank God for the gospel fight. Thank God for health and food and raiment and money. Thank God for the opportunity to do good. Thank God for countless blessings all of which are included in "a hundred fold of blessings here and eternal life in the world to come." Thank God and go "Over the top" with the largest Thanksgiving offering for home missions ever given by the Brethren church. Thank God and prove your thankfulness and thus help to win the home mission goal on our Four Year Program and also other goals on that program that are dependent on the success of home missions. Thank God and prove your thankfulness and this will be our Victory Year.

America for Christ, the Challenge of the Church

By J. L. Gillin, Ph.D., Member Home Missionary Board

Just now, since the close of the War, America is the strategic center of humanity in many ways. It is the financial center of the world. Last night I heard a distinguished man who has spent some years in China in a responsible position say that unless American bankers come to the rescue of the Chinese government and Chinese business Japan will gobble China. All the countries of Europe are looking to American financial agencies to restore the devastated regions of Europe. Unless American financiers furnish credit to European manufacturers, European industry will have great difficulty in getting back on its feet. Many American business houses have had representatives in Germany seeking orders for goods. They return saying that the Germans want to buy raw materials and also manufactured goods, but they have nothing with which to pay for these goods. They must have credit for a year. The same is true in much the same degree with other European nations. Europe has been driven by the war to the verge of bankrupture. America came out of the war with her great resources practically unscathed. England is floating great bond issues here in America because she cannot hope to sell the bonds at home. The Belgian king has just been here. Newspaper gossip says that one of his objects here was to interest American investors in Belgian industries. America has most of the world's gold supply. That is why the exchange is now so decidedly in favor of the American dollar in comparison with the English pound sterling, the French franc and the German mark. From every land the eyes of those who need money for government or industry are now turned to America as they were once turned to London.

America is the educational center of the world. Just last week I was talking with a prominent doctor of medicine in Milwaukee. I asked him what was going to be the effect of the war on Vienna as a center of medical education. He replied that even before the war the United States had so advanced in medicine and surgery that Vienna and every other center of Europe had nothing to teach us. He said that the Mayos at Rochester, Minnesota, had better teaching facilities than any European clinic. No one of course knows now what Germany may be able to do in the way of reviving her universities, but it appears that with her enormous war debt that she will have no money to spend on her schools. Moreover, she is educationally bankrupt, because of the attitude of her professors toward the war, to say nothing of moral bankruptcy. To our universities already are coming the students from the Orient. Here at Wisconsin in this year we have twenty-nine Chinese students, besides a number of Japanese, Hindus, and Philipinos. The numbers are even greater in some of the privately endowed universities. Once we had to go to England, Germany, or Scotland for advanced theological training. Now, however, in our American theological schools we have scholars who are recognized the world around. Our schools of business have no peers in all the world. Our schools of social work while young and still struggling are a step in advance of anything of like nature anywhere on earth. Our engineering schools are as good as can be found anywhere.

America is generally recognized as a nation of idealists. She went to war with no sordid aim. She spent her blood and treasure without hope of material reward. She saw her ideals in peril. Every one who returns from China tells the same story. The Chinese from the days of our return of the Boxer indemnity for the establishment of Chinese schools has felt that America has finer and loftier ideals than the other nations with which she has come in contact. Dr. Paul S. Reich, the recently returned United States minister to China, has said that China recognizes that our missionary enterprises in China have no ulterior motive. The missionaries and the Y. M. C. A. and the representatives of the various universities do not aim to exploit China but to inspire her to work out her destiny along high and noble lines. She sends the choicest of her young men and women there not as advance agents of political or business gain but as heralds of what she has found noblest in her own life. She spends her millions to help China. Moreover, in the political realm it is generally recognized that the sentiments expressed by the noble words of our President were not mere fine phrases, but the expression of what is deepest and finest in our life. The work of the National Red Cross has perhaps been an expression in every land where suffering has abounded of that spirit of America.

There are many other aspects of our life that are attracting the attention of the world, but perhaps these will suffice to indicate how central America now is the thought of the world.

Now, in view of that central position in the affairs of humanity, what is our privilege and our responsibility? This civilization with all its faults must live up to the expectations that are entertained of her. She must show that she is indeed a Christian nation. She has put out of her life "booze." She is struggling to incarnate Christianity in her relations of employer and employee. She is feeling her way towards industrial justice. She is reforming her prisons and taking measures which will give to the poor the chance denied them through long ages of struggle. She is ironing out gradually—all too slow it appears sometimes—the inequalities in her judicial and industrial opportunities. She needs now more than ever before to apply the principles of Christianity to the solution of the problems that lie before her in every phase of her development. Only the principles of that Teacher whom she professes to revere can bring peace into her troubled life. She needs to have interpreted to her people the broad fundamental teachings of social and individual righteousness which Jesus proclaimed and which alone can lead her to that dream of perfect righteousness which we call the Kingdom of God.

To do that America needs today as never before to have Christ preached to the warring elements of our society as Isaiah preached the same fundamental principles to the clashing interests of Judah in his day and as Jesus preached them to the selfish and exclusive classes of his day. A democracy inspired by Christ's passion for social justice and those motives of unselfish service of others must be brought home to the consciousness of the classes of our day—to political, business man, working man and professional man with the power that grows out of the firm conviction that those principles alone can save the individuals of which the nation is composed and thus the nation. The social significance of his sacrifice on the cross, of his at-onement with the Father and of his efforts to bring man to reconciliation with God and his purposes must be not only preached in words but illustrated in life by his people. That is the opportunity of the Christian church in America today. It is the special privilege of the Brethren church standing as it does for a whole gospel—not of the salvation of the individual only, if that is possible without the other,—but of our social institutions and social ideals also,—to bring that testimony to the conscience of America. To do less would be to fail to realize our profession of a whole Gospel church.

To do that takes money. "How shall they hear without a preacher, and how shall they preach unless they be sent?" In every one of our large cities as rapidly as we can train and finance the men and women we should be establishing churches to proclaim such a gospel and to delineate such a life. Therefore, with such opportunities and responsibilities before us, and with such a challenge calling to us this coming offering for general missions should be the largest which has ever been made by our people.

Our Home Mission Goal and How to Reach It

By William A. Gearhart, General Missionary Secretary

time, when the gospel of Jesus Christ was needed more than

The Home Mission budget for 1919-20, is nine thousand dollars, and the goal set for each church is forty cents per member. Does that look like an unattainable goal? or does it not rather look like an insignificantly small amount for us to give for the spreading of the good news of salvation through Jesus Christ, to those who know it not.

We should have a much larger offering this year than ever before, because the need is urgent. Was there ever a it is now, when the world word is in a turmoil and conditions between capital and labor are growing more serious? Many of our greatest thinkers, who do not even make a whole-hearted profession of Christianity, tell us that the application of the principles taught by Jesus Christ is the best panacea, for the disorders in this day in which we are living.

Surely every Christian professor will admit that the gospel of Jesus Christ is the world's greatest need. If this be true, it behooves every true soldier of the Captain of our salvation, to put on the whole armor of God and fight with all the earnestness and zeal that can be mustered up to put the enemy of our souls to flight and bring about more normal conditions upon the earth.

How can we reach the Goal? How do we reach goals in our commercial and industrial world? You will find that it is only through the strictest co-operation and team play by every one doing his best and keeping at it until the prize is won.

The same principles will bring results in the Lord's work, so let every one who has been blessed with the gift of salvation and eternal life, stand by his pastor and work with him in the effort to reach the goal.

Instead of giving forty little brown coppers for one whole year, each wage earner should be willing to give at least one day's wages out of the year for Home Missions. Forty cents will scarcely purchase one meal for our body. Who would not be willing to miss at least one meal a month to save five dollars a year to feed starving souls, the bread of eternal life, knowing at the same time that our bodies would be no worse off for having missed the meal.

Since there are some who feel they cannot give even forty cents for Home Missions, it becomes necessary for many to give five or ten dollars and even more to reach the goal in each church, and that in order that the average for all our church shall not be less than forty cents per member, many of the strongest churches will need to soar higher than the goal to make up for weaker churches, that may not reach the goal.

Instead of expecting presents on your birthday, would it not be much better to do as our dear Sister, Mrs. Maria J. Frantz of Enid, Oklahoma, who sent me five dollars on her eighty-first birthday, stating it was for Kentucky Missions? The happiest people on the face of God's beautiful earth, are those who have eternal life and expect to dwell in a glorified body throughout the ceaseless ages of eternity after this earthly tabernacle shall have been dissolved. Do we not therefore want to express our appreciation of this wonderful blessing bestowed upon us by our God, be giving at this Thanksgiving time a liberal offering to help others, that they may be recipients of this same blessing?

We would not have our brothers and sisters feel that small contributions are not acceptable, we want every member to do what he or she can and that is all that will be expected of any one, for a small gift, if it means a sacrifice, will be blessed more perhaps than a large one if it be given from an abundance of wealth.

If any pastor thinks his church is too weak to give even forty cents per member, why not try the injection of a little Home Mission spirit, and see if the Lord will not keep his promise, in Malachi 3:10, 11.

Our dear Brother J. L. Kimmel, Pastor of the Muncie, Indiana, Brethren church, did not wait for Thanksgiving time to go over the top with his soldiers, for they have already sent in their apportionment, and we are sure they have received the blessing, and it may be they will want to do more at Thanksgiving time, if so, we are confident the Good Lord will have another blessing for them.

Will the pastors please do their best to help their congregation make it a Banner Offering for this "Victory Year," and lay members, please let us remember that unless we do our best in co-operating with our pastors, the goal will not be reached.

Can anyone give his Lord a real good reason why he should not do more for this cause than ever before? The need is greater; the budget is larger; and the blessing will be more bountiful.

Who knows but that this may be the last opportunity, and no doubt will be for some of us, to help in proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ to those who know him not, and if we were absolutely sure it would be the last for every one, can you imagine how great our offering it would be? Be sure to ask your Master how much you should give and do as his spirit suggests, and we will have a Banner Offering, for our Victory Year, and the blessing will be poured out upon us, for it is more blessed to give than to receive. Do we believe that? If we do, let us demonstrate it by our action.

If you still lack inspiration, to give liberally to this worthy cause, after you have read the appeals for help, please turn to the front cover of this number and meditate upon the scene portrayed and pray for the blessing you need and surely, he will not withhold.

The Urgency of the Call of the Homeland

By George T. Ronk, Central District Field Secretary

This Thanksgiving Call goes forth when the world is weary of calls, appeals and urgent necessities. As never before the American people have heard a world-call, and as never before they have responded. But miracle of all, as never before have they been able to respond and yet have no lack. Verily, like the unfailing cruse of oil, God has poured out of his wealth on this people.

Yet, in spite of what has been done in war-work, the old sin-sick world still reels and challenges us to do our part. We, as members of the Brethren church, can no more dodge our responsibilities at this season than we could in the days of war just behind; and the writer of this article has an opinion that we have no desire to dodge them. What we want is authoritative statement and accurate knowledge. What we want to know is that we are not being humbugged and what we want to see clearly is a vision of things as they are and then realize our responsibility thereto.

And so this article is offered among many others with a prayer that it may be clear; that it may interpret to the Brethren people this most intimate and personal hour of the whole church calendar our corporate, personal need, as over against the great clamoring world which seems to consume our puny efforts in its behalf in its great, black maw without a vince. The call is urgent. We American people do not consider that a call which is not urgent. We believe this call is urgent, impelling, overpowering, dominating to every true child of the Brethren church, for the greatest offering of all.

The Call of Internal Necessity

By this we mean that demand of existence which drives every creature to self-defense, every family to accumulation, every business to expansion, every society to increase, every nation to constructive statesmanship. We Brethren must stand behind this Thanksgiving offering because it provides the sinews for the only plan of extension which we as a society have. It is the extension offering of the church which reaches out and labors that there may be more Brethren churches, that our cause—the cause to which we have given our time and money, dedicated our lives, and unto which we have raised our children—may not perish from the earth. It is a first and impelling duty.

This offering means we are doing what every individual does when he takes out insurance, sows a crop or founds a family; it is what every family does when it buys a lot or a farm, erects a house and fences its garden spot; it is what every business does when it increases its capital or builds a new wing on the factory; it is what every society does when it sends organizers into the field to found new institutions; it is what every state does when it drains its swamps, irrigates its desert, levees its rivers, builds its harbors, lays out its roads, builds new school houses, and admits a virgin territory to statehood.

This offering means that if we ever had any task set us under the hand of God for our times and our fellows we have that task now. It means we must enlarge our borders

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

A Man's Life Versus Things. By A. L. DeLozier

(Sermon preached at Conference, Johnstown, Pennsylvania)

TEXT: "Beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."—LUKE 12:15.

The preaching of the Word is so serious a matter that one should always give careful thought and prayer to the selecting of a text and the preparation of a sermon. But somehow I always feel the need of still more careful thought and prayer when called upon to speak before a gathering such as this. What message do we most need in this day of "ink splashing" and the echoing of "megaphonic" voices? I confess that it puts one to thinking and praying. But I certainly need make no apology for this text.

Let me say in the very beginning that this verse of scripture is not directed against riches, nor is it in favor of poverty. The supreme note is that life is essentially more than possessions or poverty. Jesus would have us put a higher interpretation upon life. Our Master was here talking to an immense multitude on the most solemn themes—Man's Relation to God; Responsibility for Life; The Reward of Those Who Are Loyal to God and the Doom of Those Who Are Not.

Yet there was a man in the crowd who could not grasp that grand teaching because his heart was full of covetousness. So he very irreverently interrupted Jesus' splendid discourse: "Teacher speak to my brother that he divide the inheritance with me." The Teacher's discourse was not broken off by this interruption, but rather given a happy turn for our benefit. Our text was born out of that incident. "Beware of covetousness: for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth."

A man's life consisteth not in what he HAS, but in what he IS. We may render this: "Even in the height of his prosperity, a man's true life does not depend upon what he has." He does not have life through his goods. His life does not come out of his substance. The German version almost suggests a paradox by rendering: "No one lives therefrom," i. e.,—no man lives from his goods. And yet we are saying and teaching for the most part that folks do live from their goods, especially in these days of the II. C. L. One day Lincoln was walking along the street in Springfield, with his two boys who were yelling lustily. A neighbor came out and asked: "Why what is the matter with the boys, Mr. Lincoln?" "Just what is the matter with the whole world. I have three walnuts and each boy wants two." This text comes home to each heart. If we heed it we may be spared many a heartache and for some time.

I. WE MUST LIVE THE GUARDED LIFE. "Beware." In the Greek the word used here means to guard. Hence we may render: "Guard! Watch yourself! Take care! We need to watch our own far more than the lives of our fellow-beings. Our own life will be practically all that we can guard well, if we seek to do that. The Word of God teaches not only here, but elsewhere that we must live the guarded life. Even the old Greek philosophers used to say: "Know thyself!" Many of us do not know ourselves very well or we wouldn't be so much in love with ourselves as we are.

But our text names a particular thing against which we must guard—covetousness. The text has reference to the tenth commandment. The Greek word means a disposition to take more than one's share—grasping, greediness. Every one is entitled to his share, but some want more than their share, especially in these days. The Latin version renders it by a word which gives us our English word "avarice." That word in turn came from a verb meaning "To pant after." Many people's souls pant after gold rather than after the Lord as was the case of the Psalmist. The German renders it "Geiz." Our Pennsylvania friend calls a man GEIZICH when they mean that he is stingy. Yes, our text contains the idea of stinginess too.

If I cared to try to say all that is to be said on the subject, I could dwell upon the thought of covetousness as idolatry, but I dare not even upon up this line of thought.

For some of this covetousness means more than they can handle. I went through a factory of a certain brother one day. He happened to tell me that he had more orders that he could take care of. Upon asking him why he didn't enlarge his factory so as to be able to take care of all the business he might get, he answered: "The reason is that my factory is already large enough to suit me. If I were to make it larger, my responsibility would be increased and more of my time taken with it. So it is large enough because I want some time left to worship and serve God." Thank God for some men who are too big to be covetous. This brother believes in serving God with his wealth.

II. WE MUST AVOID THE MATERIAL LIFE. A German professor has invented a process of silver plating dead bodies so as to convert them into metallic images of the individuals as they were when alive. Gold plate can be used if the relatives afford it. But as the cost of silver plating a body is $12,000 there are probably few relatives who would deem themselves justified in squandering on the deceased so much money. But common observation forces us to conclude that materialism has triple gold plated the souls of some fellows long before they ever got into the grave. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." "A man's life consisteth not in... THINGS!" Jesus illustrates the folly of the material life by giving us the parable of the rich fool who was victimized by things. And things took their terrible vengeance upon him, as they always do. "MY barns; MY grain; MY goods." He was submerged in the muck and mire of materialism. Believe me, men must master possessions or possessions will master men.

When offered his choice of a reward by Baechns, Midas did not choose wisely as did Solomon when God offered him a choice out of three. He asked for the golden touch. What rejoicing when plucking a twig from a tree it turned to gold in his hand! But alas! What disappointment and dismay when he sat up to a repast and could not eat, for bread hardened in his hands and food defied his teeth. He made haste to pray for deliverance from the vengeance things were taking upon him. Thereafter he saw his mistake and despised gold. He went out into the fields and communed with nature. We must avoid the material life. "Man does not live by bread alone," said Jesus, when he was tempted to become victimized by THINGS. When he saw others in the same plight, he said, "Guard against the lust after THINGS (covetousness): A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." When I was in the flood sections of Columbus and Dayton a few years ago and saw possessions, the accumulation of a life time, swept entirely away, it brought home to my heart the insecurity and transiency of THINGS. "A man's life consisteth not in... THINGS."

III. WE MUST CULTIVATE THE DIVINELY OR SPIRITUALLY SUSTAINED LIFE. An aviator's advance agent, seeking to place a performance in a certain city, said to the mayor, "For $1,000 my aviator will fly from yonder church steeple to the market place." The mayor proved to be more sensible and thoughtful than many mayors, when he replied, "My dear sir, your proposition doesn't interest

Gifts of Gratitude. By Quinter Lyon

OUR SCRIPTURE

Bless the Lord, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits; who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases; who redeemeth thy life from destruction; who crowneth thee with lovingkindness and tender mercies; who satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that thy youth is renewed like the eagle's (Psalm 103:1-4). He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things (Rom. 8:32)? I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God (Rom. 12:1-2). This I say then, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh (Gal. 5:16). For thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt-offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise (Psa. 51:16-17). Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world (James 1:27).

OUR MEDITATIONS

We are approaching that day of the year which the nation has set apart as a day for remembering before God all the benefits which we enjoy. Every day of the year should be, for the Christian, a day of rejoicing and giving of thanks to the merciful God for his goodness which is eternal. But at this time when all minds by force of custom are turned in the channel of giving thanks, it is well for the Christian to give his meditations over to an intelligent and heartfelt consideration of God's specific goodness and man's own personal relation thereto.

The first thing for us to realize is that God's gifts to us are greater than those which we give to God. Those genuinely converted men who have in a moment of sincere conviction caught a glimpse of the utter sinfulness of their own sin-sick souls and cried unto the Holy God for mercy, have surely realized this great difference. Just one brief view of our own soul as God sees it, and one fleeting comparison with the infinite goodness of God, is all that any sincere man needs to inspire him with the spirit of eternal thanksgiving.

A mere realization within our hearts of God's infinite and eternal goodness toward all those who will respond to his callings, should settle the question of what we should give him in return, out of the gratitude of our hearts. It is like the well known story of the Indian who brought to God first his tomahawk, and then being dissatisfied, brought his blanket. The Indian was not yet satisfied, so he brought his pony. Still without satisfaction, he said suddenly one day, "I guess God wants Indian himself," and so he gave himself to God, and was satisfied. When God had the Indian, then he had also all that made a part of the Indian, blankets, mouth, heart, mind,—all. In the words of the song,

"Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were a present far too small;
Love so amazing, so divine,
Demands my soul, my life, my all."

No gift less than our life will satisfy God, nor will it satisfy the human soul.

Some will say that the gift of a life is a very indefinite thing, but an examination of the constitution of an individual life will reveal a very definite thing. The best meta-physicians have agreed that life is composed of thinking, of feeling, and of doing. Whatever activity we are conscious of may be classified under one of these three heads. And And when we give to God our life, we must include in that complete gift our thoughts, our emotions, and our deeds.

Do we give our thoughts to God? In this advanced day we are inclined to have a strong intellect resting in the wisdom of men, in the unrightful hypotheses of science, and in the speculations of philosophy. Science and philosophy have a rightful place, but when they take the place of God and his wisdom they are in an unrightful place. Many people elevate reason above God. They do not realize that reason proceeds from God and is incomplete and finite without him. The truly great intellects of all ages has found the greatest satisfaction from contemplation of God. And the present busy age finds its most valuable worker in that man who has ceased to argue with God.

Thinking is important, and it must needs come first. But unless the conclusion of our thought sinks into our hearts, our affections, and our love, a perfect system of thinking amounts to nothing. We should seek God with a feeling of need, we should give him our affections, and banish by the power of the indwelling Spirit all those nasty and unedifying emotions of the natural man. Jealousy, fear, anger, striving and contention, have no place in the life that is God's by gift.

Not only our thoughts and emotions should be given to God, but in order to make the gift of our life complete, our actions must follow. Every action that we make, every deed that we do, forms an integral part of our life. Every time we speak a word, that word becomes a part of our life. No wonder, then, that one good look at our souls would cause us to seek the redemption of God!

The secret of the victorious life wholly given to God lies in the indwelling Spirit. With his very presence in our lives we will think, feel, and do as God would have us do. Without his presence the things of the Spirit of God will seem to us foolishness, our need of God will be unrealized, and our activities will not be truly in his service. Considering our lives as a dwelling place, our greatest gift of gratitude is a house for him to live in. It is only with him in our life that we can overcome the Evil One. And when our lives are given to him, they are given to others in service for him.

OUR PRAYER

Jesus Christ, live thou in our lives. We believe that when thou dost truly live in us and through us, we are truly conquerors of evil. We believe that if thou dost truly live in us, we will live for others as thou didst live. Help us to give thee a clean house to live in, a free purse to use, and a will resigned to thy pleasure. May we ever be found doing those things which thou wouldst do if thou shouldst bodily take our place in life. Help us to live for others, that we may live like thee. Help us to give the greatest and the only gift of true gratitude, our very souls, our life. Amen.

Calling Real Men to Glorious Service

Glorious is the history of our Christian pulpit; its great names shine like stars in the crown of humanity. It has been a light in darkness, a voice of melting pity in a hard world, a rebuker of injustice, a pleader for purity and honor, a witness for the living Christ who is the hope of the world. O young man, seeking a vocation worthy of your powers, if you would touch the souls of men, if you would refine and exalt their faith, if you would teach sorrowful eyes to see majestic meaning in life—if you have hopes such as these, enter the Christian pulpit. Enter it reverently and with a pure heart; make it a throne of beauty, a citadel of integrity, a watch-tower of hope—and may you tell the truth as it is in Jesus in a voice so haunting, so healing, that it will echo in the hearts of men after you have fallen asleep—Joseph Fort Newton.

and strengthen our stakes for no one else will. It means that we are an institution unaffected by the death of one or several individuals or by the unfaithfulness of a few. We are an institution, formed of the like-minded, banded together by the purpose of God with sacred bonds hallowed by the years and the life sacrifices of saintly men and women. We are the church of Christ, purchased by his own precious blood and so long as we trust and give our all into his hands and are led by his spirit we cannot fail. But with the same irresistible logic we must go forward—we cannot turn back.

The Call of the Times

By this we mean the hopeless, chaotic condition that human society finds itself in at the close of the great war. Masses of the people of America are in a hopeless condition because their philosophy of life is gone. For a generation these people were lulled to sleep by the cries of the exponents of a materialistic evolution, which by loud mouthed prophets among free-thinkers, in university circles, and within the church, taught and insinuated until the belief of many in a personal God, the reality of sin and judgment, or a personal salvation were gone. Nothing was left but vanity and the exaltation of man, the sublime, the perfect and the sovereignty of the human will.

But now this house of cards is gone. The veneer of civilization peeled off in a day and left the ancient barbarian standing in all his savagery with the summit of human culture metamorphosed into the paragon of inhuman savagery. It is no use to cry the world is the same when it is not. It is changed by the loss of its false ideals and its lying philosophy. Society is seeing itself as the true church has seen it all along: as undone and unclean.

So the hour of the church has struck when it must show these hopeless masses the old, old ideal which saved their barbarian fathers from despair by preaching the old, old story to the needy within the gates. This Thanksgiving call is the call of the folks at home. It is the call of men upset by the times that try men's souls which have left many fainting by the way. Our extension program means we are reaching out to try to lead these within our sphere of opportunity back to the faith in a loving God.

The Call of the Unchurched Masses

In our extension program we are reaching out into many cities and county seats to establish new Brethren churches. While the great established churches have many churches in the cities, the masses are being largely neglected. In a city me. We already have too many men flying from the church to the market place, and I don't want to encourage the habit."

Jesus laid emphasis on the bread of life and on the water of life. The things of the world will not suit the nature of a soul, nor will they last so long as a soul will last. Jesus says, "Lay up treasure in heaven rather than on earth." The sad epitaph at the end of the parable of the rich fool is, "So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God." After warning against a victimizing by things in our chapter, Jesus says, "But rather seek ye the Kingdom of God; and all these things shall be added unto you." This is the key to the whole teaching in the connection of our text. As I said, the verse is not directed against wealth, but against the life that is lived in terms of just THINGS. To be sure things have their place, but that place is always secondary.

In conclusion, let me drive home this truth, reinforced by the recorded custom of an ancient people. It was the custom of the Phoenicians, when executing prisoners of rank, who had committed crimes against the state, to fasten the culprit with golden chains to a stake. Then one of the royal elephants, trained for the work of execution was led out. The enormous beast would place a foot upon the malefactor and slowly crush him to death. Listen to me! The love of money, the panting after the material, is the golden chain of fifty thousand souls recently surveyed for one of the boards we found a fine part of a city with dozens of blocks in which no effort was being systematically made to bring men to Christ. The truth is that too often the church has become a family affair ruled by cliques and families, seeking extension only among the socially desirable while great masses of the strangers are left without care, or invitation to higher things. In the above city we were told there was only one church among the many rich and powerful that was making any effort among the unchurched. That we verily believe. One-half the American people are today without church affiliation of any kind. These are the socially fit and moral as well as the outcasts, in every city. In fact it seems today a greater effort is being made to reach the outcast than the moral class that is unchurched in such large numbers. Perhaps this is well but both should be reached.

In every city there is a large class of people that can be trained into Brethrenism without touching in any way the constituency of established churches. The writer has built up a good working church in a town of two thousand without affecting in any way adversely the number of strength of the older denominations. In fact our coming has challenged sluggish bodies to renewed efforts and the gain has been good all around. Our extension program will bring a benediction to the whole Kingdom of God wherever pushed. Lost, unchurched masses in a hundred towns and cities call us to renewed efforts.

The Call of Doctrinal Neglect

This title might be worded better but it expresses the need. The great denominations are systematically and purposely abandoning the sound doctrine of the fathers and with a gospel of the worth of man and good works are leaving multitudes untaught on the great doctrines of sin, the atonement, personal salvation, the personality of the Holy Spirit, the second coming of Christ and judgment for sin. Not to speak of the great doctrine which the Tunker people have stood for steadfastly for the last two hundred years. So long as whole tracts of the American people are being left in this darkness we as a church have a great work to do. God holds us responsible for our witness though we are not many. We are more numerous than the whole church in the days of St. Paul and may have a transforming part on the world if we will but do our part. Therefore the call has gone forth and we believe it is the call of God. "Speak to Israel, that they go forward."

that holds hundreds of persons to the THINGS of the world. Take it from me, if you are one of them—unless you break away, you will be slowly crushed to death, the death which is everlasting separation from God. As THINGS grow, the soul diminishes; as the soul grows, things diminish. Is your soul growing, or are things growing in your life? You may test yourself in terms of either THINGS or of the soul. May God help you so to do!

Home Mission Month. By J. A. Garber

Endeavorers using the Monthly Service Theme leaflet will please note this change: Instead of "Foreign Missions" substitute "Home Missions." In connection herewith emphasize Life Work Recruits and the Tenth Legion, the needed men and money to carry forward the home mission program.

This should be the month in which we conduct study classes and promote individual reading. Definite missionary intelligence represents the supreme need. Numerous books have been presented within recent years, but none is more informing and inspiring than

CHRISTIAN AMERICANIZATION

A Task for the Churches

By Charles Alvin Brooks, Secretary for City and Foreign-speaking Missions of the American Baptist Home Mission Society. On the front cover page is the following:

What is Americanization?

Dr. Brooks gives us this striking answer:

"Americanization is the achievement of national unity for world service upon the plane of our highest ideals. It is an unwavering and united progress toward the goal of those ideals which we confess we have not yet attained, but for which we are still striving."

Six vivid chapters deal with these urgent questions that every American must consider in this day of rebuilding: The Present Issue, America's Genius for Assimilation, The Language Question, Arrested Assimilation, The Path of Progress, The Price of National Unity.

In the foreword which follows you will discover the occasion for the writing of the book.

Foreword

Unification of effort for a common cause is perhaps the most significant trend of the day. In accordance with this modern spirit, two agencies which have formerly issued home mission text-books have united this year in publishing one book. These agencies are the Council of Women for Home Missions and the Missionary Education Movement, which, as is well known, represents the interests of the Home Missions Council.

The theme of this book is one which is giving great concern to our national government and to all those agencies and people who realize the necessity of quickened effort toward national unity. It is an especially important theme at this time, when America occupies so conspicuous a place in world influence and power, while within her own borders press social problems of largest magnitude.

One language, one flag is much—but it is not enough for the highest national unity and expression. There must be such an appreciation of and participation in the spirit of America as shall release the largest spiritual values for the betterment of the social order in the United States, create a compelling national conscience capable of making this country fine and strong in self-control, and give it exalted conceptions and standards of human relationships. Only through the contagion of Christian thinking and living can this be accomplished. The church of Christ must assume a dominant place in this effort and address itself definitely with profound earnestness and purpose to this mighty task. It is with these deep convictions concerning the relation of the church to Americanization that Christian Americanization: A Task for the Churches is sent forth.

After reading the Introduction which we present herewith, you will feel still better acquainted with the book, because the author sets forth clearly his purpose in writing.

Introduction

Down at Land's End is an interesting house which bears the legend "This is the last house in England." On the south side of the house one finds another inscription which reads, "This is the first house in England."

Much depends upon the point of view. Every intelligent American has "views" on the subject of Americanization and the status of the people whom we class indiscriminately as "foreigners." This book is a plea for the Christian and universal point of view, which the author believes is not only wholly consistent with the truest Americanism, but the only point of view which is truly consistent.

Migration has been the habit of the race from the dawn of history. It has been one of the most potent factors in the development of the race and in the shaping of the social life and institutions of the peoples among whom the newcomers have settled. The most radical migratory movement in history is American immigration. America has been built upon a process of immigration. Jamestown and Plymouth Rock, as well as Ellis and Angel Islands, are in the long view of history alike landing stages for prospective new Americans. It is of great importance that we shall understand that America is not yet finished. She is still in the making. In the light of recent events we need to restudy our history, that we may have a true perspective by which to understand present-day affairs. It has become easy for us during the past four years to think in international terms. We need not only the international point of view, but what is more fundamental—the universal that is, the Christian point of view.

The universal point of view will enable us to understand that America has a missionary destiny. We shall be able to think of all races with which we are dealing as the children of God and recognize the obligation of the stronger to serve the weaker. It will enable us to see our generation against the background of history and to see all history in the light of the unfolding purpose of God to establish his kingdom in the world. If we can gain and steadily hold this point of view, we shall not be content to think of the foreigner as many of us have been accustomed to think of him; but against the background of his past, with its repression and lack of opportunity, we shall see our national task as world service, in the interest of world unity, under the sway of the principles and ideals of the kingdom of God. Only then shall we make real the poet's vision, when he beheld:

"...the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunderstorm;
Till the war-drum throbb'd no longer, and the battle-flags were fur'd,
In the Parliament of man, the Federation of the world."

"Approximately one-tenth of the population of the United States is composed of unnaturalized aliens. There are now 17,500,000 aliens in this country, yet barely 6,000,000 have become citizens. Such a tremendous unassimilated mass means danger, for among these millions comparatively few have any knowledge of or interest in American institutions."

—RAYMOND F. CRIST,

U. S. Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization.

"We have made countless sacrifices during this war: sacrifices of money and blood; sacrifices in our industries; sacrifices of time and effort and preferment and prejudice. Much of that sacrifice will be found vain if we do not prepare to draw ourselves to those later comers who are at once our opportunity and responsibility."

HON. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

MISSIONS

HOW THE WOMEN CAN HELP MAKE THIS THE GREATEST OFFERING

Here are three ways by which the woman can help make this our greatest Home Mission offering: praying, agitating, giving.

PRAYING. Earnest daily prayer that God will open the hearts of our people to the needs of the home work; public prayer offered at mid-week prayer meeting, at Christian Endeavor service, in Sunday school classes, at Women's Missionary Society meetings, or Mission Study classes.

AGITATING — in other words talking. Where the Evangelist comes to the home it is easy to call the attention of the family to the campaign for a banner offering; to emphasize each member's responsibility in regard to it; to stress the joy of giving, and the blessedness of helping the Lord's work.

MRS. G. T. RONK
Sisterhood Representative
LEON, IOWA
Sisterhood sessions, Evangelist articles bearing on the subject may be read and information given as to the expenditure of the offering. Mention should be made of the necessity of the women's co-operation, and whether the societies give an offering or the members as individuals, the importance of their assistance must be emphasized.

GIVING—After praying and agitating, giving must follow as a local sequence. Women cannot and will not pray privately and publicly for a cause without supporting it; they cannot emphasize the necessity of others' responsibility toward it and not recognize their own; they cannot learn of the needs of the work without their hearts being touched, their sympathies aroused, their purse strings opened.

Then co-operation will be a great factor in making our greatest Home Mission offering.

MRS. G. T. RONK.

WHY THE GREATEST HOME MISSIONARY OFFERING EVER

Mark 16th Chapter, 15th and 16th verses say:

"And he said unto them, go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth, and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."

Brothren, do you believe this scripture? If you do, you must either go into the mission field yourself or help in a substantial way to pay the expense of sending some one to do this work.

The Home Missionary Society has a constructive program outlined for the coming year, and I am sure that the money you give will be prayerfully and judiciously expended.

MRS. MARY C. WENGER
DAYTON, OHIO

As representative of the Women's Missionary Society on the Home Board, Sister Wenger appeals to every W. M. S. member to co-operate in making this "Banner Home Mission Offering."

As a nation, we have never been so prosperous as we now are.

The purchasing power of the dollar is not so great as it has been in times past. Therefore, to carry on the old work (to say nothing about the new work planned) we must of necessity have the biggest thanksgiving offering in the history of our church. This we will have, if every member does their individual duty, and God will be pleased with nothing short of each individual doing his duty.

Intercessory prayer for our missionaries is a wonderful privilege as well as a duty. God has provided that we can go to every mission field in this way. But do you think that God will be pleased with only your prayers, if he has blessed you in a financial way, and you are not a good steward of what he has entrusted you with?

Remember this, that our fellowship and love of Jesus Christ can be measured to a large extent by what we give for his work. How blessed it would be if each of us would say: I will place no value on anything I have, or may possess, except in relation to the work of Jesus Christ. My prayer is that every member will "give as God has prospered them," and may it not be from the top of your purse, but from the bottom of your heart.

HENRY V. WALL.

Brother H. V. Wall's picture would have appeared on this page but for a mistake on the part of the engravers. When the paper was being made up the package which was supposed to contain Brother Wall's cut came to our office, but to our disappointment it proved to be an entirely different sort of a picture. The engravers had mailed us the wrong cut, though the "proof" and the original picture returned were true to Brother er Wall. The only consolation we have is that some one else was disappointed also. How human nature does err!—Editor.

WHY THE THANKSGIVING OFFERING SHOULD BE LARGER THAN EVER

The Home Missionary Thanksgiving offering should, this year, be the largest in our history. I will call attention to a few reasons for this.

The recent re-organization of the Board called for the appointment of a General Missionary Secretary, who shall give all his time to the work. His salary must be provided for and it is to come from the general funds.

The budget adopted at Conference is the largest ever and it must be put through.

New fields have been entered in each of the three Districts thus adding very largely to the moneys that must be raised.

Old H. C. L. has boosted our costs all along the line, and these must be met in this work, just the same as in everything else.

The Lord has made stewards of us all and we just must use his money in the extension work of his church if we wish to have his "well done" at the end. Since he has committed more to us this year than ever before we must account for it by giving more than ever.

We are to grow in grace. Are we not at the same time expected to grow in giving? If we are doing the former we must do the latter.

The word "must" is not used in this article in a slavish sense, but as our Savior used it when he said he must be about his Father's business. Let us all from now until the Thanksgiving offering is in also be active in our Father's business that funds may not be lacking in his treasury. HORACE KOLB.

HORACE KOLB
PHILADELPHIA, PENNSYLVANIA

WHY THE GREATEST OFFERING EVER
This Thanksgiving offering should be the greatest ever for three reasons.

First, Because we have been blessed as never a people have been blessed; the great world war being ended, leaving the people of all occupations in our great country in a most prosperous condition financially. Hence God has loaned us the substance to use, and to pay him his portion for its use would make this "the greatest offering ever," for no one would rob God.

Second, Never before in our time was there a greater need for the gospel. The great worry and unrest of all people during the past few years have placed them in such a condition that they are seeking a change, and to show them what they need while they are in this condition is the whole duty of a Christian.

Third, The many many calls to The Home Mission Board for help to spread Christ's love is evidence that people are seeking a change. The plain simple gospel is what they want; this is what they are calling for; shall we be able to give it to them?

Now, will we Brethren be up and doing to meet this need, or shall it be said of us that we were slackers.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

The First Brethren church at Clay City is one of our new churches. It is an outgrowth of a little class that was organized by Brother B. F. Flora some few years ago, five miles east of Clay City. For a time the little group worshipped in an old Baptist church, six miles east of town. They were served by an occasional visit from students from Ashland. The distance being too great to permit of this mission being formed into a circuit with some other church, and the long trips from Ashland making it too expensive for a student pastor, all services were discontinued for several years. But they were loyal Brethren and felt the need of a church of their choice where they might worship and rear their children. About four years ago, a lot was purchased in Clay City and the church building, the picture of which appeared on front page two weeks ago, was erected without any outside aid. Then and a parsonage was purchased. The first of October S. C. Henderson became their pastor.

The church has the prospect of a bright future. It is located in a growing town of 2,000. It has a good substantial class of people. Its members are among the prominent and leading citizens of the community. They are a people of talents and education, and have the respect of the entire community. They are willing workers and are ambitious to grow. There is no doubt that they will become a leading church in Clay City.

They were a star church in the Four Year Program last year. They have a live Christian Endeavor and a good Sunday school, which expects to be a front liner by next year. Their prayer meeting puts to shame churches of two and three times the church membership.

As this is the only Brethren church in Indiana south of Indianapolis, we are hoping that it may serve as a center from which other churches will grow. It is one of the most promising fields that the Mission Board is aiding.

The Muncie Mission was organized in June, 1915, by Charles A. Bame with 24 members. In October of the same year, M. M. Hoover took charge of the work and became the first pastor.

The second year J. W. Brower, Dr. Gordon and William H. Miller, at various times, served the congregation.

In 1917, the present pastor took charge of the work for half time, giving the other half of his time to Maple Grove, a congregation about eight miles north of Muncie. At the present time the writer is giving all of his time to the work in Muncie.

In the two years in which the present pastor gave one half of his time to the work in Muncie, some things were accomplished which are very encouraging indeed. Two lots were purchased and paid for. These lots are 120 feet deep and 85 feet wide. They are located on Ohio Avenue, a paved street and on the street car line. The first six months we preached in the old building in which the Mission was started. This building was not well adapted to religious purposes but was the best our people could do at the time. The next six months we held our services in a tent owned by the Mission Board. From the tent we moved our quarters into a hall in which it was necessary for us to spend some money so that it could be used for religious purposes. We seated the hall with opera chairs, bought new carpet and a new stove, papered the walls and painted the woodwork, which made our place of worship very inviting and attractive. We also bought a piano and paid for it. The Muncie Mission is out of debt and has $650.00 in the Building & Loan as a fund for a new church which we intend to build in 1920 if the Lord will help us to bring it about.

I might say that all the cash available for this fund will net at the present time more than $1,200.00. The Muncie Mission aims to raise in cash $100.00 per month for the new church—all during the year. If the churches that will not be asked to help Peru to build will be kind enough to help Muncie, we can in 1920 erect a building in this city that will be a credit to the Brethren church. But we cannot do without your assistance, brethren.

I might also say that the Sunday school has gained 100 percent in attendance in the last year and gained the third prize in the contest. There seems to be perfect harmony among the members and they work together beautifully.

The membership has increased also quite rapidly and there are now almost three times as many members as there were two years ago. We earnestly covet the prayers of the people who are interested in mission work that we may accomplish great things for the Lord in this city.

J. L. KIMMEL, Pastor.

Missions. I asked him if everybody would do as he intended to, and let the Christian work at home close and die out, how long it would be till the missionaries on the field would die of starvation. He said he never thought of that.

The foreign missionary branches of the Christian church depend in size and number, upon the strength of the trunk that bears them. Home Missions is strengthening the home base, the trunk of the Christian tree, that it might bear more branches.

short period of time is surely the work of God. If God so approves of such work so clearly, should we not be encouraged to plunge deeper into this blessed work than ever before?

Our recent district conference was the climax of blessings up to that time, with its splendid Bible teachings, inspiring sermons, and personal fellowship with strong men of God. But since then the Lord has not left us alone, but has been adding to our blessings. We have just closed a short revival at Hollywood, where we have been conducting a mission Sunday school for the last year and a half. We used the old tent we began the first work in Spokane with, and the Lord added unto us twenty-five more souls. We had to do our own preaching this time as finances would not allow of sending for an evangelist. Since that time, that is, the close of the meeting, several more have come forward and united with us in the faith.

We were not privileged to observe Brethren Day last June on account of building at the time, but we held it on October twelfth. We made it a sort of "Home-coming Day," and it was a success from the very start. It was an all day affair. Lunches were brought and eaten in the basement, and at the afternoon service, five splendid talks were given by several members of our church on "Our Church," her beginning, her purpose, our loyalty to her, the effect of her ministry, her foundation and her future. It was just splendid, all of it, and did our hearts good to see how the brethren themselves love and defend their faith. At the evening service we baptized those who came forward at the tent meeting we held at Hollywood. This was a

We are now looking forward to establishing another strong work here in the Northwest, just where it will be, at this time, we cannot

The church and parsonage are on a ridge where as our Lord said, "A light that is set on a hill cannot be hid." Our band of workers here is small but they are zealous for the Kingdom and eager for good works. We have forty members living in reach of the church. Thirty have been present at communion services since we arrived on the field, May 1, 1918.

The Maple Grove church has had under her care since Easter this year, a mission point at De Vizes, Kansas. This place is ten miles north of the church. We hold services Sunday morning and evening at the church; in the afternoons at De Vizes.

Among the Brethren mission churches of Indiana stands one of which any city may feel proud, but the small band of faithful members who struggled, worked and planned while they prayed and trusted under great difficulties and trials can best appreciate and realize the blessing of at last having a church home that is a credit to even a larger city. But this good little town of Huntington with its population of 18,000 is a great field and shows vast opportunities for the growth of our own Brethren church, which is centrally located, only three blocks from the court house, and is easily reached from all parts of the city and the surrounding country.

While still holding services in the little hall Brother J. W. Brower came to us and is our faithful pastor at the present time. One year ago in August this church was dedicated to our Lord, and Brother A. E. Thomas followed with a series of evangelistic meetings, resulting in several gains for the Kingdom. He came to us again last April with another of his good revivals and many more made the good confession, most of which were added to the church.

True, as in every church things are not always smooth sailing, there are unexpected stumps, which at times nearly upset the plough, man and all. However, like the farmer in the field we felt the need of a power to break through these objections. The dynamite of God was resorted to, the work began and it is now going on. Nothing was ever too trials and troubles, but if we did not have these to overcome how could we grow? The agents of the devil are lurking around every congregation, and the greater the blessings from heaven we receive and the stronger our spiritual strength,—just that much greater is the assault from Satan that he may offset and quench this divine grace. Therefore we have had some dark days and discouraging times and but the courage, faithfulness and loyalty of our pastor, guided by the Holy Spirit in everything, led us safely through until today our church stands upon a firmer foundation than at any time in its history. Of course some have fallen by the wayside but those who have stood the test are the stronger for the trials. So we have a good future before us,—the church of Jesus Christ cannot fail.

We have an excellent Sunday school with a superintendent, Brother W. H. Landis, who came as another great blessing from the Lord. He is indeed one of God's own children and the work has prospered under his direction. A strong Woman's Missionary Society and Sisterhood are doing good work and the boys are forming a society of their own. These young people are members of the Christian Endeavor, which although it has been the weakest point expects to reach the goal at the end of the year.

And now as this Thanksgiving season arrives our little congregation can lift their hearts to our heavenly Father in gratitude for the love and blessings bestowed upon us,—thankful indeed for our pastor, Brother Brower, to whose guidance we feel we owe the success of our church; thankful for the many opportunities that are appearing now for the growth of the church and the saving of souls; thankful for the faithful members who are working for the cause of the Lord and Master.

May the Holy Spirit continue to dwell with us and another report reveal to you how God has prospered his work in Huntington.

THE PASSING OF JOHN LICHTY

John Lichty was born in Somerset county, Pennsylvania, April 21, 1851. He died at his home in Falls City, Nebraska, October 27, 1919, at the age of 68 years, 6 months and 6 days.

Only a small circle of friends knew that Brother Lichty was in poor health, for he kept his troubles to himself, while he worked industriously and tirelessly to help those about him. He was about and busy until the last moments of his life. His office today as I write these words is just like he left it on Saturday evening, even to the pen upon his desk. On Sunday he seemed in better health and spirits than usual. He was at all the services on this last day of his life, taught his class in the Sunday school and went with his wife and pastor to spend the day with friends. The evening service was especially enjoyable to him; he so expressed himself to several of his friends. Returning home in the evening he retired and quickly fell into a deep sleep, awakening in a short time, to hear his Lord call him out of the stillness of the night. He was sick not longer than half an hour.

Of his immediate family there are left to mourn his departure, his wife and five children, A. H. Lichty, of Columbus, Ohio, State Secretary of Y. M. C. A. and former business manager of the Brethren Publishing Company; Mrs. C. W. Stump of Hastings, Nebraska; ka; Frank F., and Guy C., both of Falls City; and Miss Marie, a teacher in Ashland College.

It is useless to attempt to write an appreciation of his life. I never knew such an unselfish man in all my experience, neither did I ever know a man who was interested in so many of the movements of church and state for the betterment of the human family. There are extremely few men who could at his age carry so many responsibilities in life, and yet give each one its proper attention. When I look back over the past few years, I am not able to see how he did it all.

His going from the church is an irreparable loss, and we are for the moment too stunned to take the next step. Now I am doing my best with the help of God to lead our people through the Valley of Shadow, out into the sunlight of his love.

The funeral service was held from the church, which was all too small, even though the weather was extremely stormy to accommodate them all. Such floral offerings were never seen in this part of Nebraska before. Letters, telegrams and other tokens are coming from all over the United States, showing the appreciation of the heart to the passing of a noble Christian brother. May we revere his memory, and perpetuate his ideals, by taking up the task where he laid it down, and carrying it on until our Lord calls us hence. Rev. Whitted assisted me with the funeral service.

H. F. STUCKMAN, Pastor.

"HE WAS A GOOD MAN"

Everyone is of the same opinion when expressing themselves as to the character of John Lichty. They say, he was a grand and good man, a man who lived his religious convictions. A more honest and conscientious man could not be found. He built well for his heavenly home and earthly home alike and when the summons came he was prepared spiritually and ready to give up his earthly possessions, over into hands competent to do his will having had an excellent example set before them. There was no one better prepared to "go home" than Mr. Lichty.—From The Falls City, Daily Journal, October 28, 1919.

AN APPRECIATION

It was my very great privilege to know Brother John Lichty both as pastor and as a very dear personal friend. During my pastorate in Falls City, John Lichty and Samuel Lichty were to myself and family more than just members of our church. Our children came to call them "Uncle John" and "Uncle Sam," and though more than five years have passed since our pastorate ended they still speak of them both in the same endearing terms.

John Lichty was a commanding figure in the community life of his city. He was never too busy to help in any task that meant a better, fuller life for its citizenship. He was a loyal member of the church and a faithful and sincere Christian.

I am very glad to express this appreciation of his life. I feel that I have lost a personal friend, that a great, large, useful life has passed into eternity, into the presence of the loving Father-God. We grieve with Mrs. Lichty, the children and friends but we rejoice in his life, in his faith, in his sure reward.

A. J. SPACHT.

AN APPRECIATION

I count it a privilege as a former pastor of Brother John Lichty to say a word in appreciation of his life as I knew him.

It is a rare privilege that comes to a minister in the course of his life to know men like Brother Lichty. To know him in the church as a Christian and co-laborer impressed one as to the earnest of his spirit to please Christ. To know him in his home life and enjoy the congeniality of his spirit was to have a greater regard for the Christ he served. He was a big man in every way and his bigness was always noticeable in the midst of perplexing circumstances.

John Lichty's life will go on bearing fruit; such men never die, they live on through time and eternity. My heartfelt sympathy goes out to the family whom I know keenly feel their loss.

J. FREMONT WATSON.

AN APPRECIATION

In my more than twenty years' experience as a pastor in the Brethren church it has been my rare privilege to know a few men whose lives stand out, far in advance of the average man, as real leaders and workers in the kingdom of God. But among the few or many I have known none stand out more prominently than that of John Lichty, the subject of this sketch. It was my good fortune to serve as his pastor for a number of years and to work with him in other lines of community and reform work aside from that which is the direct fruit of the church, and I always found him "zealous in every good work."

The whole of Richardson county, Nebraska, must feel the influence of his life for generations to come.

A Greater Brethren Publishing House and Its Possible Significance

We have heard about "A Greater Brethren Church," "A Greater Ashland College," greater missionary endeavor, and greater other things, but we have given very little serious thought as a church to "A Greater Publishing House." There are a few however who have long been vitally interested in the development of an institution that would be a worthy instrument for the publication and dissemination of the written word. Against such indifference, and at times against some opposition, those few have struggled on through the years, making slow but steady advance in the attainment of their high hopes. From time to time new interest has been awakened, new undertakings launched and greater appreciation of the need and necessity of the printed word developed. And now that a distinctively forward step has been taken in the securing of a more commodious and desirable location and more adequate equipment, the conviction is growing upon some of us that this should mark the beginning of a new era in the publishing interests of the Brethren church. That the move we have made is a forward step will be evident from a glance at the picture on front page and the following considerations.

The building is large and adequate to accommodate all the equipment necessary for our possible growth for many years to come. It is centrally located and makes it possible for our House to compete successfully with other printing establishments for the job printing of the city and surrounding towns. No small amount of new machinery, including a large press has been added to the equipment of the mechanical department, thus greatly increasing the capacity of its output. The size, location and quality of the building, together with the up-to-date and efficient equipment give the Publishing House a better standing in the community than it previously had. The town's respect for us as a business enterprise has been greatly increased, and reputation is as good as capital if it is faithfully maintained. All these things make the possible income much greater, and opens the way for the building up of a large business. This will redound to the credit of the Brethren church not only at Ashland but throughout the brotherhood, and will give just cause for rejoicing to every member of the church.

But, suppose a large and paying printing and publishing business is built up, what will it mean to the Brethren church in actual profit? The Brethren church is not in the printing business to make money; it is not concerned about building up a large, lucrative business simply for the sake of having a large bank account in the name of its publishing company. A church has no business with either money or a printing establishment except to aid it in the fulfillment of its great heaven-sent mission. In what way is it possible for a greater and more prosperous publishing house to have any vital bearing on the spiritual welfare of the individual congregation and members? Here are some considerations worthy of note:

First, it will make possible a better periodical literature. We have sought to make The Brethren Evangelist the very best paper possible from every point of view, and shall continue to seek to improve it. But our resources are very limited and we are constantly conceiving of ways in which the Evangelist might more effectively serve the church, but the lack of funds hinders their execution. Brother A. D. Gnagey, who has done more to develop the literature of the Brethren church than any other one man and is now editor of the Sunday school publications, frequently lays out to his co-workers plans for improving the various publications for which he is responsible, but how soon he comes up against the stone wall of insufficient funds none understand so well as he. There are men, worthy judges, who tell us that our literature compares favorably with that of other and larger denominations, and yet they as well as we recognize the possibilities of improvement and the handicaps which lay in our way.

It is at present impossible for us to pay for any sort of original matter that goes into our publications, except to buy stories for The Angelus. This is not as it ought to be; it is a weakness possessed by us beyond practically all other church publishers. Some houses pay for practically everything that is written; others pay for the maintenance of regular departments, such as the writing of helps for the Sunday-school lessons and Christian Endeavor topics; still others pay for only special articles. But nearly all make an effort to compensate their writers to some extent along certain lines.

It may seem strange to some of our readers who may have been tained in the old school of Dunkerism where there was a decided disposition to pay for any sort of religious service, that we should advocate paying for so small a service as the writing of an article. It may also be misunderstood by some of more modern Dunker training, especially those who have never made any serious attempt to write for their church paper. We do not advocate the paying for the writing of church news, notices and reports of special undertakings and movements. We think too that our people might well write an occasional article or sermon gratis. But if one is to write frequent articles of merit or maintain some special department in the paper, he ought to receive something that will help to buy his "bread and butter" while he is doing that service. For remember that all those who are spending their hours every week or nearly so writing for our publications and are receiving nothing more than the postage required to mail their manuscripts to the publishers, are not only giving much valuable time, but are paying anywhere from fifty cents to a dollar an hour to others to do their painting and plumbing and even to have their garbage carried from their back doors. Our sense of justice tells us that such conditions ought not to be. And the experience of editors is that such a policy does not long succeed. But publishers cannot pay for worthy service with the pen when there are no funds or provision for such payment.

Our periodical literature can on the whole be greatly improved by the more liberal use of illustrations and pictures. The eye is a greater receiver than the ear, and holds more permanently what it does receive. How much beautiful cover pages and numerous illustrations through the paper are appreciated is understood by none so much as by those whose duty it is to make the various publications. And the church's servants in these capacities have as a rule sought to brighten up their publications as much as it was possible. But it has been difficult to make brick without straw. As the "straw" increased the quality of the publications increased also. And may we not hope, with the loyal support of the brotherhood making possible the increase in business, that the way will be paved for still greater and long-needed improvements to be made?

Second, a "Greater Publishing House" ought to make it possible to better serve the special needs of the church, such as special programs, supplementary lessons for the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. There are special days in every church for which programs ought to be prepared, and which can be prepared only by a denominational publishing house. Only a Brethren publishing house could be expected to publish a program for "Brethren Day." Only a Brethren publishing house could be expected to prepare supplementary lessons for the teaching of distinctively Brethren doctrines in the Sunday school. Only a Brethren publishing house could be requested, as we have been, to give to our Christian Endeavorers a series of studies on the doctrines and polity of the Brethren church. And only the editor of Brethren Sunday school publications would ever be likely to prepare special helps which will be of permanent value in the study of John 13, as Editor Gnagey is doing for November 30th. If our Publishing House has given acceptable service in this line in the past, it may rightly be expected that it will be increasingly helpful as its strength increases.

Third, a "Greater Publishing House" ought to give better service to the church in the making of a permanent church literature.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We are sorry for the unusual number of typographical errors that occurred in last week's issue as well as in previous issues. The editor has not been reading the "proof" since General Conference, the Company having relieved him of that work at that time because of his too heavy duties. We have brought the matter to the attention of those responsible for this work and are assured that greater care will be exercised, especially since the moving rush is largely over.

The sermon page this week is devoted to an address of Brother Bame which was printed in the daily paper of North Manchester, and was one of a series of special addresses being given by the ministers of that town.

Next week is our "News Special;" as much as possible of the news that has been collecting for a few weeks will be released. The conference reports that we have in hand will also be run. After that we shall be able to release the church news more promptly as they reach us.

Our Oak Hill, West Virginia, correspondent, Sister Boothe, is very regular and by her frequent but brief reports she keeps us continually informed as to the progress of the work at that place, of which Brother W. H. Miller is now pastor.

Brother J. A. Garber, the new director of the goal on recruiting the ministry, supplies the Four Year Program page this week. Brother Garber also has been selected as the Brethren representative on the Life Work Committee of the Interchurch World Movement of which he speaks in his article.

From the pen of Brother Livengood comes a report of the Lanark, Illinois, work. They recently experienced a successful evangelistic campaign in which the pastor, Brother B. T. Burnworth and Brother Beachler did the preaching. The work at Lanark is in splendid condition and everybody is kept busy.

We are especially indebted to Dean Miller and Editor Gnagey, of the Sunday School department for their interesting articles this week dealing with the history of Brethren literature. (We hope sometime later to supply our readers with other interesting facts from the pens of former editors). Brother Garber sounds an important note in his article on A Permanent Church Literature.

In this line of service our Publishing House has not done anything very striking. There have been a few individual efforts on the part of certain editors to give to the church a few books and tracts of permanent value. But the task has never been seriously undertaken as a policy of our Publishing House; nor have the results already accomplished been conserved. This failure is due not so much to the wilful neglect of the Publishing Company as to its inability to finance any well laid plan along this line. As business increases it may rightly be expected that more attention will be given to this much needed service. However, it will be folly to expect that an adequate program for the creation of a permanent church literature can be financed by the Publishing House unaided, though its business may be ever so prosperous. The brotherhood must come to its assistance by the placing in the hands of the Publishing Company a permanent endowment fund sufficient to guarantee the publication of books that will be of permanent value to the church. With so limited a sale as books would necessarily have in a small church like our own, a publishing house would run great risk of not selling enough books to pay the cost of publication, not considering making a profit. Our size as a church may be regrettable, but we cannot delay giving serious attention to the making of a permanent church literature until it is greatly enlarged. The one way to remedy the difficulty is to place at the service of our Publishing House an endowment fund for this purpose. And in this connection, let it be remembered that an institution established for the publication and dissemination of the written word as it deals with the gospel of Christ is just as certainly a benevolent institution as is a Christian college. It also stands side by side with the denominational college in importance and deserves the support of the church just as fully and freely. But until the day comes when the Lord shall open our eyes to see the need of such provision being made by our church, we must count on the loyal patronage of every Sunday school and church in the purchase of published supplies to enable us to increasingly realize a Greater Brethren Publishing House, which will in turn render to them increasingly efficient and adequate service.

Brother Bell writes of his pleasant work at Spokane during the Bible conference and the evangelistic services, also concerning his trip back to Winona Lake and on to Dayton, his former pastorate.

Brother Wall's report as Field Secretary of the Home Missionary Board for the Pacific Coast, is of special interest and occupies the mission page this week. It would be difficult to find another man who has traveled as far in the same length of time to give encouragement and investigate conditions in a church district as Brother Wall has. Don't fail to read his report. His picture which went astray last week appears in connection with his report.

There are being organized two or three "Gospel Teams" in Ashland College, for the purpose of conducting evangelistic campaigns in various churches during the Christmas vacation. Any church desiring the services of one of these teams should write Brother W. R. Deeter, the Captain of the Teams. It is an unusual opportunity for any church to get four enthusiastic young preachers in its midst for two weeks, more or less. If you want the assistance of a Team write to Brother Deeter at once, at Ashland, Ohio.

The Ohio division of the Interchurch World Movement will meet in conference at Columbus, December 1 to 3. Every denomination is requested to send a delegation from every county in which that denomination is established. The Interchurch Movement is not purposed to do away with denominations or the difference between them, but to bring all to work together most advantageously for the largest interests of the kingdom of God, and to stir all denominations to a more vigorous prosecution of their respective tasks.

Brother Robert Porte, pastor of the Dallas Center, Iowa, church, reports the splendid meeting conducted there recently by Brother Bell, at which time a number of souls were added to the church. Others were led to make the great decision both before and after the special evangelistic effort. Brother Porte is doing a good work at that place and his members are loyally supporting him.

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

Life Work Recruiting. By J. A. Garber, National Director

For three years Goal 6 has been under the able direction of Brother W. H. Beachler, he having been assigned this with Goal 8. But the latter, representing College Endowment, has made such increasing demands on his time and energy that he found it necessary to resign the former. On the recommendation of the Four Year Program Committee, the late General Conference charged the writer with the responsibility of directing Life Work Recruiting.

Hand Book Definitions

According to the Hand Book, to win Goal 6 each congregation or circuit must gain for the ministry or missionary service of the church one new recruit from its membership. A Recruit is one who publicly declares a willingness to enter into active service as a minister or missionary or to enter upon active preparation for such service. The Goal, however, has not been won by the church until the name of the person has been sent to the district or national director.

Enlarged Function

When the committee in charge recommended Goal 6 as one of thirteen in the Four Year Program, the members evidently had in mind the need of discovering, enlisting and training an adequate leadership for the church at home and abroad. These enlisted persons would most likely become employed workers. But more recently we have come to see the necessity and urgency of placing a like burden of responsibility upon all young men and women to dedicate their lives to Christian service as volunteer workers. Whether or not such recruits will count in the goal (the Committee must decide), we want our churches to stress this enlarged function in life work recruiting.

Two Lines of Work

1. Recruiting: This calls for (a) a deepening realization of the pressing necessity of an adequate and qualified leadership for the growing work of the church (b) The systematic presentation among young people of the world's greatest need and guiding principles by which they are to decide where they shall invest their lives (c) A clean-cut definition and description of Christian callings requiring various types of workers at home and abroad. 2. Such recruiting demands: Vocational guidance and training. Here, too, the need is three-fold (a) Selected and trained vocational counselors who will assist pastors, Sunday school superintendents and teachers, Christian Endeavor workers and parents in directing young people in the choice of a life work (b) Provision in Church Schools, High Schools and Colleges for the needed training fitting young people for all types of Christian service (c) The enrollment, on the basis of worthy character, evident capacity and certified training, of available young people, carefully picked and wisely trained, who could be assigned to any field for which they are best suited. Thus the Life Work department becomes a clearing house for recruits seeking for suitable fields and for churches and boards seeking for suitable workers.

Meeting Increased Need

Proceeding thus we may be able to meet in a more satisfactory way the multiplied needs which are baffling. According to the Student Volunteer Movement a few over eight hundred constitute the largest number of workers sent abroad in a single year. There are requisitions already for sixteen hundred, most of whom will be sent this year, if they can be secured. Of that number one hundred and fifty doctors are wanted at once. The need of workers is correspondingly great in the home land. The Brethren Missionary Board is appealing earnestly for funds in liberal amounts at this season, but after these gifts are received, as they will be, the Board will be handicapped for the want of suitable workers. The Board will need at least a half dozen. There is scarcely a district mission board that could not use half that number; multiply three by eight and you have twenty-four. Then add to these figures the amazingly large number of pastorless churches. Once more, think of the pastoral assistants, directors of religious education and other helpers that might be used.

Sources of Supply

Generally, these urgently needed workers must be found among our own people; other denominations have places for all the recruits they can enlist. Particularly, they must come from our church homes. Dr. J. Campbell White, Director of the Life Work Department of the Inter-Church World Movement says: "The home is the seed plot out of which Christian leaders naturally spring. Everything possible should be done to make it spiritual in atmosphere and purpose. Christian parents should everywhere be challenged to help their children to find God's plan for their lives and to follow it." All who have given any thought to the subject recognize the truth of those piercing words, but how many of our homes are weighed in the balance and found wanting at that point? Oftentimes many spend more time in teaching their children how to find gold instead of how to discover God's plan for their lives. As to personnel, we must turn mainly to our young people. Persons past or in the mature period of life find it very difficult to abandon their present work and prepare themselves for specialized endeavors. Young people have a natural and active interest in matters relative to life work. The truest and strongest impulses to surrender for definite Christian service is experienced in the teen age years, and usually in the early teens.

Stress Points

To be deeply impressed wisely induced to make definite life work decisions these young people must have a wholesome Christian atmosphere in which to breathe and live. It is created chiefly by consistent living and devoted service on the part of Christian persons, including parents, ministers, church officers and the rank and file. Inconsistency, indifference or infidelity on the part of either of these chills the warm impulses which constrain to full time Christian work. This atmosphere may be intensified with intelligently adapted appeals to life work by the minister, Sunday school teachers and Christian Endeavor leaders. The response thereto will disclose certain prospects that should be followed up by a representative Life Work Committee that will continue to give directive counsel to these persons and cultivate the field of the local church in the hope of finding others. All of these efforts, of course, will be permeated with prayer which was announced by Jesus himself as the principal means of securing laborers. "Pray ye, the Lord of the harvest, that he will thrust forth laborers."

The Future

Later, perhaps about the first of the year, we are going to ask our churches for a full report of their standing on Goal 6. Meanwhile check up your attainments, and, should you discover no recruit to your credit, make a determined effort to secure at least one by that time. More will be heard concerning this work in the coming weeks. The Inter-Church World Movement through the Life Work Department, headed up by Dr. J. Campbell White, is planning to conduct twenty-five hundred county conferences, a series of meetings for high school students and at least five hundred meetings in the various colleges, carrying the appeal to college men and women. Most of these meetings will be held in the early part of 1920,

Ashland, Ohio,

GENERAL ARTICLES

Our First Periodical Literature. By Dean J. Allen Miller, D. D.

The present article is very largely a reprint of an article published in The Brethren Evangelist of December 29, 1909.

It will suffice in a general way to indicate the fact that the invention of the printing press has been one of the mightiest factors in the making of progress and civilization. It made possible the wide spread of knowledge and intelligence and the limitless multiplication of the agencies of advance. The church has however never made the fullest possible use of this agency. Our own people have been rather more tardy in their use of the press and especially in the production of a literature than many other denominations. I am here to review especially the rise and growth of the periodical literature of the fraternity. I speak too of the whole and undivided church.

The interest of the subject justifies me in reminding you of the fact that even in Germany the Brethren were already interested in the business of printing. Near Swartzenau is the town of Berleberg. Here a printing press was set up and some of our own brethren became interested with others in the publication of the now famous Berleberg Bible, with notes, as early as 1726. This very press, according to Brother Abraham H. Cassel, was afterwards sent to America by our brethren and became the property of Christopher Saur. Here was printed the Sower, or Saur, Bible in the German. This was forty years before the publication of the first English Bible in America. The activity of Christopher Sower was almost marvelous. It is said by one of his descendants that he found his supply of type too scant and so cast more in moulds contrived by himself, that he made his own paper and ink and bound his own books. He adds, "He enlarged and increased his business of publishing until his publications in the German and English languages numbered more than two hundred different works." I shall only add here that among his publications was the first magazine published in America.

On July 22, 1796, there was born a man whose initiative revolutionized the thought of the Brethren people. This was Elder Henry Kurtz. He received a good education in his native land and in 1817 came to America. Here he engaged in teaching and in the further preparation for the ministry. In 1819 he entered upon the work of the ministry in the Lutheran church. He became dissatisfied with the doctrinal teachings of this church especially as to the infant baptism, and severed his relations with this body. Several years later he united with the Brethren by baptism. In 1830 he again entered upon the work of the ministry and to the end of his life proved himself a most faithful and consecrated preacher of the Gospel. How many others of that day saw the need of a church paper we do not know. But to Elder Henry Kurtz belongs the honor of inaugurating and carrying forward to a successful issue the publication of the first church paper among the Brethren. Many Brethren were opposed to the movement and it was not until after four successive Annual Meetings had been held that he was given full freedom. The Annual Meeting of 1851 had given him permission to publish a paper and in April of that year the first issue appeared. It bore the name, GOSPEL VISITOR, and the date was April 1, 1851. This publication was continued until within a few years of his death which occurred in 1874. Thus began in a humble way through the divinely chosen instrumentality of Henry Kurtz, the publication of the first church paper among the Brethren. At first he did all the work upon it. Brother H. R. Holsinger says that it was an eight-page octavo monthly. In James Quinter's life, the following saying is reported to have been extant in that day, "The GOSPEL VISITOR is published in the loft of a milk-house in the backwoods of Ohio and three miles from the post-office." In 1856 Elder James Quinter became associated with Henry Kurtz in the editorship of the Visitor. After the retirement of Elder Kurtz, Elder Quinter became the editor.

It was in the employ of Henry Kurtz that Elder H. R. Holsinger learned the printer's business. Elder Holsinger soon became convinced that a weekly paper was necessary. He failed to convince Brother Kurtz of this necessity. He returned to his Pennsylvania home. Soon thereafter he obtained the permission of the Middle District of Pennsylvania to begin a new publication, and January 1, 1865, he sent out the first number of the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION. This paper met with great success and marks a new era in the affairs of the church. This paper was soon sold to Elder Quinter.

It was in the year of 1876, that three new publications sprang into existence. H. R. Holsinger began the issuing of a paper especially designed for the youth of the church. This was a sixteen page weekly published at $1.00 per year and was known as the PIOUS YOUTH. In the same year the PILGRIM was first issued under the editorship of Elders H. B. Brumbaugh, J. B. Brumbaugh and George Brumbaugh. The first issue bears the date of January 1, 1876. It met with favor and while it was liberal and aggressive it was mild in tone and manner. This same year marked the beginning of the VINDICATOR, edited by Elder Samuel Kinsey. This paper was devoted to the maintenance of the radically conservative views held by many Brethren. Upon the unfortunate division of the church, the VINDICATOR became the organ of the "Old German Baptist Brethren."

It was in 1873 that Elder Quinter had purchased the CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION. In the same year he purchased the VISITOR of Elder Kurtz. He now published the paper under the combined name of the two, namely THE CHRISTIAN FAMILY COMPANION AND GOSPEL VISITOR. In 1876 the name was changed to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and Elder J. W. Beer became associated with Elder Quinter. Late in 1876 the PILGRIM was combined with this paper and the name changed to the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and PILGRIM and was published from Hunt-ington, Pennsylvania.

In the beginning of 1876 Elder J. T. Myers began the publication of THE BRETHREN'S MESSENGER at Germantown, Pennsylvania. Later in the same year it was moved to Lanark, Illinois, and published as two papers, a weekly in the English and bearing the name the BRETHREN AT WORK, and a monthly in the German under the name, Der Bruderbote.

The next publication to appear was the PROGRESSIVE CHRISTIAN published at Berlin, Pennsylvania, and edited by Elders H. R. Holsinger and J. W. Beer. This paper was avowedly progressive. This was in the fall of 1878. Failing to secure the patronage necessary to continue its publication it was discontinued in 1879. In the meantime Elder Beer had secured the interests of Elder Holsinger. In May, 1880, publication was resumed under Howard Miller. Soon thereafter it again passed into the sole control of H. R. Holsinger. After his expulsion from the church and the organization of the Brethren church was effected it became the organ of the new organization and its name was changed to THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST. The EVANGELIST has continued to be published here at Ashland from that time until the present with the exception of a few years when it was removed to Waterloo, Iowa, and was edited by Elder Holsinger and E. L. Hildebrand.

It should be added here that on January 1, 1879, there appeared the first number of the GOSPEL PREACHER edited by Elder S. Z. Sharp and S. H. Bashor. Soon after its inception J. H. Worst took Elder Sharp's place and in 1882 it was combined with the PROGRESSIVE CHRISTIAN. The Brethren Evangelist has had as its editors the following Brethren: Brethren Holsinger, Bashor, Worst, Mason, Beer, Elder Yoder, A. L. Garber, Hildebrand, Harrison, Gnagey, Yoder, Teeter and the present incumbent, Brother George S. Baer.

After the separation of the "Conservatives" and "Progressives," the PRIMITIVE CHRISTIAN and THE BRETHREN AT WORK consolidated and were published under the name GOSPEL MESSENGER. This periodical has continued until this day as the faithful and earnest exponent of the Church of the Brethren, as has the EVANGELIST for our own part of the fraternity.

May the richest blessings of God rest upon the Evangelist and upon the proclamation of the truth for which it stands. May divine guidance be given to the Editor and the publishers. May God multiply its power unto his glory and to the salvation of souls.

Origin and Development of Our Sunday School Literature

By A. D. Gnagey, Editor Sunday School Literature

I am requested to write of our publishing interests, more particularly, concerning that period of our church history which has to do with the origin, the growth and the development of our Sunday school literature. This I cheerfully do because of my intimate relations with the publishing interests during the period of which I am to write, having been the editor of all the church's publications during the ten years whose history I am requested to set forth. It is a story on which a book might easily be written, but I shall endeavor to be as brief as possible, and give such facts only as in my judgment will be of interest to our people. It is believed that the younger element in the church at this present time is not as familiar with this part of our history as with that which covers the earlier period of our activity in this country, the latter being written, the former unwritten history.

In the year 1892, after an interim of five years, the National Conference of the Brethren church met for the first time at beautiful Winona Lake, Indiana, then known as Eagle Lake. Since then the Conference has met at this same place every year except in 1894 and 1895, when it met at Ashland, Ohio, in 1898, when it met at Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and twice since at Ashland and once at Dayton, Ohio. At the conference of 1892, at Eagle Lake, Indiana, S. J. Harrison was elected editor of the BRETHREN EVANGELIST. An advisory board consisting of three members, was also elected. These members were H. R. Holsinger, B. C. Moomaw and the writer, S. H. Bashor was elected vice-editor, who, in the event of a vacancy, caused either by death or resignation, was to become the editor-in-chief until his successor was elected.

It has been in the heart of many of our people that the time had come when steps should be taken to provide for the Brethren church a full line of Sunday school literature, prepared by our own people, together with certain doctrinal tracts setting forth the faith and practice of the church, and other publications of a more general character. The need of a credal literature was especially felt by the ministry of the church owing to the widespread misunderstandings and often misrepresentations of the doctrinal teachings of what was then known as the Progressive Brethren. With a view of accomplishing something definite in the way of this much needed literature, the following resolutions were presented and adopted by the Conference of 1892 at Winona Lake:

That a committee of three, consisting of A. D. Gnagey, B. C. Moomaw and J. H. Knepper, be entrusted with full powers to provide, if possible, a complete series of Brethren Sunday school literature.

That the committee on Sunday school literature shall be known as the standing committee on books, tracts, and church literature.

That said committee shall be entrusted with executive and administrative powers to organize and secure articles of incorporation, and actively carry forward its proper work, to collect and disburse funds, to secure donations and bequests, and in every possible and proper way to provide and circulate church literature.

That said committee shall take immediate steps to provide a series of suitable tracts setting forth the doctrines and practices of the Brethren church.

It will thus be seen that the Conference was very liberal with its committee, granting it full power to act in its capacity, to provide literature for the church, giving it specific instructions to prepare at once a full line of Sunday school literature for Brethren Sunday schools together with some doctrinal tracts setting forth the teachings of the church. So far as its liberties were concerned this committee had no cause for complaint, but to accomplish the work thus imposed upon it, the Conference did not provide any means. It was left to the committee to pay its own bills.

In compliance with the instructions of the Conference and with a view of carrying out its wishes, the committee met, in the same year, at Myersdale, Pennsylvania, organized and made provisions for its incorporation. It should be stated that before Conference adjourned, at the suggestion of J. H. Knepper, member of the literature committee, the name of J. M. Ollinger, of the Meyersdale church was added to the committee. The committee found that to meet the requirements of the law for incorporation in the State of Pennsylvania, it was necessary to add a fifth member, and by unanimous vote of the members, the name of H. M. Berkeley, Attorney at Law, Somerset, Pennsylvania, was added. The request for a charter was properly advertised in the county papers, and before the close of the year 1892 the committee appointed by the Conference in August was organized and incorporated as the Brethren Book and Tract Committee, with its principal place of business at Meyersdale, Pennsylvania. After the articles of incorporation had been secured, we went to our respective homes, and in faith—it was all we had, probably not enough of that—set to work to carry out the wishes of the Conference which had created the committee.

Our first arrangement provided that B. C. Moomaw should proceed at once to the preparation of a Sunday school literature that would meet the demands of our Sunday schools in those earlier days when the requirements were fewer and simple, while the writer was to prepare the manuscript for a tract on Trine Immersion, to be the first of a series of doctrinal tracts. Before adjourning this arrangement was reversed, Brother Moomaw agreeing to write the tracts and the work of getting out the Sunday school literature was placed in my hands. This was an arrangement between Brother Moomaw and myself, and at the time it was not thought of any special significance, but as I now look back over the years that have passed I can easily see how this little transaction was the beginning of my relations with what was afterwards the Brethren Publication Board, as editor of the publications of which the board was the director and the guardian. Brother Moomaw went to work at once, and before many weeks passed we had the manuscript for a tract on Trine Immersion, the first edition twenty-five hundred copies) of which was exhausted in a few months, and another of ten thousand copies was brought out, and later still another edition of five thousand, every copy of which was sold before my relations with the Board ceased at the close of 1903.

Meanwhile I had given both time and thought to the work which the committee had imposed upon me, preparing the manuscript for the first issues of our Sunday school lit-

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Intensive Evangelism. By Charles A. Bame

Did you ever think how small the church was when Jesus held the first communion? The first thing in order, after the resurrection of Jesus, was to get ready for a revival. And at Pentecost the other crowd cried, "these men are full of new wine," but the evangelist answered, "No, they are full of the Spirit." Lots of the trouble with the fellow who howls against the revival today centers around wine and the conventional doings of society and the lack of the spirit of God.

The fact is we need revivals everywhere. I meet business men who tell me they are business evangelists. Our great institutions have their representatives out among the people getting them together and trying to impress them with the value of their institutions. Our financiers have been greatly rejoiced in the last few months because the threatened depression in business has been replaced by a revival.

Now, there are a lot of people who think that the church is gradually dying. They are asleep; they are uninformed. The Protestant churches have grown during the last century from seven per hundred of the population to 24 per hundred. The fact is the church has grown faster than most of the organizations and societies that have long been prophesying its early death. The total lodge membership of the United States is about 10,000,000 and a large number of these are repeaters, i. e., affiliated with more than one lodge; in spite of all kinds of social attractions they get but a fractional part of their membership to attend their meetings.

Socialism has become a great movement in our country. They polled a great vote at the last election. Yet there are but 150,000 Socialists, who regularly pay their dues. The church today has 40,000,000 in her ranks. Talk about killing the church; you might as well talk about tearing down Gibraltar with bare hands. It would be an easier job.

And yet no man who knows the church well would say that it is all that it ought to be. Its membership are only folks, just business people, and professional people and common people. They need revival in religion just the same as they do in business and politics.

But somebody says, "Let's educate them." The home and the schools and the regular church services and the Sunday school agencies for the cultivation of the Spirit. Now, let me not disparage the value of these agencies. They are valuable in the development of soul life. But merely educate a man mentally and morally and you have neglected the better third of his self. It is a confessed fact among preachers that these agencies do not reach the multitude. Many homes are unspiritual, many teachers are, even some Sunday school teachers and preachers, and some fool reformers are paying more attention to eugenics than to the new birth. Great social leaders in our big cities have recently confessed that they need more in the making of true life than social agencies. This feeling prompted them to take part in the great revivals known as Laymen's Missionary Movement and the Men and Religion Forward Movement.

God has always honored revivals. In the program of church officers given by Paul he mentions evangelists before pastors, as if revivals came first. Jesus said "make disciples" and then "Teach them to observe all things." Martin Luther, John Wesley, George Whitefield, Jonathan Edwards, Finney, Moody, Gipsy Smith, Evan Roberts, Billy Sunday, have all been honored of God, for their evangelistic messages. And what would the churches have been without them? The fact is they were ordained of God for their special work, endowed a thousand times more wonderfully than many of the pigmy, pugnacious, preachers who dare to criticize them.

In a great meeting of 15,000 people in Philadelphia

Evangelist Sunday had all the Christian people stand up and then asked that every person converted before 20 years old to sit down; then every one converted before 30, and only 17 remained standing; then all converted before 40 and only three remained, and then all converted before 50; and a lone man remained standing. Now, he said, how many of you professing Christians gave your hearts to God in revival meetings outside the ordinary church service. The air was a maze of uplifted hands. Oh, pshaw! anybody knows that the revival service is the recruiting agency of the church.

But can we have one here? I answer, "you can if you want it." Some people have a fool notion that revivals come at certain times and seasons, I declare that they come whenever the church of God gets awake and to work. I have never seen it fail.

Can a farmer have crops? Not if he does not plant and cultivate and reap. He can if he meets the conditions of getting a crop. Can a boy have an education? He can if he wants it enough. Can a woman have a good, pure, sweet life? She can if she will take time for the cultivation of sweet, pure womanhood, and quits gadding after the silly nonsense of a lot of her kind.

Do we need a revival?

I. As long as our country has infidels who spew out their infidelity to the populace the Christian people need to unite to win them from the dark outlook for their future. What did infidelity ever do for anybody anyway? Did it ever make a life more refined, or a home happier? Did it ever offer a better pillow for the head of a man—for the heart of a man—at the hour of dissolution? A study of the deaths of infidels ought to drive horror to the hearts of any man who disbelieves in the promises of Jesus?

II. As long as our country has men and women who profane their lips, their time and their talent, with the senseless issues of time, you need a revival.

III. As long as you have men and women unchurched and unchristian, you do not obey the command of your risen Lord if you do not use the last means to line them up for the best things in life. But you say, "can a church help?" I answer and I would like to speak loud enough that every man and woman might hear, that there is not a faculty of your being that the church cannot bless.

Can we get a revival?

I. We can if we get a proper perspective of the need of our fellowmen. Without Jesus they are lost. We need to bring him to them. We can. We must.

II. We need to get a proper perspective of ourselves. Are we fit ourselves to be used of God in carrying his holy message? If not, get right with God, and do it quick.

III. God will be with us. Jesus said, "I am with you always even unto the end." If we hear his command and follow him we shall be surprised in three weeks at what God has done for us, and what we have done for him.

How often we look back and regret that we did not follow the divine will, that we did not heed and obey and do right! How often we are disquieted and lose that calm and poise out of our lives because we do not the right!

The desire of rest planted in the heart is no sensual nor unworthy one; but a longing for renovation, and for escape from a state whose every phase is mere preparation for another equally transitory, to one in which permanence becomes possible through perfection. Hence the great call of Christ to men, that call on which St. Augustine fixed as the essential expression of Christian hope, is accompanied by the promise of rest; and the death bequest of Christ to men is peace.—Ruskin.

erature. There was but one thing in the way: It would require almost two hundred dollars to get out the first edition of the literature, not counting any remuneration for editorial service, for preparing manuscript for the Quarterlies, etc. This was a serious matter when it is considered that we did not have any money with which to work, except a small fund which Brother Knepper accumulated through quarterly collections from the churches. This, however, was to be used exclusively for tracts, and there were no funds available to meet the expense of getting out the literature.

I sent out printed circulars to all pastors of Brethren churches, (of whom there were but few), with these questions to which I requested immediate answer: (1) Will your school support Brethren literature, if satisfactory; (2) About what number each of an advanced Quarterly and an intermediate Quarterly would your school likely use? On filling out these blanks it was understood that schools were not obligating themselves to purchase a certain number of Quarterlies or any number at all. The object was to ascertain whether our schools were in sympathy with a movement that would provide for them a literature prepared and published by our own people.

Replies to these inquiries were favorable beyond my expectations, and I at once began preparations to put the literature on the market. It will be seen that the work incurred expense from the very beginning, printing of circulars, postage, etc. I decided, (and I now think wisely), to begin the first volume with April 1, instead of January 1, because of the many school which at that time hibernated during the winter months. I entered into contract with the publisher of the town paper for the mechanical work, and though not prepared to do a neat job, it was the best that could be done under the circumstances. It was not long until I found that I had assumed a burden which a man with the daily duties of a pastorate had no business to assume. I was then preaching twice every Sabbath, and in addition had the responsibilities and duties which a growing congregation of active people carries with it. However, with early and late hours, and frequent pulpit supplies, March 1, 1893 found the manuscript for the first number of the Brethren Quarterly ready for the printer, and by the twentieth of the month I was ready to mail. The following publications were announced, (1) The Brethren Quarterly; (2) The Youth's Quarterly; (3) Our Little Folks; (4) Cheering Words; (5) tracts of Apostolic Baptism, Faith, Repentance, Brief Sketch of the Plan of Salvation by B. C. Moomaw, and Baptism—What It Is, by the writer. (This tract has had a circulation of more than 30,000 copies). The Conference was apparently well pleased with the work of the committee, heartily endorsed it and wished it Godspeed.

This movement which resulted in giving to the church a Sunday school literature was in a very large measure an individual enterprise, as I was personally responsible for the expense involved in getting out the literature, as well as for all losses that might be incurred. For, though this committee was appointed by the Conference and authorized to do business under the auspices of the Brethren church, yet the church was not in a position to promise anything financially with which to prosecute the work or carry out the instructions of the Conference.

Soon after the National Conference of 1893 the man who had formerly printed our literature by contract sold his plant, and this left us without a publisher in Myersdale with an equipment to do our work. To get our printing done at city prices would have been suicidal, the income not being sufficient to warrant such an expense. This led to the purchase of a small printing outfit costing about one thousand dollars. The type and other material were selected with a view of meeting the demands of The Book and Tract Committee, the Quarterly being printed in small sheets on a jobber, thus avoiding the expense of a large cylinder press. I found, too, that it was now costing us less money to print the quarterlies than formerly and the new arrangement made it possible for the Book and Tract Committee to get on a good financial basis. The Committee was in no way responsible for the plant; it was a personal matter. It was not the intention that the Committee should own and control any printing material, hence this personal agreement.

In the year 1894 the National Conference met at Ashland, Ohio, August 25, and continued in session five days. Among the most important business of this Conference was the publishing interests of the church. Already there were those who looked upon the work of the Book and Tract Committee as a rival publishing house, and it was feared more or less friction between these interests would be the inevitable result as long as they were located at a different place and continued under separate management. The sentiment of the church, as represented by this Conference, was well nigh unanimous in favor of uniting these interests under one management and locating the business permanently at Ashland where the editor also should reside. (The Brethren Evangelist was then edited and printed at Ashland).

Having determined on this course the question of management and editorial supervision were extremely delicate as well as perplexing ones. Shall there be one editor for all the periodicals, or one for the BRETHREN EVANGELIST and another for the Sunday school literature? The Conference was in favor of but one editor who should have charge of all the literature with the privilege of securing such help as he might need. By resolution the Conference voted to elect the editor by ballot. The present editor of the Sunday school literature was chosen as editor of all the church's publications.

The years that followed the union of the Sunday school literature and the BRETHREN EVANGELIST were years of struggle, and financial embarrassment, though the promoters of our publishing interests seem never to have lost faith in the ultimate triumph of the cause for which they were willing to make great sacrifice. Burdened with a heavy debt which did not seem to diminish very rapidly while the management was paying or trying to pay eight percent interest on more than two thousand dollars, the Publication Board felt the necessity of wiping out the entire indebtedness, and to accomplish this much desired end it was apportioned among the several State and District Conferences, and to A. H. Lichty, was committed the management of the campaign which was to liquidate the entire indebtedness of the publishing interests. This was accomplished in due time, new material installed, and the work since then has gone forward very encouragingly. In a very large measure the credit for this achievement belongs to A. H. Lichty who, since then, has proven himself a worthy promoter of the Kingdom through the agency of the Young Men's Christian Association whose cause he has so successfully championed. His last promotion places him in a strategic position as a leader, with most commanding influence.

This brings the story of the development of our periodical literature up to the close of the year 1903, when C. F. Yoder, now in charge of the church's missionary station in the Argentina, South America, was called to the editorship of both the Brethren Evangelist and the Sunday school literature, in which office he continued for a period of between four and five years. At the National Conference of 1907 held at Winona Lake, the writer was again called to the editorship of both the church paper and the Sunday school literature. The General Conference of 1915 consummated a plan for a division of the editorial work of the literature, a step which should have been taken years before but was not taken for the reason that the financial condition of the business did not warrant the additional expenses involved. R. R. Teeter was elected Editor of the Brethren Evangelist and business manager for the Brethren Publishing Company, in which office he continued until the close of the year 1917, when another advanced step was taken and George S. Baer was called to the editorship of the Brethren Evangelist, while R. K. Teeter was to give his whole time to the management of the Company's business. The wisdom of this division of labor has been abundantly justified, even in the few years since the present plan went into effect. During these years the writer has continued as editor of the Sunday school literature.

The periodical publications issued by the Brethren Publishing Company, the official representatives of the church, include the following:

For the Church:

- 1 The Brethren Evangelist, the official organ of the church, its one denominational journal.
- 2 The Brethren Missionary, edited by L. S. Bauman of Long Beach, California, with Dr. J. Allen Miller as its business manager. Its sphere includes both home and foreign missions. Issued under the auspices of the Brethren Foreign Missionary Society.
- 3 The Woman's Outlook, with Mac Smith as editor and Mrs. Ira Slotter as business manager. It is issued under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Brethren church, formerly the Sisters' Society of Christian Endeavor.

For the Sunday School:

- 1 The Teacher and Educator, a publication for teachers of all grades.
- 2 The Brethren Advanced Quarterly, for ages 18 years and up.
- 3 The Illustrated Quarterly for Intermediate pupils, ages 13 to 17.
- 4 The Boys' and Girls' Quarterly, for pupils of Junior ages.
- 5 Primary Bible Stories, a beautifully illustrated paper for children of Primary and Beginner's ages.
- 6 The Angelus, a carefully edited paper, containing the best of continued stories and a great variety of other reading matter for young people and the home.

In addition to these publications the Brethren Publishing Company issues regularly as part of its Job Department output,—

- 1 The College Quarterly, by the College Administration.
- 2 Purple and Gold, a publication edited by the students of Ashland College, but under the auspices of the College Faculty.
- 3 Flashlight, the official publication of the Ashland High School.

That the Brethren Publishing Company has, in the past, failed to attain its high ideal in the making of a substantial and representative literature, is but natural; that it has made remarkable progress within the last four or five years is plainly evident to all who have had sufficient interest in the work to which the church has called it, to take note of the growth and development that have marked its progress during these years. That the present opportunity of the Company for the enlargement of its sphere of activity and the betterment of its output is unparalleled in its history is also clear to any one acquainted with its facilities to meet the larger requirements, since its removal to its now splendid location and with its up-to-date equipment. Of this the editor, Brother Baer, and the business manager, Brother Teeter, have more to say elsewhere in this issue of the Brethren Evangelist.

It is hoped that the whole church will interest itself more and more in this, one of the mightiest human agencies known to the world for the dissemination of Gospel truth, the molding of righteous sentiment, the defense and conservation of sound doctrine. May the Lord continue to bless in yet much larger measure this agency for the enlargement of the Kingdom.

Permanent Literature in the New Day. By Prof. J. A. Garber

At the request of the Editor, for the sake of the completeness of this special issue of the Evangelist, the writer is offering a few brief, hurried suggestions on the topic. Others have dilated on the subject in the conferences of recent years. Their words of urgency have fallen on deaf ears, or they have restrained ready writers from entering in where mature authors would hesitate to tread. At any rate, little has been produced in the form of permanent literature, great as has been the need.

The words "New Day" both warn us against and urge us to the task of writing for permanent purposes. The very idea reminds us that unless it be a work of extraordinary merit and exceptional value it will not be prized through more than a decade of years. If time diminishes the value of ancient writings, there is the greater urgency for a re-statement of time honored truth. To restate unchangeable reality in clarifying and convincing terminology and in fascinating and gripping language is a superlative task at once engaging and yet baffling.

But it must be performed; the need is unspeakably great. The demand is almost unprecedented. Lest these statements of relative difference seem to betray an ignorance of history let us recall several instances. When the truths taught by Jesus and the Apostles came into collision with the teachings of the Errorists of the subsequent period, the early Church Fathers, sensing the need, began to write epistles and homilies. These productions were augmented with the defenses of the Apologists of a later period. There numerous writings fortified the early Christians and enabled them to withstand the adroit and bold attacks on Christianity. Although the approach may differ, Christian faith is being attacked in this vaunted twentieth century. Its preservation and propagation will require both the spoken word and the printed page. This is particularly true of the Faith as believed and practised by the Brethren.

It seems superfluous to call attention to the dearth of permanent literature amongst us. It is very scant in volume and limited in variety. It deals almost exclusively with our peculiar doctrines, and their presentation bears the ear marks of an earlier day. Re-written they would be of very much greater value. A more attractive form would enhance their worth. Our history, replete with the romance and daring of faith, hope and love, awaits the pen of a Brethren historian endowed with historic insight and trained in handling historical processes. Our theology, resting wholly on a biblical and rational basis, tarries for the systematic and complete setting forth of some theologian of the first magnitude. Our policy, agreeing perfectly with the Scriptures, history and the best of democracy, remains misunderstood and malpracticed, waiting the authoritative expression of a specialist in church government. Our sermons, thoroughly evangelical and evangelistic, interesting and persuasive, are confined to the ears of hundreds when they might find an audience among thousands if committed to the printed page. Our peace policies, distinctly Christian,—applicable alike to individuals and nations in the adjustment of their differences—are being promulgated by others who more recently have seen the wisdom of adopting them, they scarcely knowing of our age-long belief and practices in this regard largely for the want of a proclamation beyond our confines. Oh brethren, who boast of a whole gospel for a whole world, need we add to these reflections, both disappointing and challenging, to impress upon our minds with the necessity and advantage of producing a permanent literature in this significant new day? How can it become a gospel for the whole world when it is not known beyond the reach of our weak voices? How can it reach farther without the printed page?

MISSIONS

To the Home Missionary Board of the Brethren Church, Assembled at Winona Lake, Indiana, September 1-7, 1919

Dear Brethren:

As your field secretary of the great Pacific Coast district, I hereby respectfully submit a brief synopsis of my labors and work during the past year. My district embraces everything west of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific Coast, and from Canada to Old Mexico. Perhaps my district is not so large as either of the other two, but I assure you that it required much time and travel to do what little I have done.

Our churches on the Pacific Coast are not all close together, but are as follows: six churches in the Southern California district, and five in the Northern California district, and three in the North-west district. In going from the Southern to the Northern district you must travel more than three hundred miles without seeing a Brethren church. After leaving the Northern district you must go five hundred miles to Ashland, Oregon, where we have a few faithful members. When we leave Ashland we travel eight hundred miles to reach our next Brethren church which is located at Sunnyside, Washington, and from here we travel two hundred miles to Spokane where we find the next Brethren church. This means that by traveling by rail from Long Beach, California, to Spokane, Washington, one will have traveled more than one thousand seven hundred miles. The round trip is more than three thousand four hundred miles. In addition to the above railway travel, I have traveled more than twelve hundred miles by automobile, which makes more than four thousand six hundred miles I have traveled while visiting the churches of my district.

We recently visited the Spokane church where we have a membership of more than 130 members, which, under the leadership of Brother Paul Miller have done excellent work. On the 10th of August they dedicated their new church. This building and lot has cost about $13,500, and I desire to compliment Brother Miller and his building committee, and will say that they have the best church for the amount of money expended, that I have ever seen. This property can not be duplicated anywhere in the United States today for less than $20,000. This means that they have made every dollar do the work of one dollar and fifty cents.

The Spokane field is a promising one and if the Lord tarries a few more years we will have one of the strongest churches of our brotherhood, located at Spokane, Washington.

At Sunnyside we have one of the most efficient organizations in our district. They have a membership of more than three hundred, and under the leadership of Brother Charles H. Ashman are surely doing splendid work for their Master. They have a large comfortable well arranged church building, fully equipped, including a pipe organ, etc. They also have a nice parsonage of seven rooms.

We will now speak of Ashland, Oregon.

Ashland now belongs to what is known as the Northwest district, which was recently organized at a meeting held at Spokane the first week of August. The Northwest district embraces the states of Oregon, Idaho, Washington and that portion of Montana west of the Rocky Mountains. The work at Ashland seems to have gone through some trying times. At one time the Brethren owned their church building, and were doing very well. For some reason, unknown to the writer, they lost it. They have a Sunday school and some preaching services. They are somewhat disorganized, and no doubt if we can render them a little assistance and furnish them with the proper leader, they will yet do a great work in their beautiful city of Ashland. The Mission Board of the Northwest district will have supervision of this work and we expect some of them too far away to attend services there.

Ripon is about midway between Turlock and Lathrop and is a small town like Lathrop. It is surrounded by a rich farming country. We own our own church building and Brother Leatherman lives here and has charge of the work. The membership is small, consisting of about forty members. The work has had its hindrances, but the people are hopeful and with Brother Leatherman at the helm we are expecting much progress in the near future.

Jenny Lind is the home of Brother and Sister Shank and they have done much for the work at this place. They had the misfortune to lose their church building by fire, and as the membership is small and badly scattered, they have not yet decided to build. We happened to call on them one day when they seemed much discouraged, and one of the first sentences uttered by Sister Shank was, "I know the Lord has sent you." We had a pleasant meeting with them, and again was I impressed that it pays to visit every nook and corner of our districts, even if they are like this one, many miles from railway and difficult to reach by auto.

Manteca is a thriving little town of possibly two thousand and is located in a rich agricultural district. Brother Wesley Platt lives here and has been working hard to build up a work at this place. The Brethren have been preaching here in a union building which has proven unsatisfactory.

The Northern California conference was held here last March. It was at this wonderful conference that the Brethren of this district were impressed with the idea that they should have a church building of their own, and the last day of the conference they raised over $5,000 with which to start the work, and a new church will be dedicated there this fall.

We will now speak of the Southern California district, the one in which we live. This is the largest district from the standpoint of membership, as we have over 1200 members in it. There are six churches in this district as follows: La Verne, First Church of Los Angeles, Compton Avenue of Los Angeles, Whittier, Long Beach and Fillmore. These churches are all in a prosperous condition, have efficient pastors and are prepared to do the greatest year's work in their history. Two members of the Southern California Mission Board have recently purchased two lots at a cost of $3,000, which are located in Santa Ana, California, a town of 1,200 inhabitants. We are getting ready to start a new work there next year. At present we do not have a membership in Santa Ana, nor one anywhere near it, but by God's help we expect to have many of them in the next few years if the Lord tarries.

I desire to say a word in regard to the Bible conferences and the importance of them, which we held the past year in each of our good reports from them during the next year.

We will next speak of the Northern California district. In this district we find the following places of worship, Turlock, Lathrop, Ripon, Jenny Lind, and Manteca. Turlock is a town of 6,000 and the Brethren have a good church building here, also a nice parsonage. They have a membership of 200. Brother Francis J. Reagan is the pastor and is doing splendid work.

Lathrop is the oldest Brethren organization in California, having been established more than sixty years ago. The Brethren here worship in a union building which they largely own and control. They have a good Sunday school, but no resident pastor. About one hundred hold their membership at Lathrop, but they are very badly scattered, and many districts. We held these in conjunction with our business meetings. The Northwest district held their Bible conference and business meeting at Spokane, and closed with the dedication of their new church on August 10th, at which meeting a free will offering was taken which amounted to nearly $4,000. This was the first Bible conference held in the new district and was greatly appreciated by all present. They are already making plans for the Bible conference to be held next August at Sunnyside, Washington. If you could have heard the words of commendation, and appreciation, I am sure that you would do your best to see that they have this privilege each year.

Last March we held a Bible conference and business meeting at Manteca which is in the Northern district. This meeting lasted only a week, the same as the Spokane conference. It was an excellent meeting and said to be the greatest of its kind ever held in their district. At this meeting many of our Northern district Brethren were inspired to do greater things for God. They are planning for another conference next year.

Last but not least is our Southern Bible conference. This meeting is always held in Long Beach during the month of July, a time when many Brethren like to come to the coast for their vacations. This meeting lasts ten days and is always well attended. We secure most of our speakers from outside of our own district, and give our own pastors a rest and a chance to hear the other preachers. This necessarily incurs considerable expense, which last year amounted to $750, five hundred of this had been pledged by the churches of the district at the previous conference and the balance was easily raised by a freewill offering.

Recommendations

First, that the Mission Board continue their help to the Spokane work for another year, at which time I feel sure they will gladly take care of themselves.

Second, that Sister Vianna Detwiler be sent to Ashland, Oregon to do preliminary work preparatory to re-organizing the work there.

Third, we recommend that the Mission Board pay daily for the great work on the Pacific Coast.

By the grace of God and his help we expect to develop the Pacific Coast district as rapidly as possible, and I assure you we will ask you for as little financial assistance as can be consistently expected.

Your in the blessed hope,

HENRY V. WALL, Secretary.

OUR LITTLE MISSIONARY SENDS SAD NEWS

Ouesso, French Equatorial Africa,
September 22, 1919.

Dear Little friends:

It is only ten days since I wrote you, but these are very full days, and as we are going on up river soon, I am anxious to send this back to you from Olesso.

When I wrote you last Aunt Mary was ill, but we all hoped she would get well. She was ill just five days and then Jesus took her home. It was so hard for her to leave us all, and especially dear Uncle Antoine and Marie and Julia, but she only wanted to do Jesus' will, whether to live or die. As she was dying, she saw Jesus, and reached up her arms, lovingly and trustingly to him.

Of course I cannot understand how deep is the suffering in Uncle Antoine's heart, but we all pray so much for him.

Dear Marie and Julia are so sweet and brave and think of their mamma always as with Jesus. Marie was sick again after her mamma died and so was Aunt Toddy. Uncle Antoine too had a rise of temperature and all of us were suffering deeply physically as well as spiritually but Jesus sustained us.

Mamma and Aunt Toddy dressed Aunt Mary in a simple white dress. Daddy and some of the other men made a plain box for the coffin. It was lined with white and Aunt Mary's body was placed in it and put in a little boat at the side for after she died we had to travel nearly two days before we could bury her. Mamma says she has never known anybody to be kept in the tropics that long after death.

When we got to Ikelemba it was late in the forenoon but a smaller boat had sped ahead and by noon the grave was dug. All of us who were well enough went up to the top of the hill where the soldiers put dear Aunt Mary's body in the grave. I commenced to cry but Julia said "Don't cry, Marguerite. You shall see your Aunt Mary again. We shall see her in heaven, and we shall see her always, for there is no dying there." As I looked into dear Julia's solemn face, I felt comforted. Uncle Antoine said, "Yes, dear children, Jesus will take dear mamma's body, too, when he comes." "Yes," Julia said, (and Mamma smiled through her tears) "When Jesus comes, it will be nothing for him to raise up mamma. He can go right down through this dirt with his eyes open."

But when we got back to the cabin, where Marie, who is older and wiser, was lying, she said that "Jesus wouldn't have to go down through the dirt to get her mamma, but that he would just call, and her mamma would come up again." We are all so hopeful in Jesus for we know that he doeth all things well.

When we got here to Ouesso, the kind government official had a house ready waiting for us. It has three rooms, and a wide verandah, and is a much finer house than any we have lived in since we left Loanda. We are very comfortable here, and are all living as one big family again, for when there is only one mamma there can be only one home. We all love Jesus and one another, and soon, very soon, we believe we will be privileged to win many souls to him. Please pray for us all, and especially for dear Uncle Antoine and Marie and Julia. Lovingly,

HOME MISSIONS

It is always interesting to know how the rest of the world lives. We should consider it a duty to study missions that we may give of our time, strength, money and prayer to promote the cause of Christian missions.

There are men, women, and children suffering from vice, spiritual famine and death. Nothing is more important than keeping up with the times in regard to missionary news. Knowledge of the great needs brings responsibility. We owe a personal debt to Christ for our lives, liberty, knowledge, and opportunity. God calls us to make the best possible use of our lives and of our money.

Personal love for the Lord Jesus Christ will give us the spirit of missions. "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel." And "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the world." There is no promise of a blessing without obedience.

The Home Mission Board comes to you this year for a large offering. It comes at a time when our barns are filled with the most bountiful harvest, and our hearts are overflowing with thanksgiving.

This year the women of the Brethren church have launched one of the greatest campaigns ever, the $10,000 Mission Fund. We expect to reach the goal. Let us as a body of women also be interested in the Home Mission offering and give according to our ability.

Sometimes we are so terribly interested in those who are on the "other side," we forget those at home.

What wonderful things we might do if we would only take God at his word and put individual hearts into his work.

We have only one life to live, let us invest it in the way it will be of greatest service.

I can not, I dare not, go up to judgment until I have done all God enables me to do to diffuse his glory to the world.

MRS MARY C. WENGER.

(Sister Wenger's article which should have appeared in the special Home Mission number of the Evangelist last week, but failed to reach the Evangelist office in time, because, as we learned, "the flu" had Sister Wenger under its care for a while. But her article is still in season and so we publish it.—Editor).

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

Brother W. H. Miller began a series of meetings at Salem school house on Tuesday night, October 27. I sent a short report from Oak Hill and Salem a few weeks ago. As reported then we have secured a pastor in the person of Brother Wm. Miller. He has taken charge of the work at Oak Hill and Salem. He is just beginning his protracted meetings and you will likely hear more from us soon. We ask an interest in the prayers of all the Brethren. May God richly bless his labors and help both pastor and church to labor faithfully for the saving of lost souls.

Pray for us.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

FIELD REPORT OF THE EVANGELISTIC LEAGUE

The Evangelistic and Bible Study League is the name of a new organization with which I have cast my lot for the coming year. This movement is largely a laymen's movement in the church as far as its origin and support is to be considered.

In brief the purpose of the organization is three-fold—promoting evangelism, Bible conferences and Bible study. The plan is simple: Membership to the league is obtained by signing a covenant card and paying an annual fee of $1.00 or more. The officers are annually elected by the membership. Its work will be to place in the field competent evangelists and Bible teachers whose service will be available to the church at large.

My own conviction of the need of this organization and the work which it plans to do, led me to ask the Dayton church to release me as its pastor and to take the field in promoting the work by accepting the office as Field Secretary for the League.

I think it is generally understood that we have a dearth of evangelists and Bible lecturers. The great reason for this is due to the fact of a numerically small denomination and that only about seven months in the year is evangelistic work desired, so that a man who gives his entire time to this field does not find a sufficient financial compensation to support his family. Not only this, but the smaller churches and mission points are often passed over for the larger churches by the evangelist, so that the churches that need help the most do not secure it. The plan of the League is to place just as many men in the field as its funds will permit, secure the best men possible for the work, guarantee them a living salary and make it possible for all our churches to have the service of our stronger men. Those desiring to become better informed as to this work may address H. V. Wall, 200 Grand Avenue, Long Beach, California. Members on the Board of Directors have been secured from our strongest leaders in every church and conference district and so far has been received with favor, being endorsed by several of our district conferences and our new Laymen's Movement. The National Evangelistic Association by unanimous consent merged into the League. I am satisfied that there are wonderful possibilities in this movement which will serve as an important agency in the proposed big drive in church extension work, and it deserves the fullest support of the ministry and membership of the church.

Spokane, Washington

It was my privilege to be present at the Bible Conference of the new Northwest Conference District. It was my first opportunity of working with our Brother J. Allen Miller, who is First Vice President of the League. Brother Charles Ashman, Sister Detwiler and the pastor of the Spokane church, Paul Miller, were very congenial workers to be associated with. A splendid conference was conducted, which was well attended and appreciated.

We dedicated the church on the closing Sunday of the conference. I am interested in the work here in a special way, as I had a small part in its beginning, in that I preached the first Brethren sermon in Spokane, held the first meeting, baptized the first converts and conducted the first communion.

Sister Detwiler, Brother Paul Miller and the brethren need to be commended for their faithfulness and efficiency. One of the finest church buildings of the brotherhood is to be found there, well located and tastily arranged. Our property is worth $20,000.00 and has only about a $3,000 encumbrance. The field is very promising and there is no reason why we should not in time have one of our strongest churches in this place. After the conference we remained one week with Brother Miller and preached, closing with a communion service.

Winona Lake, Indiana

The National Conference at Winona is now history and so much has been said about it, I feel there is very little that can be added. It was one of our best conferences, in that a constructive program was followed and some steps taken that will make for better and bigger things in the church. We are all anxiously looking forward to next year, THE VICTORY YEAR and VICTORY CONFERENCE and for the CHURCH EXTENSION PROGRAM. I am impressed as never before of the need of a united front with a unified program, with concerted action and the necessity of one message and absolute loyalty to the ONE BOOK. The Brethren church to succeed must voice her message, push her claims and doctrines to the front, have an individuality and give a personal message to the world.

Dayton, Ohio

I was back on the "old 'camp ground'" among some of God's best for a few days after close of the Winona Conference. Here in the Gem City we found our dear Brother Cobb going on to victory with a united church back of him. Cobb has done a good work in Dayton and under him the church has gone forward. Brother Cobb is one of the Directors of the League and as I presented our work on a week day evening, a typical Dayton congregation was present and responded largely and enthusiastically to our work. We left Dayton for Dallas Center, Iowa, of which we will write later.

W. S. BELL.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

We have had some pleasant experiences since our last report to the Evangelist. During the month of September we held our revival with Brother Bell as the Evangelist. Brother Bell did us a great service by his evening messages and the afternoon Bible lectures. We were hindered by almost incessant raining during the period of the meeting but a good number of our people did not stop to consider physical conditions but came out to be instructed in the Word of God. I was again impressed with the fact of the attractiveness of the Word of God even in a busy, age like this. Ten of our young people made the great confession during the meeting. Two young people made the confession during the summer at our regular services and since the meeting three have made their confession, one of this number being the head of a home. All have been baptized and received into the church.

Sunday, November 1, we held our fall communion service which was the largest attended of any communion service since I have been pastor of the church. The spirit of the service was deep. We have reason to feel that our people do not care for these sacred things and love their Lord.

Our people are heroically endeavoring to do their part in the general work of the church. The number of those who can give largely is small but every one of the active members tries to do their very best. It is inspiring to any pastor to have his church take hold of the general program of the brotherhood as this church has done and I am exceedingly anxious that none of us will become weary in the great task of the church. R. F. PORTE.

RIO CUARTO, ARGENTINA

Time seems to fly more rapidly here than anywhere I have ever been. Perhaps that is because there is so much to do that the time at our disposal is not enough to do the things we wish to do. I have not written for the Evangelist as often as I should but will try to do better. We have meetings every night in the week except Monday night and with so many visits to make and other work the time goes. Since writing last we have had two more public confessions of conversion, two mothers of families are now bringing their children, but the fathers are not yet interested. One of them is a drunkard.

But we have to report further losses by members going to other parts to work. We have had so many such losses this year that it has been hard to more than keep even. However, we are working hard to go ahead. We are planning to reach two hundred in the Sunday school by Christmas. I am transplanting the program of a Christmas pageant that was given me by Brother Porte and we have a background for it from Cook & Company and hope to present it in the open air at Christmas.

We have just had another silver medal temperance contest which was a success. The house was crowded and the program was well rendered. The wife of the mayor was one of the judges. Our Sunday school girls took part this time and we hope to have another for boys in November. The number of those who have signed the pledge not to use alcohol or tobacco has now passed one hundred. In this country scarcely one man in a hundred is free from the vile tobacco slavery while liquors are sold in the groceries as well as the other usual places. Within a block of us there are five drinking places. We feel proud of our country for the stand it has taken and the example it is giving to the world in high ideals, although there are some things that still cause us shame.

New doors of opportunity are opening to us, and we are confident that the Lord has many more here who are some day to rejoice with us in life eternal. But we are eager for the arrival of Brother and Sister Sichel so that we can begin the work of evangelizing the district with the Bible Coach.

Rio Cuarto, Sept. 6, 1919. C. F. YODER.

FROM LANARK, ILLINOIS

On October 12th, our pastor began our revival services, and at the end of three weeks we closed with a communion service on Sunday evening, November 2nd. Our pastor, Brother B. T. Burnworth did the preaching for two weeks when Brother Beachler came and did the preaching for the last week of the meeting and also canvassed the Lanark congregation for college endowment. The weather during most of the time was most unfavorable especially so was it during the last week. However, on Saturday and Sunday the weather was fine and the attendance at the Sunday services were splendid. The communion was the largest yet, and Brother Snyder and some of his members were up from Milledgeville and enjoyed the service with us.

The immediate results of the meetings was ten accessions to the church, with several applications. Notwithstanding the inclement weather, the meeting was a success.

The church and Sunday school are in good working order and our present outlook is favorable.

We are sorry to say that since we have returned home we have missed every communion here at Lanark. This time I was at Waterloo, Iowa, preaching for the church there. No one is to blame for this as it just seemed to happen so each time. Our pastor and Brother Beachler did themselves credit in the preaching of the Word during the evangelistic meetings.

Z. T. LIVENGOOD,
Church Correspondent.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

On Sunday morning, October 26th, I began the canvass at Lanark, Illinois. Through a previous arrangement of Brother B. T. Burnworth the pastor, my week at Lanark was to mark the third and last week of his revival meeting. This idea was an experiment to me and I was not just sure that it would work out satisfactorily; however, we endeavored to do the best we could, and notwithstanding being rained out entirely two nights the results were fairly good. I will leave it to the pastor to report the meeting as he chooses. The canvass for endowment and the revival meeting closed with a very fine, and largely attended communion service on the night of November the 2nd. It was an exceptionally impressive and helpful service. I counted it a real privilege to be there.

The result for endowment was $2800. I tried hard to have Lanark stand on tiptoe and make it even $3000. There are yet other returns to come from there which may bring the final result well toward $3000. But in the light of at least two considerations I feel that we can say that Lanark did well. First, Lanark has enlarged her church building within the last year at a cost of practically $10,000; and second, Lanark is confronted with the parsonage question. It is a matter that cannot be deferred to a very great distance in the future. Thus in view of this I can praise Lanark for what has been done.

On account of bad roads and the rush of corn picking, and worse still, on account of my week at Lanark being moving week for the pastor the work went slow. But we made the best of everything and had a good time with it all. The Lanark congregation has in it many splendid, loyal people. And the fact that two of Lanark's young ladies are at the head of the two departments of music in our school has made Lanark's interest in the college still more deep and vital. There will be students at Ashland next year from Lanark. Brother Burnworth has done a great work at Lanark and his people highly appreciate him and his family and his work.

Lanark put another man in the $1000 class. This is always a source of satisfaction to me. And I take particular care to announce again that there is still a lot of room in the $1000 class. I am wondering who next will want some of that room.

The home of Brother Ed Puterbaugh and his good wife was my general headquarters. It was a joy to be in this home. I shall not be able to forget that I was there. I was also entertained in the Burnworth, Livengood, Heimbaugh, Myers and Truman homes and for the kindness of all of these good folks I am truly grateful. I wish the very best and a lot of it for the Lanark people.

From Lanark I came to Garwin. This is a country congregation and I regard it as one of the most thriving, promising country churches I have visited. Brother Freeman Ankrum is the pastor and his people love him. He had made fine preparation for the canvass in his church but alas, the weather, the roads, and corn picking made it practically impossible to finish the canvass at this time. A nice start was made but we shall simply have to go back when the weather is right to complete the work. We are resolved to give Garwin a fair chance in this endowment campaign. This church has had some matters of its own to take care of too during the past year. One item was the wiping out of the debt on the parsonage, but they did it. And then they raised the salary of their pastor in a splendid manner, and Garwin can feel a just pride in the fact that their pastor is well housed and well paid. The big revival meetings Garwin has had in the past several years has certainly brought a fine lot of people into this congregation. And when Garwin is finally canvassed for endowment I have no fears about the results.

In my last report I said the mercury stood at $121,000. If I had given the exact figures it would have been almost $122,000; and with the result from Lanark added on, besides other gifts which have come from individual sources the mercury is now $125,000.

I now return to Ohio to push the work in that state until it is completed. This will take us well through the winter.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

COLLEGE NEWS

The work of the College goes steadily forward with some new enrollments every week. At present there are 94 in the College, 39 in Voice and 41 in Piano. Excluding duplicates, there are now 167 enrolled in the school.

Rev. and Mrs. Maus and Mrs. Wineland from Bryan, Ohio, were visitors on the hill recently. The College always welcomes former students. More ought to renew their acquaintance and thus keep in touch with the new developments.

There came to my desk within the past week, three extended questionnaires relative to the College. One was from the state office, one from a well known college directory and one from the Inter-Church World Movement. All made rather direct inquiry into the vital affairs of your College. Not to have answered these fully, would at once put us under suspicion and to answer them in detail may be embarrassing.

This latter questionnaire, viz., that from the Inter-Church World Movement, contained 35 pages on which were listed about 1000 questions. These questions had to do with the number enrolled in the college with comparative figures for the past three years; number of teachers, with their academic records, their pay and hours of teaching per week; finances, including mortgages, if any, income in money, total assets, etc.; requirements for graduation, number of honorary degrees granted; number of scientific societies to which members of the faculty belong (sic); the number of voluntary college associations to which Ashland belongs, and whether it was ever refused admission to any (sic); recognition of the State school system, including the state universities; church connections and religious influences; states and counties from which students come; sanction as to the use of tobacco, dancing, etc.; freedom in teaching Geology, Sociology, Biology, and Bible; chapel exercises, compulsory attendance on Sunday services, etc., etc. It will take several weeks to compile accurate answers to this set of questions alone. It is evident that nothing can any longer be done in secret concerning the activities of a college. The day of making swaggering statements about a school is over. Not a few colleges reported almost every year that their enrollment "had increased ten percent," that their "standards were as high as the highest," that they offered unparalleled opportunities for self culture," that their "faculties were experts," that "the college was formerly in debt but now under skillful management it was freed from all incumbrances," while catalogs were padded and bluff passed for serious facts.

I was also asked to remember what is generally known as the "minimum college," viz., one teacher with the Master's degree for every ten students, and a total yearly income of thirty thousand dollars, ten thousand of which must be spent on library, and the rest mostly in salaries. The readers of this paper may have a slight appreciation of how your President feels when facing such a questionnaire, but you will never quite know until you have it to do yourself. And what is more, such answers as I will give can not be given after five years from now, for the very simple reason that such colleges will cease to exist! I have been insisting for some years that Ashland must be saved and saved now and I am not writing this with a pessimistic thought in mind, but to bring you face to face with what we have to meet. We have a splendid body of young people here. I believe we have a mission but it is hard to convince the world that this is so. It has but one yard stick viz., efficiency.

Now no matter how I answer, our catalogs will reveal much of the truth and what is more, I WANT THE TRUTH AND THE WHOLE TRUTH to be known about Ashland. In this direction and in this alone lies salvation and that is why I am, amidst a great pressure of work, writing these notes myself this year. I take it that it is not important who visited with whom over Sunday or who broke his shoe-string the other day, but that it is important to know about the fundamental conditions of your College. This column so long as I write it, will contain nothing trifling, but I hope every reader of the Evangelist will turn to it and find from time to time statements of importance to the whole church. We are dead in earnest here at Ashland, all of us,—Faculty, students and Board members, and I want this spirit to infect the whole brotherhood. I court the fullest investigation as well as the closest co-operation. I am watching with prayer and a good deal of anxiety, Brother Beachler's reports from week to week. The church is responding nobly, but the gifts will be wholly inadequate unless we do our very best. I am convinced that the church does not yet fully realize that this is our day of grace, our hour of salvation. If things go wrong, if we are defeated here at Ashland, no one can say that the warning was not sounded. We who are watchmen on the wall must not give any uncertain sound. Our mission is all too sacred a trust for us to be unfaithful at this critical hour.

There will doubtless need to be an early Board meeting to consider the rather perplexing questions of the next few years of Ashland's activities. Do not forget among other interests, to pray for your college at Ashland.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

Business Manager's Corner

HOW DO WE LOOK?

Of course you looked at the first page of this week's Evangelist the first thing; but now that you have seen how the new home of the Brethren Publishing Company, looks and perhaps have compared it with the cut of the "old home" as it appears on another page, won't some of you write and tell us what you think about it?

From the time the two newspapers of Ashland combined, more than eight months ago, the Business Manager began planning to see if there could not be some way discovered whereby this building could be secured for the home of The Brethren Publishing Company. The prospects did not seem very promising at first, but we did not give up and finally we were rewarded by being given an opportunity to present the matter to the Publication Board at Winona Lake and then to do the same thing before a meeting of the College trustees. The result was a decision reached by both boards to buy the building in partnership.

The success of our efforts was announced in September, but we have been disappointed that we have not yet been able to get the whole plant into operation on account of the great difficulty in securing electric motors. Two of our cylinder presses, including our big Optimus press, recently purchased, are standing idle and must remain so until we receive the motors from the factory. We are looking for these any day, now and we hope to be soon running in full force.

We had hoped to get this special number of the Evangelist out on our new press, but since the motor has been delayed so long we felt it would not be wise to wait any longer, so we are still using the old press, even though it is impossible to get as good results from it as we had hoped to do. But business is good, and though we have added three more workers to our force we are still rushed from one week's end to another, and there is no let up yet in sight. When we get all our presses in running order we are sure we will be compelled to secure additional workers to help us take care of the business that we feel certain is to be had right in Ashland. We must now go forward.

The Evangelist Campaign

Everything looks good for the VICTORY year for the Evangelist. Churches that have been on the Honor Roll are renewing their contracts for another year and we are getting the promises from a number of other churches that they will win a place on the Roll by the first of the year. Since our last report two churches have renewed their whole lists and will retain their places on the Honor Roll. First, is the New Paris, Indiana, church with Brother I. A. Duker, recently ordained, as their pastor. Then the Ashland church has just renewed its budget list for the Evangelist, making this the third year for Ashland, and we have never heard the faintest suggestion from any member of the church that they should go back to the old way of securing individual subscriptions. It would be just as reasonable to canvass a congregation to see how many would buy Sunday school quarterlies and then come to Sunday school. But in addition to this we have recently received word from one of Ohio's pastors that their church had adopted the budget system for the Evangelist and that they would soon send in their full list. We will not announce the name of the church until the list has been received in this office. Then the pastor of another wide-awake church notified us that his church had decided to win a place on the Honor Roll and that he was confident that it would succeed. All this is cheering news to us and we trust that more of the momentum gained during the last three years may be lost in this, the last and the VICTORY year of our campaign. We should work together this next year in a manner that has never as yet been seen in the Brethren church. We can, if we will, reach the goal set for us. Brother pastors and church officers, will you please help us to win this victory.

White Gifts for the King

AT CHRISTMAS TIME

Every Sunday school in the brotherhood ought to have a White Gift Christmas service at which time the "White Gift" idea shall find public expression in the gift of self, service and substance. The primary idea in a "white gift" is that it shall be untainted by any self-interest, and it is in the thoughtful and prayerful determination of each heart as to what its gift shall be that the best preparation for this service consists.

WHAT WILL YOU GIVE TO

Observations Regarding Our Church News Department

As this issue is chiefly devoted to church news it occurred to us that some thoughts concerning the writing of church news and their effect might be fitting. And so we release our thoughts and give them to you for what they are worth.

In the first place we have been struck with the popularity of that department of our paper. There are a few thoughtful, selective readers who may turn to the "General Articles" first, or to the sermon page; some devoted spirits may peruse the "Devotional" first, and a few others may turn first to other departments. But a very great majority of our readers devour the church news first. Testimonies to this effect are to be had on every hand; we hear them in public at our conferences and in private conversations with individuals and we also get them in our correspondence. There are doubtless various reasons. Church news in its very nature is narrative in form. It is a recital of things done, a description of action. It is in that realm that most people live and that is what we like to hear about. A narrative is easily visualized; it deals with the concrete; it requires comparatively little mental effort to be grasped, and so we revel in it. Church news deal with religious fruit bearing more than religious seed-sowing and nurturing and it is human nature to be more interested in the harvest than the seeding. But whatever the reasons, the fact remains that the church news department is the most widely read part of our church paper. Regardless of position, training or environment, we are all anxious for any news of the progress of the Kingdom or efforts towards its advancement. There is no more important part of the paper than that which satisfies this desire. And it is our desire to make The Evangelist fulfill this function in the most satisfactory way.

Another thing we have observed, not to a very great extent, and yet sufficiently to warrant a remark on the subject: There are a few noble souls who are fearful of making full use of the church news department of our paper, lest their motives be misunderstood. They fear that a frequent use of these columns may be taken to indicate a desire to bring glory to their own parish and undertakings. Some very good friends have expressed themselves in that strain, and there is every reason to believe they are sincere. However, it is quite possible that they are mistaken, that their fears are not well grounded, as a rule. First, because it is those who are seeking to "blow their own horns" are not hesitant about it and usually their tone makes the fact evident. Second, it is very much less frequent than we suppose that others attribute wrong motives to our regular correspondence. Third, very often when ulterior motives are attributed to us for writing concerning our accomplishments, it is due to our own indiscreet and perhaps extravagant statements. As a rule, when we write conservatively and sincerely, having in mind the glory of Christ and the welfare of the church, there is very little danger of our being misunderstood. However, even if there should be that danger (and I sympathize with my timid and cautious friends), yet the good that may be gained for the cause of Christ in general and for the local church in particular is too great to be sacrificed on account of the remote possibility of being misjudged personally.

Among the various benefits resulting from a wise and faithful use of the church news department the following will doubtless be in evidence: It delights the local congregation to read reports of their activities in their church paper. Very likely the pastor can testify to the pleasure his people have experienced in reading reports concerning their progress and plans. It encourages many who are discouraged with local conditions. Sometimes when things are not going as we would like in our own local work, we become despondent and think the church is losing out; but then when we read that other churches have been more fortunate than ours and are accomplishing things that are worth while, we take courage and pursue our tasks with new determination. It keeps the brotherhood informed as to the work that is being done and makes it possible for the leaders to know how their plans are working out. It furnishes a stimulus to energetic endeavor, for if a people's activities are to be reported, they will make an effort to do a work that will make possible a creditable report. It brings to our attention object lessons of failure and success, and from them we learn how more effectively to prosecute the work of the Kingdom. So many and so important are the benefits of a church newspaper that we ought not to think of failing to make the largest possible use of it.

At this point the question may occur to you, How can we make the best possible use of our church news department? The following brief suggestions may be of help:

1. Write briefly. Nothing more definite than that can be stated; how briefly must be left to the good judgment of the writer. But it is well to bear in mind that a brief article is more widely read than a long one. The wise advertisers write briefly and to the point; the wise church writer will do the same.

2. Write frequently. This will be made both possible and necessary if we write briefly. If we write frequently we will not have so much to report and can easily write briefly. A short letter every six weeks is worth more to the congregation reported to the brotherhood than a very long letter every six months.

3. Write regularly. Set a time for reporting your work to your church paper and be as religious in the prosecution of that duty as in church attendance, teaching a class or preaching a sermon. Do not think that you must wait until something unusual happens before you write. Be observant and write of the gradual growth and the interesting services and events that come in the ordinary routine.

4. Write truthfully. This is not meant to insinuate that any one would purposely misrepresent a situation, but there is sometimes a danger that we may fail to distinguish between the ideal we are hoping to attain and that which we have actually accomplished.

Keeping close to the facts and writing conservatively is the best advertisement in the long run.

5. Write optimistically and encouragingly. That does not mean to exaggerate, for we have just warned against that. But it does mean to tell the good things about your parish, your people and your accomplishments. Tell of your faith and not of your doubts or misgivings as to plans about to be undertaken. Tell of the times when your co-workers were faithful and not when they were unfaithful. Give others the bright side; they usually have enough of the discouraging of their own.

6. Write humbly and not egotistically. The words of the bragadocio are always discounted. Any word for public consumption must be given with sincerity and without presumption if it is to be taken at face value. Humility is a fundamental requisite of acceptable service of any sort, and it is especially necessary here.

7. Write for the glory of Christ and for the magnifying of his church. When such a noble purpose is kept in mind there will be no danger of exalting self and bringing honor to our leadership. Whatever gifts we have or accomplishments we realize, all are made possible by the strength of him who worketh in us and through us, and causes us both to will and to do his good pleasure. We are stewards of the manifold grace of God, let us give God the glory.

These remarks do not imply that it is our thought that the pastor should do all the writing of church news. It is a fine thing where conditions and talent at hand make it advisable to have laymen write the news. From laymen and pastors alike we have received the most hearty support, and if these suggestions contain anything of worth for any of our correspondents, we shall rejoice in the fact that we have been of service. And if our correspondents have any suggestions that will enable us to make the paper serve the brotherhood more efficiently, we shall receive them very kindly.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

One of the most enterprising conferences is the Middle West, or formerly the Kanemorado. Their report is given in this issue and we wish to congratulate Brother Yoder on the good report he makes.

Among the members of the Publishing Board who have visited us in our new home is Dr. W. S. Bell whom we were privileged to show through the building on Thanksgiving day. We shall be glad to have other board members come to visit us.

Any churches that can make use of a "Gospel Team" during the Christmas holidays will find to their advantage to get in touch with Brother W. R. Deeter, Ashland, Ohio, at the earliest possible moment.

Brother Bell gives us a report of his work with Brother Porte at Dallas Center. Though they were confronted with the handicap of rain and mud during the entire time doubtless much good was accomplished. Brother Bell also tells us of his further travels and work.

Brother W. E. Beahm, of Roanoke, Virginia, reports that the church worshipping in Boon Chapel shared very generously in the results of a revival meeting held by the Church of the Brethren people. We would judge that a commendable spirit of Christian harmony prevails in the church community.

Dr. Jacobs supplies the readers of the Evangelist with another installment of "College Notes." He always has something of real interest to tell us, and we have assurance that he will continue his correspondence regularly. We are all anxious to keep in touch with the college.

Brother Ashman and his good people at Snnnyside, Washington, are making splendid progress, as we learn from his letter. Every department of the church's work seems to be in good condition; especially is the Sunday school enjoying a degree of efficiency and growth that is enviable.

You will be encouraged by reading the report of Brother Boek, who tells us of the trials and at the same time the encouraging things about his work at Carlotá, Argentina. These are days of struggle, but we are sure God will lead him through to victory. We are sorry to learn that Brother Boek has had the "grip," but rejoice that he has recovered. Other letters he may have sent than those we have published must have been lost, for we have not received any.

How soon the patience and persistence of youth gives out, is a matter of common observation. It has the daring boldness that rushes heedlessly into the fight, but it soon grows weary of a siege. But it is staying power that tells in the worth-while accomplishments of this world.

Brother L. G. Wood, of Roanoke, Virginia, and his good people have made arrangements for their fifth year of work together. This church is in fine working order, and is awake to the needs of others, as is noticed by the fact that they are willing to loan their pastor to other needy places round about for evangelistic work.

The Philadelphia First church is rejoicing over the success of their revival meeting under the direction of their pastor, Brother McClain, and the evangelist, Brother Cobb, of Dayton. It was a most successful meeting, as you will note by the number of conversions resulting.

We are in receipt of "A Pastoral Message" sent out by Brother Lyon to his parishioners in Washington, D. C. He says he makes liberal use of the "pen ministry" and finds that it pays. He asks that a request be made for prayer in behalf of his work at that place. May there be a liberal response.

Confidence in an undertaking is the first great requisite to its accomplishment. To believe a thing can be done is to surmount its greatest barrier to it. But however absolute our confidence or unquestioning our belief, it may all be very foolish unless, consciously or otherwise, it is undergirded by a faith in God.

It was in the issue published during General Conference week that we made mention of the death of Brother Cassel, but it has been our hope ever since that a memorial might be written by some of those who knew him best. The fulfillment of that hope was made possible by the reception last week of the "appreciations" of Brother Cassel found elsewhere in this paper. It is doubtful if the church has lost another man who has meant more to the Brethren fraternity from its beginning than Brother Cassel. He will long be remembered in his great service.

We are sorry that our paper has not been big enough to release all the church news as they came in, but we could only fill the paper. We are trying to catch up by giving you an unusually large portion of news this week. And as the conference reports will soon be out of the way and the "specials" will be farther between, we believe we can publish your news letters quite promptly from now on, that means with not more than two weeks' delay. Thank you for your patience and co-operation.

We appreciate the earnestness with which Sister Rice writes in behalf of the Bethel church in Michigan and yet we believe we can assure our sister that there is no effort being made to "mark the little churches off the map" where there is any possibility at all to build them up. In fact, every district conference has taken steps to give every possible aid to the weak churches, in order that they may be strengthened. We are glad for our correspondent's earnestness; if there were more such earnest souls among our weak churches, there would not be so many weak churches.

New Paris, Indiana, is rightly proud of their new pastor, whom they have taken from among the laity. Brother W. Irwin Duker, who was principal of the high schools of Goshen, has accepted the call to the ministry and was ordained in his first parish on October 5th. We are glad to welcome Brother Duker into the ministry because we believe he is well fitted in every way for this noble work. Along with the ordination, the New Paris church had a rededication of their house of worship. It is with great hope and confidence that these people begin the new year with their new pastor and their new church.

GENERAL ARTICLES

A Revival in Every Church. BY H. M. OBERHOLTZER

(An address delivered at the Ohio State Conference at Canton Ohio)

The subject of this address at once implies that some churches do not have revivals, or at least that they are not of sufficiently frequent occurrence. This seems to be the fact, judging from the reports given in our church paper. From the reports given, I find that last year hardly one-third of the Brethren churches in Ohio had a revival meeting, and that during the year before only about one-half of them held revival meetings. This certainly indicates a very serious condition of affairs. Surely a church is not fulfilling its mission in the world, and cannot hope to survive very long, if it does not have at least one evangelistic effort during the year. The barren tree is soon cut down. Our activities increase our strength, while inactivity makes us weak. The chief business of the church is to win souls to Christ. Jesus said, "I am come to seek and to save that which is lost," which clearly implies that that was his one great purpose in the world. He again said, "As the Father hath sent me, so send I you," which implies that our mission in this world is the same as his. The one leading thought of the great commission is, "Go ye therefore, into all the world, and make disciples." Organization, system, fellowship, religious instruction, finances and social service are important, but our chief business, first and all the time, is to win souls to Christ. The continuous revival, for which some contend, is a worthy ideal, but it is seldom realized. Human nature and local conditions usually defeat the attempt. Therefore, the special evangelistic effort becomes a necessity. By the constant and united prayer and enthusiastic endeavor of an evangelistic campaign a mighty spiritual force is developed that is hardly to be realized in any other manner. Furthermore, some people are so confirmed in their sins that they cannot be made to realize the awfulness of their sin except by the constant warnings of an evangelistic campaign, nor can they be made to yield their hearts except by the constant appeal of the gospel as it is earnestly proclaimed night after night. Many people will attend the services of a revival meeting that would very seldom attend the regular Sunday services of the church. Such people would hear but little of the gospel without the special effort, and very few of them would ever be saved. A little investigation will soon reveal that by far the larger percent of the additions to our churches year after year are the result of revival effort, and that where there is no revival effort there are few additions to the church. It may be that we depend too much upon the revival and do not put enough evangelism into our regular services. This may be a very serious fault with most of our pastors and churches. But, nevertheless, we must concede that the special evangelistic effort is of vast importance, and I maintain that each congregation should have at least one such effort annually.

Of course, there may be some just cause for the lack of evangelism in our district during the recent years. A few facts should probably be taken into consideration. First, it may be noted that there has been but little general interest in revival effort. No general revival wave has swept over the land in recent years, and there does not seem to be any immediately at hand, if I read the signs of the times correctly. Some thought that the war would bring it, but we were disappointed. Again it was thought that the pestilence would surely cause people to be sober and thoughtful and bring it about, but again we were disappointed. It seems that it will require something more awful and calamitous than war or pestilence to arouse the people and turn them away from their sins and make them feel their need of God. Present conditions, therefore, make revival effort extremely difficult. Even church people are very indifferent and manifest little zeal in the matter. People have become interested in the things of the world and of the flesh, rather than in the things of God and the interests of their souls. Instead of awakening the consciences of the people, the war seems to have stupefied and bewildered them and to have drawn them away from religion. High wages and high prices have caused a great money craze, and people have joined in a mad rush after dollars. Failing to realize the depreciated value of money or to consider the probability of future reverses, they have been reckless in their expenditure of money and in the enjoyment of luxuries. On the other hand, the thoughtful have felt compelled to look well to their financial interests, because of the high cost of living, and have economized and labored to the neglect of the interests of the church, often working overtime and on Sundays. Consequently religious fervor has decreased and spiritual power has been lost.

Again, it should be noted that, during the past year many pastors and churches were very seriously hindered in their plans by the influenza epidemic. No doubt some churches failed to hold a revival meeting last year on this account. Yet, where there is a will there is usually a way. Some churches that were as hard hit by the epidemic as any others held their revivals. They may not have been as successful as in other years, but the effort has its beneficial effect upon the church and the community. Sometimes there is special power and blessing derived from an effort to overcome such difficulties.

Another fact to be considered is that many of the churches in Ohio are served by student pastors from Ashland College, and the pastor seems usually to be held responsible for a part or all of the evangelistic service. Probably some of the churches do not find it convenient or advisable to hold the revival effort at the time of the pastor's vacation, and consequently the time passes by without a revival. This seems to present a real difficulty, but one which I think can be overcome. If the student pastor's vacation time is not a suitable time for the revival, then let some other time be selected and an evangelist be employed. The work can probably be carried on with the pastor helping over Sundays each week. However, the vacation time does not always prove to be as inconvenient and inopportune as it seems. Some have held their revivals at such times with very good results. The success of a revival does not depend as much upon the season as it does upon the spirit of the people.

Again, several of our churches are numerically and financially weak. They are discouraged because of their inferiority among the other churches of the community. They do not receive equal rating and recognition with other churches. Because of their inferiority, they are lacking in influence and power. Because of their discouragement they do not seem to have the ambition to put forth a very vigorous effort. Many of them are unable to secure a strong man as pastor or evangelist. Many pastors and evangelists, with ambitions for greater results than can be accomplished in such a church, and perhaps with ambitions for higher salaries, will shun them and "pass by on the other side." These churches deserve pity and the earnest consideration of the thoughtful. Our District Mission Board, if properly supported by the churches, ought to be able to afford some relief. The stronger churches ought to be willing to loan their pastors occasionally to the help of the weaker churches in some special effort, or in any time of need, and the pastors ought to be willing to be loaned for such purpose. Sometimes, however, internal strife and dissension has caused the weakness of the small church. In such cases the Board of Evangelists, with the help of the local pastor and the members of the church should settle affairs as soon as possible. This may take a great deal of prayer and tactful effort, but is worthy of all possible care and persistency.

Although we have some very serious difficulties to meet, I believe that they can, by the grace of God, all be overcome. The one thing needful on our part is the zeal and determination to do the will of God.

Permit me to make a few suggestions as to how it may be possible to have a revival in each church in our district during the year. First, let it be resolved by this conference that this shall be our determined aim, and let the slogan, "A revival in each church," be taken back to the churches and kept before them. Let enthusiastic agitation in this regard be started at once and be kept up until the aim is fully realized. Then, let it be considered the duty of each district evangelist to urge this matter upon the churches under his care, and that it further be considered that an evangelist has seriously failed in the discharge of his duty if he has not done all that he could to have at least one revival during the year in each of the churches under his care. I think that if the proper effort is put forth, it will be found that there are but few churches that are too weak to finance and carry forth a commendable effort of this kind. A little encouragement is probably all that is needed in most cases. Where churches are too weak to fully finance the effort, let the District Mission Board back them with a guarantee for the funds that may be lacking. It is not likely that they will be required to contribute much in most cases, for usually such meetings take care of themselves financially. Of course this means that our Mission Board must be adequately supported by the churches of the district, of which there is greater promise now than ever before. Let it not be feared that evangelists cannot be secured to do the work. If a regular evangelist is not available, some pastor can probably be induced to leave his work long enough to conduct such a campaign. Some of our pastors are very good evangelists, and will do quite as well as one who is giving his whole time to such work. It also occurs to me that it might be well, especially with the weaker churches that may feel unable to employ an evangelist, for two, three or four churches, with their pastors, to unite their forces in a revival effort for one another. The pastors could speak in turns, a night about or a week about. They perhaps could sing together in duets, trios or quartets, if they are gifted in that way. Singers, personal workers and others from the different congregations might also join in the work, if only for a night or a few nights at a time. The union of forces would add power and influence to the effort. In this way, also, two or three strong churches might rally to the support of some weak church. Such unselfish interest and co-operation would inspire new hope and confidence in both the church and the community.

But, I say most seriously, all our plans and resolutions will avail nothing, unless we have an urgent and conquering desire for revival and passion for souls, which is so generally lacking in our churches today. We are drifting with the tide. We are caught in the current. We have joined the mad rush for pleasure and wealth and have lost interest in the work of the Kingdom. This leads me to say that first of all we need a revival of righteousness and holiness and spiritual enthusiasm in our churches. Worldliness has crept into our churches to an alarming degree. The church's worship, its ordinances and its principles enjoy not the serious consideration. The ministry is slighted and neglected. Other institutions have come to be operated on such large scales that people, even members of the churches, have come to look upon the church as insignificant. Worship has lost its spirit in large part and has become cold and formal. We have preached war propaganda and world measures until we have very largely secularized our churches and well nigh crushed out the soul of religion. There may have been a real need for this, but now is the time for us to recall our senses and remember that the one great purpose of the church is to win the souls of men to Christ and nurture them in his grace. We must look away from this worldliness and from the things that are only temporal and consider seriously the things that are spiritual and eternal. We must return and lead our people back to a whole hearted love for God, and to a zealous application of themselves to their real duty. This is not easily done. People are not soon separated from their idols. Many have fallen into errors from which they can not speedily disentangle themselves. Very subtle influences have worked upon the minds of many until a change of heart and mind has been wrought that is not soon corrected. So, we must at once assure ourselves that we have a great task before us, when we undertake to revive the church. Human strength and wisdom is insufficient for the task. We must look to God for help. Therefore, I would, first of all, urge that everywhere the faithful be called to prayer, and that we pray mightily to God for a revival of divine love and of holy purpose in the hearts of all our brethren; that our hearts may be stirred up to do God's will and press the work of the kingdom; and, that, in every church, large and small, there may break out a great revival, resulting in the encouragement of believers and in the saving of many sinners. This, indeed, is the very first step in any revival. We can not succeed unless we go forward upon our knees. If our work is not of God, it is in vain. All great revivals were born in prayer. It was so with that great revival on the great day of Pentecost, and history records the same of every great revival movement since then. It is not great preaching, or great singing, or great organization we need so much as great prayer. It might be well to set apart a day or a week as a special season for prayer in this regard, but rather let us begin at once to pray fervently and to enlist as many others as possible in the same blessed service, and continue to pray until we get the answer of a real revival in every church in our district. If we will thus become interested at once in this great matter, I am sure that we will not be disappointed, and that the blessing of God will be poured out upon our beloved church in great abundance.

Building a Literature. By J. S. C. Spickerman

Our church has the beginning of a literature, and as the church grows, the literature must grow. But this does not mean that it will grow without effort on our part. Literature that is of any account is the product of hard work.

First, we must have thinkers to produce the literature. For them, we must depend mainly on our college. While a few of those who have given the world worth-while literature have hewed out their education with little or no help from the schools, the majority of them have been trained in the colleges and universities. For Brethren church literature we must look to the Brethren church's college. Those who would be leaders in the thought of the church should have earnest convictions of truth, knowledge, power of thought, and power of expression. The world's colleges can furnish the knowledge and develop power of thought and expression, but for convictions of truth we must look to colleges that stand up for the truth. Our position is unique, in that we take the whole gospel as our creed. In the colleges of the other churches, some doctrines which we teach, because the Bible teaches them, are ignored or opposed. In some colleges and universities, even in some church schools, unchristian and even immoral doctrines are taught—the doctrines that made Germany the monster of iniquity that she was. Ashland College should be adequately endowed and equipped, should be held rigidly to the principles and ideals of the Brethren church, and then should have the job of educating our young people.

Church literature may be classified as books, tracts, and periodicals. There is room for many distinctively Brethren books, including doctrinal works, missionary books, helps for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor workers, children's books, and hymn books. While many of the books of other churches along these lines are very helpful, our peculiar plea demands a literature of its own.

But the most important part of our literature is the periodicals. Our Sunday schools should use the whole gospel literature rather than compromise literature designed to sell to all denominations. The church paper is the medium which connects all of its subscribers, even the isolated members, with the whole brotherhood. It is a weekly "General Conference;" the editor is pastor-at-large to the whole brotherhood. It is a means of information, instruction, and inspiration.

We all can and should have our part in building our literature. Only a few of us will write books; comparatively few even write occasional articles for the church paper, though many who have never tried could write helpful articles; but every one who buys a book or subscribes for a periodical of our Publishing Company is helping an important and essential way, and also helping himself if he reads attentively what he has bought.

Christian Endeavor Training for the Future Church. By L. A. Myers

The future church will have as many hard tasks to perform, as many challenges to meet, and as broad a field to cover as the present church. Its opportunities will be as numerous, if not more so, and its responsibilities even greater. God will hold the church of tomorrow responsible to a larger extent because of its advantages over the present church. Each decade brings new knowledge and new means of extending the kingdom. Young men and women have access to opportunities that qualify them for a larger usefulness of which young people of the last generation never heard. New fields are characteristic of this present day that brings the Kingdom to our very doors. Biblical scholarship and research has added immensely to these advantages. Church schools and colleges which make a specialty in interpreting and teaching the Bible and subjects kindred to it are established throughout the country. The standards of gospel preaching is the best the church has had since the apostles. The church ministry by far exceeds that of yesterday. The Sunday school, Women's Missionary Societies, Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s, Sisterhoods and other organizations are all of comparatively recent origin. Each have come to serve a particular purpose. Other things have been displaced. These cover those and supply many additional advantages. The Christian Endeavor is the chief training school. This is its work, to make young men and young women practical and useful for Jesus Christ and his church.

The Christian Endeavor is the only training school of the church devoted entirely to this particular work. The Sunday school and kindred auxiliaries have their place but the Christian Endeavor is especially devoted to training. The Sunday school and church services have their educational features but the Christian Endeavor transmits religious knowledge into real service, skilled so as to be most effective at the point of contact. It thus becomes a positive force in service bringing the most fruitful results. The Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor should be correlated, so that each would do its work in the most complete way. The Sunday school should be up to the minute in methods, practice and the teaching of God's Word. Its storehouse of religious knowledge should be the human mind and heart. This storehouse should be kept full. The Christian Endeavor should produce a ceaseless flow of activity from this fountain of knowledge to the field God has given the church. The Endeavor should have a specific purpose for its existence and a clear vision of service. It should only be satisfied with the very best methods and most effective efforts in fulfilling its purpose.

The Christian Endeavor's direct aim is to make efficient workers for the church. To this end it should be constantly working, never tiring, nor giving up. When Uncle Sam called men to fight the Germans the "when and how" were questions to be solved. The boys drilled and drilled until they were so keen to do real service that they could hardly wait until they reached the battle field. The Christian Endeavor is to drill and drill so that when the church will go marching on to victory through its skilled leadership. Its work is to train for service in every form of activity. There is no kind of church work that the Christian Endeavor does not engage in. It remembers the sick, prays for the sinful, helps the needy, comforts the sad, makes leaders to serve, conquerors to fight, victors to win, marching on to the borders of Canaan as the church spreads out its great field before it, giving the command "to go and take it."

The church that has no Christian Endeavor must place leaders at the head of the procession who do not know the first principles of leadership. It is too often true that young men are appointed to the superintendency of the Sunday school or to some other responsible position of the church when they were neither fit nor qualified. It is the case of the blind leading the blind until some one has vision enough to find the way. The church exposes itself to the danger of wrecking the whole ship because the pilot neither knows where the deep waters are nor how to avoid the dangerous shoals. The light house may signal but you must know how to get to the shore. If perchance they all escape falling into the ditch until their captain gains some experience, something may be done for the kingdom at the eleventh hour. Often it is the case that when such leaders become trained so they can lead, they drop out through misfortune or some other unavoidable cause. But even if this should not be the case, imagine where the church could have been with the same expenditure of energy if it had started out with a well trained leader.

The worth of a young soul trained and skilled in his service is of incomparable value. A soul is worth more than worlds but a trained soul is the most precious jewel of the divine Father's treasure house. The lame man sat on the Temple steps begging alms. His lameness was converted into soundness when he met the well trained men of faith, taught and trained in the Master's own school. He was a saved soul but Peter and John were trained in the science of both soul and body healing. They knew how to apply the healing efficacy to the wound. Their diagnosis was always correct. The lame man could not heal himself because he did not know how, but later he was both saved and healed because he met one who did know. A Christian Endeavorer who can give expression to his personal skill and ability is of untold worth to himself and his friend.

Such training provides the church with workers who are ready to enter its great field upon the first call. The lame man could not tell how he was healed but the disciple could speak the word and the disease was gone. The trained worker finds himself in a field which draws from every channel upon his personal ability. Others are idle while he is overtaxed because he has the best equipment. There is always room higher up. He looks about him and sees worlds to be taken for God. He has already exhausted his ability in taking his world and longs to see the coming of companions who will aid in saving what he sees perishing. When trained leaders fall out of the ranks the church has already discovered that it is too late then to prepare one to fill the vacancy. Thus the Christian Endeavor, the church's training school should keep well trained young people to supply the needs of the church as they arise from day to day.

Then, too, when the young are not trained in the school of God's love and mercy they are trained in the world's sin and viciousness. The world's institutions for evil are all actively engaged. They have the very latest and best methods of catching their prey. They also have experts at work constantly devising new means and creating new methods to be used when the present ones are of no value any longer. A soul trained in one of these schools is lost to the church and separated from God. The loss is twofold. Every young man and woman who goes out into that night of sin, lost and undone, goes as a personal positive force against the church and God. The church makes no miscalculation when it considers such a departure in the light of such figures. But to save a soul, train it for service and send it out into the field for God is Endeavor's greatest work and supplies to the church its most valuable asset.

The future church will need trained workers. The church of tomorrow should train its young for the next day. The present church should have a vision of the future church's needs and be actively preparing for it. This is conserving its own vital energy and turning it into channels of usefulness when it comes to maturity. The church must always be looking ahead. "Blessed are your eyes for they see." The church of tomorrow will have its future to look to and meet as well as the present church. Hence, it will not have time to do what the present church should do. Our young people are the powers of God given in personal factors for us to train and equip as our contribution to the church of tomorrow. This is our obligation. We should view it with seriousness and lay it heavily upon our hearts remembering that we are at least partially responsible for tomorrow's welfare. Every church without a Christian Endeavor or some means of saving its young people, should become active at once and begin to direct that lost energy into the fruitful channels of life. The task of the future church will be equally as great as that of the present church. There will be lofty heights to scale, fields of great fruitage to harvest and giants of the strength of Goliath to overcome. Every day has its shadows, every field its obstacles and every army its foe. Our posterity will struggle on as we are struggling, meeting all the reverses by a constant application of divine energy by whatever methods God would have them use. Workers will be just as scarce. The fields then will be white and the reapers few. Men and women will not be seeking the church by scores to engage in its task. When we take these facts as serious as we should we will see to it that our church has a live wide-awake Christian Endeavor. For it is the business of our Endeavor to prepare our young for him tomorrow. May they know his word and do his bidding until his will is done by all people and his name hallowed in every clime.

But then water does not rise above its level. The quality of training and knowledge of the Endeavor will be in proportion to the society's aim and ambition. If it makes an effort to reach a high and lofty purpose and it has the necessary ambition, to realize its aim then the future can count on strong reliable workers dedicated and concentered to its cause from such a society. But when a Christian Endeavor exists for the sole purpose of giving the church the name of having a Christian Endeavor Society the work done will be in proportion to the aim. It will be superficial. Too many of our societies lack aim, life and ambition. They drift along in a rut merely perpetuating themselves without any real fruitage. There are societies that have existed for years that can not show a single worker they have placed anywhere on the field. This is loss of energy and loss of time. If a society has a right to exist at all it has a place on the top round and an invitation to occupy its place. If we are proud of our calling and our business we will be anxious to rise to the summit and capture the peak. But this requires an organization composed of live officers, active committees, and a wide awake membership intensely ambitious for the kingdom. The highest standard of efficiency should be sought after. This would require Expert Endeavor classes led by Expert Endeavorers or the next best that could be had. The pastor or some lay member of the church should start the good work. Every possible means available should be sought for so that the society may not come to the future church empty handed.

When we consider the need of the future there are a few things we should remember: First, that the Christian Endeavor society is the church's Training School. It is the only society that is devoted entirely to this work. Its direct aim is to produce efficient workers for the church. The church that has no Christian Endeavor will fail in its duty to its young people and also to the church of tomorrow. Second, the church of tomorrow will be in as much need of trained workers and its task will be equally as great as the church of today. We can not close our eyes and say, let each day take care of itself. Tomorrow is our day too, and for it we are also responsible because we have entrusted in our hands, the material that will make tomorrow's church. The quality and equipment of this material when presented to the future church will be a standing monument either for us or against us. Then may our Endeavor societies be up and doing so that when the young men and women of today come to maturity tomorrow they may also have a matured knowledge of his Word, a complete equipment for the field of labor and a full assurance of victory for our King.

Baptism in Literature. By A. L. DeLozier

That a course in old French should turn up a bit of evidence in favor of immersion as the old and original form of baptism, may surprise us.

This actually happened a few days ago as we were reading "La chanson de Roland," one of the very first and most typical productions of that period when the vulgar Latin was fading into French.

The story has its setting in the ninth or tenth century, and is as follows:

Charlemagne had been seven years in Spain and had beaten down every Saracin stronghold until the lone town of Sargossa was holding out against him. Marsila, the Saracin King, upon counseling with his war lords is given the treacherous advice of sending an embassy to Charlemagne, promising to be the latter's underlord and also to accept the Christian faith.

This Mohammedan agrees to follow Charlemagne to the feast of St. Michael, there to undergo baptism.

Now the lines in question. A representative speaks for Marsila:

"Mes avoec la vso sivrati, co dit. Enz en voz baine que Deus por vos i fist. La voldrat il erhestiens devenir."

The words may be translated thus:

"My lord will follow you there, this he says. In ("enz en" is very strong language. Enz is from the Latin intus and en is from in). Your baths (referring to the baptisries) which God made for you, there.

THERE (in the baths or baptistry) will he become a Christian."

This shows that the Catholic church used immersion in the time of Charlemagne.

I write this up because I have never before run across quite this type of evidence, and want to pass it on as one more incontrovertible proof of immersion as the originally given and long continued form of baptism in the church.

Keep us, O Father, from listlessness, lest the things which are noisome in thine eyes may not be in ours. Teach us to drive away the suggestion of evil by our constant vision of the right. Make us strong in Jesus Christ, Thy Son. Amen.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Jesus in Whom I Believe. By L. G. Smith

(Address delivered at Pennsylvania Conference)

The problem of the person of Jesus may be analyzed into two parts: (1) The historical; that is, the problem of the consciousness of Jesus, (2) the philosophical; that is, the problem of the incarnation, and (3) the religious; that is, the problem of the Christ of faith or of Christian experience.

I. The Historical Jesus. Christianity took its departure from the life of a historical person. The founder of Christianity was a living person, one who had a historic relation, the facts of whose life are well attested. No student of history worthy of consideration doubts that Jesus of Nazareth was born in or near the year assigned to him, that he had a brief teaching ministry and was crucified during the governorship of Pontius Pilate and that his birth determined the course of the ages for the race. He must therefore have been an important factor in his historical relation.

He lived such a forceful life, taught and exemplified such truths and principles that he is now, without exaggeration, the center of the world's interest, the dividing line of time, the central figure of history, the mighty moral magnet of the race and the friend of every troubled heart. The personality of Jesus is the supreme dynamic of moral character, and the cogent force in human effort toward better things,—a higher state of living, a more perfect character and a more complete life.

The historical Jesus has a three-fold place in history. First, he was connected with the past. He grew out of the past as the culmination of a progressive revelation. Second, he was vitally connected with his own day. Paul says (Gal. 4:4), that when the fullness of time was come, God sent forth his Son. All the forces of heaven and earth had been preparing the age for his coming. Third, he was related to the future, not only as the founder of religion, but as the inspiration of a new and holier life for the race, the best standard of human conduct and of lofty ideals and the redeemer of mankind.

The most important events in the life of Jesus of history are:

(1) A miraculous birth. Matthew and Luke say that Jesus was born of a virgin mother by a direct operation of God.

(2) A human life. Jesus was a real human being. The reality of the humanity of Jesus may be shown by the following facts: (A) He possessed the essential elements of human nature—a body and a rational mind. (B) He was subject to the ordinary laws of human development and human nature. He was a child; he grew in stature and wisdom. He became hungry and weary. He longed for human sympathy and wept with sorrowing friends; he suffered and died. (C) He was a citizen and paid his taxes.

(3) He was an extraordinary man, an exceptional person, a religious genius.

(4) Jesus stood in a unique relation to God. He was in constant and close fellowship with God. He claimed to be God's special representative in an absolute sense, that he knew God as no one else knew him, and that he was God's Son in a new and absolute sense.

(5) His life was a ministry of sacrificial love and service.

(6) He was a teacher of authority and superlative genius.

(7) He was rejected of his own people, and put to death; as he predicted, he arose from the dead and ascended to the Father.

(8) He was a sinless human being. He said, "Which of you convicteth me of sin," and they would have done so if they could. His will was so strong in its self-determination to do good that it could not be conquered by any temptation, however great.

(9) He was the "Son of Man." He was the Son of man because he was no man's son—he was the child of the race. He had and as an universality that transcends all race limitations, a universal character. All that is best, truest and holiest in human thought and life in any age and in every country finds in him its most perfect expression. Time has no power over him either to wither his charms or to exhaust his meaning.

II. The philosophical, or the problem of his deity—the incarnation. We read in the Scriptures that the eternal Word (the Logos), that is, the pre-existent Christ, became flesh and dwelt among men. That is, the pre-existent Christ came to possess human nature in addition to his divine which remained as before. The divine Personality existed in the Trinity before the incarnation and the potential substance of Jesus' human nature existed unindividualized in the virgin, Mary, before the incarnation. Its two distinct natures the divine and the human were united in the miraculous conception, which union produced the personality of Jesus Christ—a distinct person with a single consciousness and will, functioning within the range of both God and man.

Did Jesus have a Messianic consciousness? Yes, I believe he had. Some of the most negative and skeptical critics of the life of Jesus admit that he claimed to be, or permitted himself to be called, the Messiah. Jesus was no time-serving opportunist; he was sincere, pure hearted and absolutely true. No vainglorious person would seek the honor of high priesthood, when the priest has to be also the victim, nor a Messiahship of which the main element is suffering. He did the Messiah's work and he must therefore have had the Messianic consciousness.

From the day of Pentecost on, the disciples believed beyond all possible doubt that Jesus was the Christ. They approached the deity of Christ not through metaphysical speculation, but through redemptive experience.

III. The religious problem of Jesus, or the Christ of Christian faith. The resurrection from the dead proved Jesus to be the Christ, the Son of God with power. The resurrection of Jesus is an unimpeachable credential, certified to by sufficient, competent and trustworthy witnesses.

The facts of the resurrection of Jesus and the deity of Christ were tested in practice immediately after the resurrection. They were tested by men who had no predilections in favor of such beliefs, by men whose education and beliefs would have made them regard the resurrection and deity of Christ as preposterous and blasphemous. They were tested alike by Jews and Gentiles, Greeks and barbarians, bond and free, with the same favorable results.

By the resurrection and ascension the Jesus of history became the Christ of Christian faith and experience. The disciples and Paul were convinced beyond all doubt that the Jesus who had been crucified, dead and buried, arose from the dead as the ever living One over whom death had no power. The Christ of Christian faith was as real to the disciples and Paul as was the Jesus of history. They were certain that his spirit was ever present with them.

What is the value of Christ to us? The value of Christ to us is not to be found merely in the historical Jesus, but in him as the object of our faith. The historical Jesus apart from the Christ of faith would not save us.

The place of the Christ of faith in the Christian consciousness is that of a divine redeemer. We accept the Christ of Christian faith, not because of philosophical speculation, but because of his redemptive work. His redemptive work must be experienced in our lives if he is to have any value for us. Faith in Christ as Redeemer has produced results in human lives which justifies his acceptance.

The Christ of Christian faith is to be discovered by the individual through the assistance of the Holy Spirit. The supreme argument for the Christ of Christian faith is, Try him! Prove him in your own experience to see what he will do for you. Those who have found him and proved him, love him, live in him and worship him after a fashion that would be impossible were he less than deity. Communion with the Christ of Christian faith contributes to life, health, happiness, virtue, righteousness and peace—the peace of God which passeth all understanding.

Belief in the Christ of Christian faith has a two-fold function: (1) Those who truly experience him cling to him with a faith that cannot be shaken either by criticism or by opposition. It possesses a formative power which so fashions human lives after the life of Christ that henceforth they live Christlike lives, and thereby become living witnesses to the reality of the Christ of Christian experience.

My Lord and Master, thou art the Christ, the Son of God and the Savior of the world.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

FIELD REPORT OF THE EVANGELISTIC LEAGUE

This was our first visit to Dallas Center. We have here a modern church building, well equipped for work. This place is twenty miles north of Des Moines and located in a very thrifty and prosperous farming community. The membership of our church is not large at this place, but is composed of good substantial people who are loyal to the cause. Brother Porte the pastor is an Ashland graduate and has served this congregation for three years acceptably. It was a pleasure to work with him and his people. He stands four square upon the Word, is keen and aggressive in the work of the gospel. His church has kindly consented for him to continue his education at Drake University in Des Moines, while serving them as pastor.

Our preaching and afternoon Bible lectures were well received, but had to labor under the handicap of rain, mud and all but impassable roads through the entire three weeks, which means much in a farming community. While we are glad for those who were brought to Christ, yet we feel that many more would have been reached had conditions been more favorable. We shall always feel an interest in the work of this place and of the pastor.

Indiana State Conference

As our next campaign was to be in Indiana, it was so that we were able to be present for part of the conference. This conference was held in Goshen. It was a real pleasure to meet with my Brethren in the ministry, many whom I had labored with in times past and to visit the Goshen church, where we enjoyed a great soul saving meeting when Brother J. L. Kimmel was pastor.

The conference was well attended and the church nearly full at every session. This is our largest conference district and I was impressed with the snap and business way they did things. Two things for which I think Indiana needs to be commended are, first, they have arranged to hold two Bible institutes in the state during the coming year to be located in the center of the largest group of churches, second, that provisions have been made to have a revival meeting in every church in the district, by each pastor holding a meeting for another congregation. I was treated with every courtesy of the conference and requested to present the work of the Bible Study and Evangelistic League, to which we had a very liberal response and many members were secured for the League. Nearly all the pastors of this district have invited me to come to their congregations and present to their congregations the work of the League. I want to thank the Brethren of Indiana for their hospitality and kindness shown me.

New Paris, Indiana

By invitation of Brother McInturf, the popular pastor of the Goshen church, the hospitality of whose home I enjoyed, typical of the big hearted Virginians, I stayed over and attended a reception given by the church of New Paris to their new pastor, Prof. W. I. Duker, which was a very enjoyable occasion. Among the preachers present were Brother George Rench of South Bend, and Brother J. L. Kimmel of Muncie, companions of mine in former campaigns.

New Paris is only a few miles from Goshen. Here a few loyal Brethren have organized, finished, decorated and equipped a very neat chapel and are building up a work for Christ.

The new pastor, Prof. I. W. Duker, is Principal of the high school in Goshen and a member of the Goshen church which called him to the ministry and ordained him to the work of the gospel. He is one of God's best, a man of education, refinement and fully consecrated to the Lord. Under his leadership and the unusual talent in the church at New Paris, we believe the work here has a great future. We enjoyed the fellowship of these dear people and by request presented the work of the League.

Berne, Indiana

Going to Berne is like going home, for in days gone by have held two meetings in this place and it is one of the best country churches in our denomination. We went in on a rain storm but found a good congregation waiting for us to address. The church here is alive to all the needs of our work and aggressive in the Sunday school activities. Brother Johnson the pastor has served the people here for years and there is no danger of their getting another as long as Johnson lives in the community. Johnson is a man of the work. Leaving Berne early the next God, loyal to the gospel and consecrated to morning, I started on my way to open a three weeks' campaign with Brother Henderson and his people in Clay City, Indiana.

SOMERSET STREET BRETHREN CHURCH

The First Brethren church is still on the map. We are not marking time, we are making progress. The church is rallying in a commendable way to reach all the goals set before us in our yearly program. We feel the best way to overcome any loss sustained by the war, is to get busy and make good. We have launched a program of work and worship that will keep us busy and result in developing the talent of the church. The best thing that can be now said for the church, is that the membership is backing up every undertaking with a spirit that is sure to bring success.

We are particularly stressing attendance at all the services of the church. We begin to see the evidence of work already done in the increased attendance at Sunday school, church services and the mid-week service. Especially is this true of the mid-week service. We have gained more than two hundred percent in attendance and the end is not yet.

Recently a Workers' Class was organized. This class has not been organized to merely take care of the usual evangelistic fit that seizes upon our churches once a year. It is to be a year around Workers' Class to stand back of the pastor in all necessary personal work. We hope to have the spirit of evangelism with us in every service through the year.

The church is now at the task of paying our new church site. We are averaging one thousand dollars a month to-date in our payments. If the industrial conditions ease up we can do much better. Our prayerful desire is to erect a one hundred thousand dollar plant on this site. I am confident this is the desire of every working member of the church. This is the least we should do to maintain a creditable standing for our people in Johnstown. Somerset Street church has launched a strenuous program with a firm resolve to do big things for Christ during the next few years.

Our Rally Day service was a decided success. The goals were, an attendance of five hundred and an offering of One Thousand Dollars. The result was an attendance of four hundred and twenty-nine and an offering of $1,070.00.

ILLIOKOTA CONFERENCE MINUTES

Tuesday Evening

The Illiokota Conference of 1919 convened at Cerro, Gordo, Illinois, where the opening session was held on the evening of October 7th, with G. T. Ronk, Leon, Iowa, presiding as moderator. The song service opened with the singing of "Is It the Crowning Day?" Miss Mae Smith, field secretary of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Brethren church, had charge of the devotional service.

The address of welcome was given by D. A. C. Teeter, pastor of the Cerro Gordo church; and B. F. Puterbaugh, Waterloo, Iowa, on behalf of the delegates gave a happy response.

In the absence of the speaker scheduled for the evening sermon, the message was given by Miles J. Snyder, Milledgeville, Illinois, whose subject was "The Immediacy of Religion."

The closing song was "I Love Him," and H. E. Eppley, Decatur, Illinois, offered the prayer and benediction.

Wednesday Morning

The opening hour of the forenoon session was devoted to simultaneous meetings of the district Ministerium and the Woman's Missionary Society.

The conference session proper opened with a spirited song service with Edwin Boardman, Jr., Hudson, Iowa, leading in singing "Loyalty to Christ," "The King's Business," and "As a Volunteer." He also gave a Scripture reading from the seventeenth chapter of The Acts.

At this time the moderator appointed a credential committee consisting of B. F. Puterbaugh, Peter Peterson, and Alfred Deck.

The Moderator's report, given as the principal address of the morning, called attention to the unprecedented year through which we have passed, and pointed out some of the large problems that confront the church. During the past year much has been learned in the way of self-knowledge and the effectiveness of team work in church endeavor. Among the present needs which were strongly stressed were: evangelistic zeal, church extension, stewardship of life and substance, and a re-awakening in the power of prayer and enlistment in the school of prayer.

By motion the Moderator's report became the property of the conference.

Adjournment following a closing hymn, "Keep your Heart Singing," and the benediction given by Edwin Boardman.

Dinner was served in the church basement by the ladies of the conference church. Lodging and breakfasts were free, and other meals were served for thirty-five cents.

Wednesday Afternoon

As an opening hymn, "Will there Be Any Stars in My Crown?" was sung. An inspiring devotional service and Bible reading from the seventeenth chapter of Job was given by D. A. C. Teeter.

Edwin Boardman gave the first address of the afternoon. As Illiokota C. E. Field Secretary, he spoke on the subject, "Live Christian Endeavorers." He presented a comprehensive plan of visiting the various societies in the district with a view of inspiring aggressive work. The place and value of the Christian Endeavor was strongly presented, and the vital importance of enlisting life work recruits was particularly dealt with.

With the subject, "Means and Ends of the Junior Endeavor," Mrs. G. T. Ronk recited something of the work in this department that is being done at Leon, Iowa, and pointed out the far-reaching results and possibilities in Bible truths learned and training in prayer at this formative period in the lives of youth.

The latter part of the afternoon session was given over to an open session of the Woman's Missionary Society, when the work of the past year was reviewed and plans laid for the coming year.

The annual election of district officers took place at this session with the following result:

President, Mrs. R. F. Porte, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Vice President, Mrs. S. P. Hoover, Waterloo, Iowa.

Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Elizabeth Hildebrand, Waterloo, Iowa.

This afternoon the district Mission Board went in a body to Decatur, Illinois, to look over the situation there and to consider the advisability of launching a movement for a new Brethren church in that city.

Wednesday Evening

Opening the evening session, a large audience joined heartily in a rousing song service, singing "The Way of the Cross Leads Home," "Just When I Need Him Most," "Sunshine in My Soul," and "All Hail Immanuel." The Scripture lesson was Philipians 2:1-10, and was read by H. E. Eppley, who also led in the prayer service.

"In the Garden" was effectively sung as a duet by Mae Smith and H. L. Goughnour.

A short reading by Miss Edith Peterson of Cerro Gordo was an entertaining feature on the program at this time.

The committee on resolutions was appointed by the moderator and consisted of Miss Mary Wise, Mrs. B. F. Puterbaugh, and Edwin Boardman.

The evening sermon-address was given by B. T. Burnworth, Lanark, Illinois, on the subject, "The Present Need and Task of the Church." The Scriptural basis on which the message was built were the statements "Have this in mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus," and "Behold your God." The speaker emphasized the need of centering our theology around Jesus Christ and believing on him and exalting him and living him until the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord." The supreme task of the church is to have the mind of Christ and to develop a right conception of God. Likewise it is important for the church to pause and be still and know God in his greatness and wait for his voice to speak to our hearts. Considering the Bible as the Word of God, we need to experience and practice not a new faith but a larger faith.

After singing "A Charge to Keep I Have," the session adjourned with benediction.

Thursday Forenoon

The conference session opened with the singing of "Be a Blessing" and "I shall Not be Moved." The morning prayer service was led by H. L. Goughnour.

At this time the credential committee reported a conference membership of twelve lay and twelve ministerial delegates.

The chief part of the session was devoted to reports by the Four Year Program goal directors, with B. T. Burnworth presiding. The reports given showed a failure to reach a number of the goals by the different churches in the district. The importance of next year's work, in view of the culmination of the Four Year Program, was stressed, and it is hoped that efforts will be put forth all along the line which will result in the largest possible accomplishments.

On motion Edwin Boardman was elected to take the place of J. L. Gillin as district goal director of Recruiting and Endowment.

Likewise it was decided that Mrs. R. F. Porte should be goal director for the promotion of the work of the Mowen's Missionary Society instead of Mrs. A. Emmert.

By vote of conference Robt. F. Porte was elected goal director for the promotion of Sunday school work.

By motion all other goal directors were re-elected for the coming year.

Business Session

A committee on Time and Place of next conference was appointed consisting of Messrs. Snyder, Hess, and Boardman.

Committee for nomination of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor officers was appointed, as follows: Mrs. D. A. C. Teeter, Miss Edith Peterson, and Mrs. G. T. Ronk.

The moderator appointed D. A. C. Teeter and Alfred Deck to constitute the auditing committee.

Report of the committee on resolutions was made as follows:

We, the members of the Illiokota district conference, meeting in annual session at Cerro Gordo, Illinois, do hereby praise our heavenly Father for his watch-care and providential leading in the past year; and do again re-dedicate our lives to him to do more fully whatsoever he would have us do. As a conference, we hereby commit our ways to him, and, as we review our experiences of the past, apprehend those of the present, and expectantly face the future, be it resolved:

1. That we offer our heartfelt praise and gratitude to Almighty God for granting continued life to us when the ravages of an awful scourge was present. That we extend our sympathies and most earnest prayers to those who were bereaved in that dark period of the past conference year.

2. As a conference we do heartily endorse all movements toward church extension, especially in the larger centers of population in the district; that we do hereby stand solidly behind all pronounced and specialized efforts for the gaining of Life Work Recruits for the propagation of the gospel; and that as a people we will earnestly set ourselves to definite prayer, which we consider as God's choice means to very definite ends.

3. We approve and will honestly support all efforts looking toward a bigger and better Ashland College, and do hereby extend our promise of most sincere co-operation to the new president, Dr. E. E. Jacobs, and the present faculty.

4. We believe America's strength must be found in the transforming power of Christianity in the individual and national life, and we deplore every influence in our midst that tends to weaken the morale of the nation. Especially do we deplore the active endeavors of the organized liquor interests as they still seek to blot our fair land with a curse; and we take an emphatic stand against the propagation of the tobacco trust and the foul cigarette; and do pledge ourselves to do all in our power to rid the country of these and kindred evils, such as Bolshevism and lawlessness.

5. We look with favor on all movements tending toward international peace and world friendship.

6. Finally, we do thank the members of the conference church for their kindness and generous hospitality, and do extend them our sincerest wishes for a year of prosperity and great blessing as a congregation.

MRS. B. F. PUTERBAUGH,
EDWIN BOARDMAN, JR.,
MISS MARY WISE.

By conference action report of committee on resolutions was adopted and the committee commended for its splendid work.

Motion prevailed naming S. P. Hoover, Waterloo, Iowa and Samuel Livengood, Milledgeville, Illinois, as district nominees for Ashland College trustees.

Following a presentation of the contemplated work of the Interchurch World Movement by Dr. E. E. Jacobs, a conference motion prevailed electing Miles J. Snyder, Illiokota district representative of the Interchurch World Movement.

Benediction by Dr. Jacobs closed the forenoon conference session.

Thursday Afternoon

Devotions were conducted by B. T. Burnworth, who read I Corinthians 13, and led the assembly in prayer.

On motion Dr. and Mrs. J. L. Gillin were elected conference delegates at large from this district.

On recommendation of the Mission Board motion prevailed that the mission apportionments for the coming year shall be on the basis of thirty cents per member.

Auditing committee reported Treasurer's books were all right, and by motion the report was adopted.

By properly sustained motion the conference adopted Chapter 2 of the Manual of Procedure outlined by General Conference in 1915.

Committee on Constitution and By-Laws submitted a report recommending the following Constitution and By-Laws for the Illiokota Conference District:

Article I Membership

Each congregation adopting chapter one of the Manual of Procedure, as referred to, may be represented by ministerial and lay delegates, as follows:

Section 1. All Elders of the church complying with the requirements of chapter two, and passed by the Committee on Conference Membership, shall be members of the conference.

Section 2. Congregations shall be entitled to two lay delegates for the first twenty-five members, or major fraction thereof, and one delegate for each additional twenty-five members or fraction thereof.

Section 3. Any member of the Brethren church, in regular standing, shall be permitted to participate in the discussions of conference work, but delegates only shall vote or make motions.

Section 4. Conference expenses shall be provided for by each congregation contributing fifty cents for each delegate to which the congregation is entitled.

Article 2 Meetings

The conference shall convene the first full week in October, and at such place as shall be determined upon from time to time.

Article 3 Officers

The officers of the conference shall consist of Moderator, Vice-Moderator, Secretary and Treasurer, with the usual duties involved, and chosen one year previous to the time of meeting. No person, however, shall be eligible to succeed himself in the office of moderator.

Section 1. The nomination of Moderator and Vice-Moderator shall be made by informal ballot, a majority of all votes cast on this ballot constituting an election. In case no one has received such majority, the two having received the highest number of votes shall be declared the nominees, and the balloting shall proceed until a majority is obtained.

Section 2. The Secretary and Treasurer shall be nominated by the nominating committee.

Article 4 Nominating Committee

At an early session of the conference, the Moderator, Vice-Moderator, and Secretary, shall appoint a committee of three members who shall nominate from time to time one or more candidates for such other elective offices as conference may require. When more than one candidate has been named, the election shall be by ballot, and a majority of all votes cast shall be required to elect.

Article 5 Conference Membership Committee

At the first session of conference, the Moderator shall appoint a committee of three, who, with the Vice-Moderator as Chairman, shall constitute the Committee on Conference Membership. This committee shall be given opportunity within this session to collect credentials, with the fees, and before the next session shall list all delegates under their respective churches, and report the same at the call of the Moderator.

Section 1. This committee shall determine the standard set for conference membership, not herein specified, and when necessary to consider and dispose of irregularities arising from the conduct of its members, shall call the Moderator to preside at its sessions.

Article 6 Amendment

These By-laws may be amended at any regular session of the conference by a majority of two-thirds of all votes cast in favor of such amendment, provided notice in writing at some previous session has been given of the changes so desired.

All enactments which have been previously made, and which are in conflict with this Manual of Procedure and these By-laws, are hereby declared null and void.

By motion the report of the committee on constitution was adopted and the new constitution and by-laws accepted for future use.

On motion it was decided that the district Mission Board shall constitute a Board of Trustees of Property and shall take the necessary steps to become incorporated.

The nominating committee reported Y. P. S. C. E. and Sunday school district officers as follows:

Y. P. S. C. E.

President, Edwin Boardman, Jr., Hudson, Ia.
Vice-President, Martha Johnson, Hudson, Iowa.

Secretary-Treasurer, Letha Bunch, Leon, Iowa
Sunday School

President, Robert F. Porte, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Vice-President, Samuel Garber, Leon, Iowa.
Secretary-Treasurer, Gladys Brewbaker, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Elementary, Mrs. H. E. Stroud, Waterloo, Iowa.

Secondary, Mrs. W. J. Gutknight, Hudson, Iowa.

Adult, Freeman Ankrum, Garwin, Iowa.

Teacher Training, Z. T. Livengood, Lanark, Illinois.

Missionary, Mrs. J. E. Lehman, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Home Department, Etta Lichty, Waterloo, Iowa.

Temperance, Mrs. Robert Truman, Lanark, Illinois.

Administration, Mrs. Frank Wisner, Waterloo, Iowa.

On motion the report of the nominating committee was adopted and the nominees declared elected.

The district mission board recommended the re-election of B. T. Burnworth, and the election of Robert E. Porte as a member of the board, for a term of three years. By motion the recommendation was adopted and these persons elected.

By motion H. L. Goughnour was re-elected a member of the District Ministerial Examining Board for a term of three years.

Committee on place reported invitations were received from Garwin, Iowa, and Lanark, Illinois for next year's conference. By motion conference decided to convene at Lanark, Illinois next year.

By vote of conference the Secretary was instructed to have one thousand printed letter heads prepared for the use of the various district officers the coming year.

At this time Dr. E. E. Jacobs, President of Ashland College, appeared on the program for an address on the work and outlook of the institution he represents. His report was very encouraging and indicated a splendid outlook for the college. He also spoke of the interests of the Brethren Publishing Company and reported the moving of this company into larger and better quarters.

In speaking upon "The Strategic Points in Sunday School Endeavor," H. L. Goughnour designated these as the twelve points of excellence in the Sunday school standard, and briefly reviewed them and pointed out the value of the possibilities set forth therein.

Election of Officers

The first informal ballot failing to result in the election of a moderator, on motion the conference rules were suspended and the Secretary was instructed to cast unanimous ballot for the election of Robert F. Porte.

The ballot for Vice-Moderator likewise resulting in no election, the Secretary was instructed by motion to cast unanimous ballot of conference electing Freeman Ankrum.

On motion the rules were suspended and by acclamation conference elected Miles J. Snyder, Secretary and B. F. Puterbaugh, Treasurer.

The Treasurer's report was given as follows:

Receipts to date	$28.00
Expenditures	19.60

	$ 8.40
Funds held by former Treasurer	$20.01

Balance	$28.41
---------------	---------

By motion the report was adopted and the Treasurer instructed to collect remaining delegate fees still due.

At this point the minutes of the conference were read and approved.

Conference adjourned with benediction by D. A. C. Teeter.

Thursday Evening

In beginning the last session of conference the audience joined earnestly in a song service led by song leader Edwin Boardman. "Count Your Many Blessings," and "I Need Thee Every Hour," were sung, after which there was a season of prayer.

The first address of the evening was given by Edwin Boardman on the theme, "Consecration and Tomorrow." Using the scripture, "Ye shall receive power when the Holy Spirit is come upon you," and "Ye shall be my witnesses," the speaker emphasized the thoughts of a consecrated life. Not only must we be consecrated to God but we must be dedicated to his work. We must be witnesses; we must live positively; we must serve our age.

The closing address of the evening was given by President E. E. Jacobs who, in speaking on "The Opportunities of the Church," used the scriptures, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ," and "For there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved."

The speaker confidently asserted the day of opportunity for the church was not over because he had faith in the power of Jesus Christ to overcome all obstacles in humanity's upward march. The church will not fail nor die because it is a divine institution set for the salvation of mankind. It is bound to win because Jesus Christ laid the foundations securely. Calling attention to the fact that we are living in post-war times, he indicated the likelihood of revivals in economic, educational and religious life. The church should be alert to seize the opportunities and advantages these times present. Things especially important now are: An awakened spirit of liberality calling for new emphasis upon stewardship in life and substance; the ripeness of the times for stressing religion in education; the necessity of presenting the united front of Protestantism against the menacing ills of the day; and the imperative in emphasizing the fundamentals of Christianity in the development of leadership realizing the need of the mind and spirit of Christ in national and international movements.

The closing musical number was the singing of "The Whole of Life for Jesus" by a male quartette composed of Messrs. Goughnour, Burnworth, Boardman and Eppley.

Motion prevailed that the Iliokota district assume the apportionment of $200 for the Winona Lake Auditorium Fund.

By motion the Mission Board was delegated to apportion this amount among the different congregations and collect the same.

H. L. Goughnour offered the closing prayer and benediction of the 1919 Iliokota District Conference.

G. T. Ronk, Moderator,
MILES J. SNYDER, Secretary.

A LETTER FROM SOUTH AMERICA

La Carlota, Argentina, S. A.

October 6, 1919.

Dear Brethren in U. S. A.:

As two of our former letters have not appeared in the Evangelist, it seems that they have gone astray, or have been greatly delayed. Since our last writing we have been mostly occupied with the "grip." It was my misfortune to receive this unwelcome visitor twice during the winter, having to spend three weeks in bed altogether, besides being on the shelf a while longer due to after-effects.

We are glad to see the beginning of spring and the more settled weather so we can get about more. We have had an extraordinary amount of rain and mud this winter, and it has been much colder than usual.

Th influenza, lagrippe and bronchitis have been abundant and have naturally hindered our progress. The public schools were closed for over a month.

Despite all the forces of evil that are ever present and of the unceasing opposition on the part of the Roman Catholic priests, God is answering our prayers and blessing our efforts. Our first convert, a fine man, the head of a nice family has now expressed his desire for baptism. He has been studying the New Testament and has twice each week since the first of June and understands what the step means. Two young ladies recently professed conversion but are absolutely ignorant of the Scriptures and will need a great deal of teaching. Yesterday afternoon a well dressed man about 30 years of age came in to talk with us. He had heard a little of the Gospel in Montevideo and Rosario and had bought a New Testament some time ago. He had been reading it with his wife and they were convinced of its truth. They came to the evening service and seemed to be vitally interested, and expressed a desire to make a definite stand for Christ. A few weeks ago a man came from one of the neighboring towns to visit us and see what sort of a mission we have here. He came with his wife a few years ago from Switzerland, where he says they were faithful to the church. He was afraid that we might be Seventh Day Adventists, but after a talk said they could be at home with us, for they took the simple Word of God as their only guide. He bought a piece of land near here and last week arrived with his family. His sole purpose for the move was to be able to attend the meetings and to have his children in the Sunday school. We feel much encouraged now and believe that we will have a small but faithful group upon whom we can rely. For this we have been striving and it will mean much to the work. One family that was interested has moved away and we miss the children from the Sunday school. We have a Spanish family interested and studying the New Testament. They were formerly Roman Catholics, but have expressed themselves decidedly in our favor and send their children to the Sunday school. We trust that they too may soon make the great confession.

Our Sunday school, I think deserves a separate paragraph. It has been having its ups and downs and tribulations almost. It seems to be the special object of the priest's envy. Above all things they are trying to see to it that we do not get hold of any children. They have the privilege of going to the public schools each week to teach their doctrines and thus have the advantage. While there they tell all sorts of lies about us and most shamefully misrepresent our teachings, which they are really ignorant of for they do not bother to acquaint themselves with the Bible. The children then come and report to us what the priests say, "that all who come here will be beyond all doubt go straight to hell without even a sight of their manufactured purgatory, that those who will not go to his church on Sundays, should then go for a walk, to a dance or in fact anywhere besides that "Local Evangelico." He has some who act as spies and then reads out the names of those who come here and tries to hold them up in derision before the rest of the school. For a month or so he had most of them scared out, and we had half a dozen instead of 25 or 30 children as usual. A few remained faithful and others are coming back but some are most likely out of our reach for the present. Three times the Sunday school has gone to pieces that way but each time it has revived and seems to be doing so again. It is very discouraging at times but in the long run I believe that the priests will do themselves more harm than us by their falsifications. Some will come just to see for themselves and find out the truth for themselves. The priests attack the Bible very bitterly; they are not satisfied with cutting it to pieces but want to BURN IT ALL.

I mention these things to give our brethren a clearer idea of what we are "up against," when we try to preach the Gospel in Argentina today. When you think about your missionaries down here and when you pray for us, remember that we are looked upon by the majority more or less like a Roman Priest or Mormon preacher they would be looked upon in a Dunkard community at home. And I don't think my comparison is at all exaggerated.

The English speaking people about here still come in for service on the first Sunday morning of the month. Last Sunday 18 came, some were hindered and others never come, who have ruled God out of their lives.

The last of September I went to Buenos Aires on purpose to meet Brother Sickels as we expected them on the Vasari. It was quite a disappointment to me when the old sea rover came in, to learn that they were not on board. I then learned that they were on the Vestris, and word came that she had caught fire. But the next day the L. & H. agents assured me that all passengers were safe and that the steamer would soon resume the voyage.

We are patiently awaiting the next mails, hoping to hear from the last General Conference as well as from parents and friends.

Fraternally,

WM. H. BOCK.

HAMLIN, KANSAS

I suspect it is high time that I can make my report of the work at Hamlin, Kansas. My work there ended with September 15th of this year and I must say that it was, in most respects, a very pleasant year. I am sure that the work there made some gains during the year even though we had no accessions to the church. Many were the pleasant and profitable services we had together in spite of the "flu" and other handicaps. We can always find things we ought to have and could have done or left undone. We find that in every walk of life and so it is in looking back over that year. I hope the Brethren have been much benefited by our being in their presence the past year. We know we have, in many ways, received benefit while in their midst. We found it harder each day to think of leaving there until when our car was packed and gone. Then the good Brethren there made it still harder by gathering at the home where we were to stay and making us feel so much at home and to cap it all, by presenting us with $41.50 in cash and checks. We were not able to express our thanks to the good Brethren for their love thus shown. All we can yet say in appreciation is that we thank those good Brethren from the depths of appreciative hearts. We hope those good people will find a shepherd who can guide them into the paths of righteousness and helpfulness as we could not. Hamlin Brethren church has a splendid field and many willing workers. May God bless them in their future work.

Now just a word about our own position at the present. We are not in the active ministry just now; have not been successful in locating a place. Do not think it is my fault nor the fault of the church which may be needing a pastor. I spent several weeks' time trying to locate and incidentally quite a bit of money. If any church in the brotherhood is in want of a pastor and cares to correspond with me I will be at Udell, Iowa. I hate to be out of the ministry because I feel that my work is there but I will have to be until a location is found. Will be very glad to consider a call.

NEW PARIS, INDIANA

Sunday, October 5th, goes down as one of the biggest and happiest days in the history of the Brethren church of New Paris, when we rededicated our church to God and also held the ordination services of our own new minister, W. I. Duker, of Goshen. We certainly think we have one of the finest of men and feel justly proud that we have secured him to serve us. We are acquainted with him, love his fine spirit, know how he pulls to do big things for God, and we assure him that we all expect to push with all our might in his every effort.

Brother J. A. McInturff of Goshen has written the following in his home church paper regarding Brother Duker, who is one of his members:

At certain times a pastor does not feel like speaking, but at this time I want to put on record my approval of the action of the First church in calling Brother W. I. Duker to the ministry. I know Brother Duker—I know his very heart. He has been one of our most efficient workers, and has been engaged in our church work from the very day he became a member. As a teacher he carried the True Blues to many victories. He was elected the first layman moderator of the First church, and made a commendable record. He was our loved Sunday school superintendent. Personally, he has every qualification for the ministry unless it is his health, and let us pray God to give him strength. His education is full and his experience is mature, as any one would be who acted in social services in a large church as he has. He possesses a personality that is pleasant. His natural "humor" is all his own and it is the very spice of some of his best addresses. He enters the ministry having had a call from the New Paris church which is a congregation that is personally acquainted with him, and which is the very best recommendation, and the church has had the privilege to consider some of the very best educated of our ministry, and they have turned to him and offered a larger salary than ever paid before. All told he enters the work with the best of conditions. His pastor holds the very best for him and always will. We regret to lose him here, but we are pleased to send him there. May his ministry be a great success.

PROF. W. I. DUKER
The New Minister

For the past year the Woman's Missionary Society has worked hard to raise money and when at the end of the year we found we had about $600 on hand we began to re-decorate the interior of the church by putting on new wall paper, new floors, carpet, etc., and soon the men caught the spirit and they finished things up right by painting the outside, adding a much needed vestibule, belfry, bell, etc., until at the present time the church presents a very beautiful appearance, of which we feel we have a right to be proud.

Brother J. L. Kimmel of Muncie, preached years ago for the New Paris people making many friends and they have always had a warm spot in their heart for him and felt that he was just the man for our big day and so he was asked to preach our dedicatory sermon and also take charge of the services with the assistance of Rev. McInturff and Rev. Bemedefer of Goshen. He delivered a very inspiring and helpful sermon and then took up the offering to meet the expenses of remodeling. This offering amounted to $722.99 which was exceptionally good and very, very much appreciated by our people and we certainly wish to thank all of you who helped in this offering and also Brother Kimmel for he certainly has a way about him that makes you want to give all that you possibly can to the Lord's cause. It made a big full day for Brother Kimmel as he was with us in our Sunday school service in the morning, took charge of the above services in the afternoon and then preached for us again in the evening. We appreciate his being with us and helping us to make the day a success.

We are very much encouraged and feel that the present outlook of the future is the best ever. Pray for us that we may make this our best year yet and accomplish much for God.
MRS. FRANK ROSCOE.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

As it has been some months since a report was made from this place, it may be of interest to the Evangelist family to know that we are not asleep. Things have been coming to pass which we think are worth reporting. Since our last report we have received into the church six by baptism and one by letter. These came in during the summer months and at regular services. Through the kindness of the church, and because of interest the membership feels in the general work, I have spent quite a little time in work away from home. And we have been fortunate in finding ministers of our own and other denominations, who gladly filled the pulpit in my absence. This service is greatly appreciated by myself as well as the congregation. Having accepted a call from the congregation the writer is serving his fifth year as pastor of this church. And I am sure that both pastor and people are pleased to note the evidences of advancement each year. There is a united desire and determination to make this the VICTORY year of our work in Roanoke. The Woman's Missionary Society, the Bible school and the Christian Endeavor Society, are maintaining their standing, and reaching forward to greater things. We have some mighty faithful workers in each of these departments, and that is what counts. We had 31 in our mid-week prayer service last Wednesday evening, and all seemed to enjoy the service and nearly all took some part in the service.

The Bible school officers and teachers meet with the pastor in a class room each Sunday morning, fifteen minutes before the school is called to order for prayer, conference and a brief survey of the lesson. We are now planning for our revival, which is to begin the 16th of November. Mrs. Hortense Ropp, National Lecturer and Organizer of the W. C. T. U., who now resides in Roanoke, will assist the pastor and workers in this campaign.

We crave a special interest in your prayers, in behalf of this great work.

The evangelistic campaign conducted by Dr. E. M. Cobb, of Dayton, Ohio at the First Brethren church, has drawn to a close. The results attained have been highly gratifying inasmuch as 63 have made the decision for Christ. Six have consecrated their lives to greater service and three who had been baptized elsewhere, have entered their names on the church roll.

The meetings throughout were well attended and the termination was probably brought about all too soon, as others seemed to be on the brink of decision and still hesitated to make the move. Among those who came forward many were from the Sunday school, young in years but well nurtured in the precepts and admonitions of their Savior by the training so ably rendered by their teachers. Others were in their youth and some almost at the setting of the sun. The activity of the church, too, as a whole, has been revived and so we can truly say, that the efforts put forth in the evangelistic campaign were entirely worth while.
A. T. MOYER.

COLLEGE NEWS

Rev. W. S. Bell was here last week and preached for us twice. On Wednesday evening, he spoke on "A Call to the Colors," which was inspirational and uplifting. On Thursday he spoke at the joint meeting of the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A., which was the usual Thanksgiving meeting. We had been planning on having Brother Bell in some time within the year to address the members of the Seminary, but this was the only time we could secure him as his time is fully taken in evangelistic work. The College is under obligations to him for his inspiring and timely addresses.

The College closed over Thursday and Friday, of last week for the usual Thanksgiving recess. Many of the dormitory students went home but those who stayed here, had a very enjoyable Thanksgiving dinner at the hall, followed by a short programme.

Professor J. A. Garber has had a minor operation on his throat and is at this writing somewhat indisposed. Without serious complications he will resume his work at the opening of the week.

Interchurch World Movement—

The Educational Division of the above named movement, is very active just now in their survey of the colleges of the country. If one may judge from their correspondence, there is something big ahead for the colleges which they will touch. Moreover, the data now being gathered will be the fullest ever gotten together, and if the survey goes no further, the colleges themselves will benefit from this work. You will see notices in these columns from time to time about this part of the movement.

Attention, Alumni!

Recently a letter came to my desk from an alumnus of the College who is doing graduate work in an eastern college. The letter disclosed a note of alarm because it had come to the writer's ears that Ashland was to become a junior college. That is, it was to give but two years' work instead of four. This particular alumnus was alarmed because of his degree, which would be seriously impaired by such a move. I hastened to say to the writer, that such was not the case but certainly would be the case if we do not get all the support now due Ashland.

I have tried for several years to hammer in the fact that Ashland must be manned and equipped and I am confident that the brotherhood does not yet fully realize the gravity of the situation or else the gifts, as fine as they have been, would be even better. There is no time to lose! Absolutely none! But our hope has three anchors:

First, and most certain, is Beachler's campaign. That must and will be pushed through to a triumphant culmination. This can not be over-estimated. Second, is the canvass in the city and county of Ashland. We have delayed for OVER FORTY YEARS in asking the local people for a worth-while gift. I am told that the city gave $1,000 when the first building was erected and very little since, except in the small way of advertising in our publications. Now, after waiting for forty years, we must make no mistake. Something fine ought to be the result of this canvass. Third, there is the Interchurch World Movement. No one can tell at this point what this may mean to the smaller colleges but I am perfectly certain, that Ashland can not stand to be discountenanced by this movement. The moral effect would be most melancholy. But otherwise, it may mean its general uplift.

But we can not depend either on this latter source for support nor on the city and county alone. The only source which ought to stand sure, is the church which the College serves and for which she stands. But my final word on this very important matter is, that inside a very few years, say three years, matters will come to a focus not only for Ashland but for all colleges similarly situated. Without adequate support from those sources which by rights ought to support them, their faculties will fall away, their student bodies disappear, and the colleges will either gradually disintegrate, or assume new and reduced standing which their material equipment and faculty will make possible adequately to sustain.

Ashland's future is bright only if we make it so.

A MESSAGE FROM BETHEL CHURCH IN MICHIGAN

For some time past, I have felt a desire to write a report of our church for the Evangelist, and this evening as I was looking over the last issue of our beloved paper and read the letters from Brother H. Anderson, I felt that I could not do better than to write now. My mind goes back to the time when Brother Anderson was ordained to the ministry. It was at a communion service held at the home of our dear Brother Walter Clark, who is now enjoying the rewards of his labors. If it is true that the angels in heaven know of the good things happening here then Brother Clark has been made to rejoice many times because he ordained Brother Anderson. My heart goes out to Brother Anderson and his work, perhaps because we are one of the small, weak churches he speaks for. I feel too that instead of marking the weaker churches off the map, something should be done to help them. Our Lord never said (or meant) the stronger ones should trample under the weaker ones but he does advocate the doctrine of helpfulness and as Christians we are duty bound to help our weaker neighbors. So it struck a tender chord in my heart when I thought there were some of the brethren who think the weaker churches should be done away with. Oh! I wonder if you can realize what that would mean to some of us. I want to say in behalf of Michigan, we may be few in numbers but you will find among those few quite a goodly percentage who are just as loyal and just as true hearted Brethren and who have the salvation of souls quite as much at heart as any you will find anywhere else in the brotherhood. Then why should we be struck off the map, so to speak.

When I saw that black mark in front of Michigan in the little hand book, my heart ached for Michigan and mine was not the only one. Personally I do not believe Michigan deserved that. I will admit that if our members could all see the importance of tithing we could do a great deal more here than we do. But so long as they do not we can only go on doing the best we can with the means at hand, praying and trusting that the day may be not far distant when we will all make a little greater sacrifice and put our shoulders to the wheel and work the harder for the spread of the whole gospel. At the time of Brother Clark's taking away, we chose Brother John English for our elder and we feel that he has more than done his duty by us. He has come to us each month for nearly a year. At these times he preaches for us both morning and evening. His next date is November 15th, after which he will not be able to come regularly. We are hoping to find some one able and willing to take his place. At our last service a dear sister was baptized and came into the church. At our next service we will receive two by letter, so you see we are not entirely dead yet. Our State conference was held at New Troy, October 9th, and we wish to congratulate our Campbell brethren on the number of delegates from there. Campbell is certainly trying to do her share. As for a revival service, we have about come to the conclusion that so long as we cannot have both it would be more beneficial to have our regular services. So often when an evangelist comes they stay just long enough to awaken an interest and perhaps get one or two converts and then go away suddenly sometimes leaving two or three announced services unfulfilled and without baptizing the ones who did come. Such treatment will dishearten and discourage the strongest congregation. So I say, brethren, before you mark us off the map, be sure you have done all you could to help and encourage. Read Luke 17:2 and pray that all of us may be more anxious to build up than to destroy.

May we have the prayers of all sincere Brethren that our little band of workers here may not become discouraged. But may, the Holy Spirit so lay the burden of souls on our hearts that we can not rest night or day until we have reached the very limit of doing and enduring. May our faith reach out until we see many beloved neighbors and friends coming and worshipping with us. We have a beautiful little country church and one of the best furnished country churches in Michigan and through the kindness of Sister Walter Clark we have just had a new lighting system installed. We only wish we might use them oftener. I am afraid my letter is getting so long that it will find its way into the waste basket. But, Brethren, this is a subject that lies very near my heart, therefore I have said much more than I expected to at the start. My heart aches to see things moving at Bethel. Brethren, pray for us.

MRS. SAMUEL RICE,

Cassopolis, Michigan.

MIDDLE WEST CONFERENCE

(Formerly Kanemorado Conference)

The Middle West Conference was held at Hamlin, Kansas, October 10-12, 1919, with ten ministerial and twenty-seven lay delegates in attendance. The retiring moderator, H. F. Stuckman, emphasized the subject of missions in his report. John Lichty, president of the Mission Board, reported conditions at Fort Scott, McLouth and Maple Grove. His report include a report from Field Secretary Ronk of the National Mission Board, who had made a personal investigation of these points and had offered to extend aid to them from the National Board as follows: Ft. Scott, $700.00; McLouth, $400.00; and Maple Grove, $100.00. The proposition was accepted. The Board recommended that the question of the re-location of the Ft. Scott church building be left in the hands of the Ft. Scott church, and that the expense of same be assumed by them.

The treasurer of the Mission Board made the following report:

Balance from 1918,	$ 559.73

Sunday School Work

"The Sunday School as an Asset and a Liability" was the subject of an excellent paper by Mrs. O. L. Lewis of Falls City and read by Mrs. Reed. It should find its way to the columns of the Evangelist.

A "Sunday School Round Table" was conducted by H. F. Stuckman. The plan outlined by National Conference for holding Sunday school officers in the district was discussed by Brethren Otto, Whitted, Eglin, Kemper, and Miss Jennie Bailey. A motion was passed approving the plan of the National Board, and another making the Sunday school officers-elect a committee to see what could be accomplished along this line during the year.

Christian Endeavor Work

"The Efficiency Chart in Christian Endeavor" was the subject of a splendid talk by Miss Jennie Bailey of Carleton. The different committees were compared to the various parts of an automobile.

"The Place of the Junior and Intermediate Societies in Present Day Church Problems" was the subject of a paper by Mrs. J. D. Kemper and read by Rev. Kemper. Mrs. Kemper is an expert along this line of work. Her suggestions were pointed and practical. If put into effect in the local congregations, by qualified leaders, many young people might be saved to the church, who are forever lost to it because of a lack of wise leadership during the critical period of the young people's lives.

Change of Name of District

H. F. Stuckman suggested the advisability of changing the name of the district. After some discussion the question was left to ballot by the audience. The name "Middle West" received one more vote than "Missouri Valley" and was declared adopted.

Woman's Missionary Society

The session of the Woman's Missionary Society will doubtless be reported by their secretary.

Conference Officers

Ministers of the District will decide on time and place for the next conference.

C. W. YODER, Secretary.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MOYER-DECKER—At the parsonage of the Brethren church, in Fremont, Ohio, on October 25, 1919, occurred the marriage of Charles R. Moyer and Miss Mary E. Decker. Both are estimable young people, the bride being a member of the Fremont Brethren church. They will make their home during the winter in Toledo, Ohio. The best wishes of their many friends attend them. The ceremony was performed by the writer. H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

BEACHEY-GOTBERG—Sister Fern Beachey of Carleton, Nebraska, and Paul Gotberg of Minneapolis, Minnesota, were married at the home of the bride's parents in Carleton, October first, 1919. The bride is the youngest daughter of Brother and Sister F. P. Beachey. She has been a successful teacher for several years. The groom holds a responsible position with a large packing firm in Minneapolis. The best wishes of a host of friends go with them as they begin life's journey in their new relation. D. KEMPER.

MAUS-RANKIN—Mr. Carl Maus and Miss Bernice Rankin were united in marriage August 30, at the parsonage. Mr. Maus is a member of the Brethren church and lived at Denver. Mrs. Maus was a teacher in the public schools in Peru. Both are good Christian young people. May God's blessing rest upon this union. L. A. MYERS.

SHADEL-PETTY—Mr. Worthy Shadel and Miss Flossie Petty were united in marriage at the Brethren parsonage on October 1st. The bride is a faithful member of the Brethren church at Denver. Both are worthy young people. May the benedictions of divine grace rest upon them. L. A. MYERS.

JODGES-BRAMONER—Married by the writer at the home of the bride in Roanoke county, Mr. Charles E. Jodges and Sister Ella May Bramer. The contracting parties are beginning this new life together at the dawn of life's morning, the groom being 21 and the bride 18. May the dear Lord bless this a long and happy life. D. C. MOOMAW.

WOLGAMUTH-HOLMES—On August 6, 1919, at the home of their pastor in Ashland, Ohio, Mr. Harvey S. Wolgumuth and Miss Mary Savilla Holmes were united in marriage. They are the choicest blessings of our heavenly Father attend all through life. B. F. OWEN.

REED-RICHARDS—Mr. Wayne Reed of LeGrand and Miss Hazel Richards of near Garwin, Iowa, were united in marriage at the home of the bride, October 15. The ceremony was witnessed by about eighty relatives and friends. The bride is the only daughter of Brother and Sister Harvey Richards, and was a member of the Carleton Brethren church. Mr. Reed is a prosperous farmer and recently returned from France. Both bride and groom are very popular young people in the community. May they be richly blessed as they journey through life together. Ceremony by the pastor. FREEMAN ANKNUM.

IN THE SHADOW

HORNER—Harry J. Horner was born August 21, 1871, and died October 12, 1919, aged 48 years, 1 month and 21 days. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. Eli Teeter of Johnston; his wife and eight children. He was a member of the Conemaugh Brethren church. The funeral was conducted by L. Garvin Smith, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church. May God add sweetness to his sleep and peace to his ashes, and also comfort the sorrowing ones.

MAURER—Mary Jane, the wife of Aaron Maurer, was born in Fremont, Ohio, Feb. 14, 1849, and departed this life at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Ida Harrison, Fremont, Ohio, Nov. 8, 1919, being almost 80 years old. Her maiden name was Mary Jane Fryon, the daughter of Nathaniel and Azubah Fryon. She was married twice, her first husband being W. H. Fink. To this union five children were born. The husband and four children preceded her in death. She was married again to Aaron Maurer, April 3, 1887, who with her daughter and seven step children still survive her. The pastor and the Fremont Brethren church, of which the aged husband and one of her own members extend their sympathy to the bereaved family. May God's sustaining grace attend them. Funeral services were conducted by Elder S. M. Leese, of the Leese, of the Leese, of the Leese, assisted by the pastor, H. M. Oberholzer.

RYAN—John S. Ryan was a member of the Baptist church, the husband of Sister Addie Ryan. He was a faithful backer of the Brethren church to the end. He fell asleep on August 20, 1919, at the age of 88 years, 1 month and 12 days. He was one of the pioneers of the county and leaves a large family. Services in the Leon Brethren church, conducted by the writer. G. T. RONK.

EVANS—Sister Belle Evas fell asleep suddenly after a very brief illness. Though too far situated to attend the services of the church very often, she maintained her faith to the last and never lost her interest in the church. Her life was notable for her practical deeds of service and she is sorely missed by many. Services in the Leon Brethren church were largely attended by a crowd that could not get within the church. Services by the writer. Death came June 3, interment, June 6, 1919. G. T. RONK.

SEARS—Mary Angie (Mollie) Sears fell asleep on September 30, 1919. Her life was a life of faith in the Lord. She was the secretary of the Leon congregation in the trying years of the organization and building, was always faithful and about the Master's business. For three years she served as secretary of the Sister's Society and for two years as its president. In these five years she never missed a service. For a number of years she taught the Woman's Bible class but was forced to give up all these activities by ill health. Her passing is a great loss to the church. Services at Crown chapel by the writer. G. T. RONK.

HAVENS—C. S. Havens died August 20, 1919 at his home in Lanark, Illinois. The funeral was conducted at the writer's house by B. T. Burnworth on August 22. The deceased was one of the charter members of the Lanark church. The body was laid to rest in Lanark's beautiful cemetery. Z. T. LIVENGOOD.

On November the 3rd, the writer officiated at the funeral of Sister Myrtle Eickley of Waterloo, Iowa, assisted by Rev. J. E. Johnson, a former pastor of the west side Methodist church of Waterloo. Sister Eickley was 40 years old, lacking a few months, a faithful member of the Waterloo Brethren congregation and a splendid, noble woman. She was the wife of G. Edwin Bickley, and the daughter-in-law of Brother S. B. Bickley. Few women have served more admirably as wife, mother, and daughter-in-law than did Sister Bickley, and her death, coming so suddenly and in the very prime of her life, was a great shock not only to her immediate family but also to a wide circle of friends. The high regard in which this good woman was held by the church, by the community, and by her friends at a distance was evidenced by the great concourse of people that filled the church, and by the many rare and beautiful floral tributes. Sister Bickley left an infant daughter, and a son and two daughters ranging in age from ten to fifteen years. Her death has brought an irreparable loss in two homes—her own home and that of Brother S. B. Bickley her father-in-law. My heart truly goes out for these kind friends in their great sorrow, but I fervently pray that our God who is rich in comfort and grace may bring healing and comfort and guidance in this very trying hour. WM. H. BEACHLER.

JACOB C. CASSEL

Jacob C. Cassel was not a super-man, but had so many credits, as our lives are lived, that the confines of a short article will wholly prevent an adequate record.

Among his outstanding virtues was his loyalty to convictions of right. Not blindly devoted, always with a reason, for him to subscribe to a position meant his application thereto. Another quality was persistence. To secure his assent meant his continued devotion to the cause which he espoused. Another quality was liberality. He was always ready to do his full share in the maintenance of the things that he thought worth while.

Many other qualities could be mentioned. He was strongly inclined to the practical although never at the cost of a compromise of principle. Those who now can testify to the financial sacrifices made for the things in which he was interested, and the things in which he was interested meant all the active work of the church; the spiritual of course, but particularly education, publication, missions, ministerial supply and every church activity.

Upright in his manner of life, careful of his engagements, scrupulously exact in efforts to fulfill all promises, hopeful of success, realizing the importance of personal efforts, yet relying not upon his own strength. A man of force, courage, and conviction, determined, persistent, loyal. His latter years shrouded in a cloud of hopeless illness, yet interested in life and work until the end.

His passing leaves a blank that will long be left unfilled. He will be especially missed in our mission work in which during many years he was particularly interested. He was practically the originator of our foreign efforts, and was devoted thereto.

Space forbids great details, but these can be supplied by those who knew him. He carried into his personal friendship the same qualities manifested in his other activities and interests. WM. KOLB, JR.

AN APPRECIATION

When the word came that Brother Cassel had crossed the mystic stream I felt a distinct personal loss. And yet, if ever to a man "to live was Christ and to die gain" it must have been so to him.

I first learned to know him by coming in contact with him at our General Conference. From then until now I have held him in the highest esteem. Jacob C. Cassel was a great man in the Brethren church. He held many places of trust and shared in the toil of many difficult undertakings and all for the love of his Master and his unflinching interest in the church of his choice. He was a member of the Board of Trustees of the College for a number of years and served as president of the Board. He was an active and earnest advocate of foreign missions and was among those who organized our Foreign Missionary Society and he was the treasurer of the Board from the first until within a year.

There were three striking characteristics that marked his life, that impress me now as

I think of him. The first was, he was a man of strong convictions. He held to his convictions on matters of faith with a sincerity that could never be questioned. He had an intense interest in missions founded upon deep conviction of Gods Word on the subject.

He gave freely of his time, his strength and his money, for the support of the work of the church and the interests of the Kingdom of God.

He was ever faithful to the stewardship committed to him. What he did and gave was an offering as unto the Lord.

Jacob C. Cassel lives in the life of the Brethren church. He lives in the life of each of his many friends. His body lies in the old cemetery at Germantown among the honored dead. Alexander Mack, Peter Keyser, Harriet Livermore and others. May we who are left behind for a day or a year or so, cherish his memory. May we emulate his virtues and be so faithful to our Lord that on the morning of the Great New Day we may greet Brother Cassel.

JACOB C. CASSEL

Back as far as memory will take me, I again live in the days of my early boyhood, thirty-five years ago. The Brethren Evangelist then came into our home, and it seems that the only thing I can clearly recall on its pages is the name of Jacob C. Cassel. His firm faith in the inspired Word of God even then inspired me with a love for the Bible.

Little did I then think that this man would be one of the very foremost factors in the moulding of my entire life. Young and tender, yet in the first years of my ministry, a mere boy, scarcely of age, it was my privilege to become the pastor of The First Brethren church of Philadelphia. Some of the trying circumstances of life brought together into one home, our good Brother Cassel and myself. In the same room we had our study, and the moulding began. How he opened my eyes, and gave my religious thinking some real Gospel basis! Here his first wife died. Here, in this home, the present Mrs. Cassel came into his life to bless it. From those days until now, we have been bosom friends. He was as a spiritual father to me until the day of his death. All I wish to say more here, is, that if my ministry has been a blessing to any soul or to any people on earth, God alone will be able to say how much of this will be due to the spiritual direction that Brother Cassel gave this life of mine.

Now, he is gone. It seems that it cannot be. How I shall miss him, and his constant encouragement! How he loved the old Book! How loyal he was to its every fundamental teaching! How he loved the hope of his Lord's appearing! It was not permitted him to "go without dying," but, "we who are alive and remain shall not precede him." Thank God, we shall soon be "caught up together to meet the Lord in the air,"—the Lord, "whom having not seen we love." In the meantime, "Know ye not that a prince has fallen in Israel?" Fallen? Yes! Yet, being dead, he speaketh! And, his works do follow him!

LOUIS S. BAUMAN.

ELDER JACOB C. CASSEL

At the general conference of the Brethren church, held at Ashland in the early part of September, 1887, I first met the man whose going from our midst has left a vacancy among us, which only God can fill. He was then in apparently robust health, with clear brain and ready tongue,—a man of ideas, with ability and courage to express them. I was then new to the ministry, and far from sure of myself, and well remember how I admired this confident and able man. He seemed indeed to me, a man of affairs to whom my soul paid willing tribute. As we met more and more frequently, after conference began to be held annually,—a policy which he ardently championed, I met him face to face, and familiarity did not lessen my earlier estimate of him. His natural business instincts, made him a delightful man to work with in the Ministerial Association of the church, for he never needed a second reminder, when death in our ranks had made it necessary to call for the keeping of our promise to each other. Both what he knew, and what he had, were freely placed upon the altar of any cause in which his soul delighted. His active and public endeavors for the college, and most of all, his untiring efforts for the world's evangelization, gave him a most conspicuous place among the advocates of progress both upon the platform and the printed page. For years he has seen the end approaching, or rather the beginning, which for the want of a better word, we call death, and he was not afraid. He has done his work well, contributing his full share toward making the Brethren church a permanent power for good in the land, and though his going hence will cause his loved ones pain, none who knew him will doubt that he is enjoying "the rest which remaineth for the people of God." May the Lord bless those who fill the places made vacant by his death, and make them equally fruitful for good.

MARTIN SHIVELY.

DO YOU KNOW A BETTER CHRISTMAS GIFT?

Many a man or woman remembers that Christmas, many years ago, when The Youth's Companion was for the first time numbered among the family gifts; and how, long after many another present was broken or lost or discarded, the paper continued week after week to offer its treasure of stories and counsel and inextinguishable entertainment.

Today The Companion brings into the home that same zest of expectancy that you felt when you were in your eager youth and when you watched so impatiently for the postman's coming every Thursday. Would it not be worth while to give to some one of your friends or to a family that same Christmas pleasure?

By ordering before Christmas the new subscriber will get the opening chapter of Charles B. Hawes' splendid serial of the Maine coast, "The Son of a Gentleman Born."

The Church Awakening and Moving

The church was never so burdened with the responsibility of leadership as now. It is being awakened to the existence of a situation that has never before been paralleled. Facts that are being unveiled before it concerning the world's dire need and its absolute helplessness are calculated either to stagger and intimidate the church or to challenge and nerve it to greater action. This situation is causing the leaders to fall upon their knees before God, calling upon him to grant them vision, wisdom and power to lead the church forward to meet the world's need as it never has done, but ever might have done. Will the church follow this rising God-appointed and God-inspired leadership? It will if it is brought face to face with the facts as the prophets already have faced them. The church has long been ignorant of the world's need and unconscious of its own opportunity, and for that reason it has often been indifferent when it might have been concerned and active. But if the present process of awakening keeps on, such criticism cannot long be honestly made; it cannot even now be made as it once was, for the world war and its aftermath have greatly stirred the church.

Here are some facts, not new, but being presented with a new significance, that are beginning to arouse the church and cause it to tremble with responsibility. Of the earth's estimated population of 1,640,000,000 only 36 percent, or 586,000,000 are at least nominally Christian. There are then more than a billion people in the world, or two-thirds of the earth's population, to whom the truths of Christianity have not been brought home. Europe is thoroughly distracted; she is torn as by a terrible earthquake. Belgium and Serbia were razed to the ground and their people left almost without a country. Northern France was turned into a dreary, barren, homeless waste. Russia is torn with revolution and anarchy and is bleeding her life away. Throughout the "Near East," or western Asia, suffering due to sickness and starvation is indescribable. Humanity's crying needs cannot be left unanswered, but they make almost incredible demands upon the Christian charity of the world, and "Europe generally is ill prepared to make large contributions towards aggressive Christian work." The burden must necessarily fall most heavily upon the Christians of America.

"Africa has a population of 130,000,000," according to the Interchurch World "Hand Book." "South Africa, with its 10,000,000 population, is Europeanized and mainly Christian. North Africa, with 80,000,000 inhabitants, is pagan. The Mohammedans of the north are conducting a persistent propaganda to win the pagans of Central Africa to Mohammedanism, and with some success. It is reported that for every 35 natives that become Christians, 100 become Mohammedans. The African field for missionary work contains 120,000,000 people."

"Asia contains nearly half of the population of the world, approximately 800,000,000. Of this vast population only a few paltry millions are Christian." From the "World's Statistics for Christian Missions" these figures are compiled; From India's population of 315,000,000, evangelical missions have won approximately 1,500,000. From China's population of about 400,000,000 (roughly one-fourth of the earth's population), evangelical missions have won about 437,000. From Japan's 54,000,000, evangelical missions have won approximately 116,000.

But Christian America is not without her own problems, to which she must give persistent and active attention, while at the same time she seeks to relieve conditions abroad. We are told what every informed person knows is true, "That there are unchurched areas, and areas in which there is urgent need of re-distribution of evangelical effort. There are, for instance, suburban communities springing up which have no churches, and there are other communities which have too many churches.

The racial problems are as acute here as in Europe. There are, for instance, three or four million Poles in this country (30 percent of them illiterate), and one million Czecho-Slovaks; there are more Italians in New York City than there are in Rome, and more Jews than there are in Jerusalem; there are 300,000 Indians and 400,000 Mexicans in our population; there are special problems presented by the native Alaskan as well as by the population of Hawaii and the West Indies; there is the Negro question; there are questions appertaining to various itinerant groups who have few opportunities of hearing the word of God." There is the problem of labor and capital demanding a Christian solution. The plague of Bolshevism is threatening the world, and only the Christian spirit and Christian control can effectively combat it. Greedy overreaching, extravagant expenditure and jealousy are causing a class spirit that promises trouble unless the Christian church can counteract these extremes. All this economic and social unrest presents to the church both a duty and a challenge, for back of them all is the great problem of sin which the church is eternally set to combat. Dr. A. E. Cory, associate service secretary of the Interchurch World Movement and former missionary to China, has said, "The time has come when there is a moral issue involved in this social unrest, and the church can never be silent on any moral question."

Is the church big enough, powerful enough and resourceful enough to meet all these problems? Is it equal to its task? There will be very general agreement to an affirmative answer to all these questions. We believe and know that the church of Jesus Christ is the biggest single organization in the world. It is largest in purpose, broadest in sympathy and universal in its scope. Within the membership of the church is the great majority of all the wealth and instruments of power. The greatest and most resourceful minds are in its folds; if any problem can be solved by the minds of man, the church has the ability to solve it. And first and above all, the church is backed by all the power and wisdom of God, by whose wisdom alone all the tangles of life are made clear. But all these things we have always possessed and have long realized, and still we have been unable to meet the demands as we ought. It must be admitted that the church has not always been as effectively active, as far-seeing in its forward look and as intense in its evangelistic effort as it might have been. The church must exercise a more positive and vital influence in all the affairs of men and carry the spirit and life of Christ into all the world as rapidly as possible. This is the day of the church's opportunity, and by the very uneasiness in religious circles, we can see that it is conscious as never before of the fact that this is its day.

Two signs point to the church's final victory appear on the horizon. First, there is a stirring among all denominations of a spirit of revival, a new consciousness of divine compulsion to prosecute their missions with all possible vigor. Various denominational forward movements have sprung into being during the last few months, due largely to the stress of the war. Certain denominations have set before themselves programs so vast as to exceed all other denominational programs combined before the war. The church that does not both formulate but prosecute a great program as this hour will lose its day and die.

The second sign of hope that the church will be able to meet the demands made on it at this time is the new spirit of willingness and effort to co-operate in a great program of world conquest. Every single denomination is conscious of the fact that the task before the church of Christ is too large for it alone and that if it does not secure the co-operation of the other denominations, its own effectiveness will be minimized. The churches are coming to see that just as the allied nations, by a co-operation that did not lose them their individuality and sovereignty, won the world war against Prussianism, so they can co-operate to take possession of the unoccupied fields and hasten the coming of the kingdom of God through the earth.

To awaken the church more fully to this situation, to stir it to action and to provide it with the most effective plans for the accomplishment of its task, is what certain great leaders and prophets of the church have set themselves to do. Their spirit, purpose and wisdom has taken shape in what is known as the Interchurch World Movement. From such an obviously providential movement, the Brethren church cannot afford to be aloof.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother John Hartman of Mt. Olive reports that Brother and Sister Charles Cook assisted the Mt. Olive church in a successful revival.

Brother E. L. Miller was greatly used of God in an evangelistic campaign at McKee, Pa. The people gave him hearty co-operation and appreciated his services. Brother Hall proved to be a most efficient co-worker.

The second "appreciation" of the group written in honor of Elder Jacob C. Cassel and published on page 16 of the Evangelist of December 3, was written by Dr. J. Allen Miller. The name was inadvertently dropped when the forms were being made up.

Brother Bell reports his campaign with Brother Henderson at Clay City, Indiana. In this campaign the rain was no small handicap, and yet it was quite successful. Clay City is a promising field, and is of special interest because its success means the opening up of a new field in Hoosierdom for Brethrenism.

Cerro Gordo, Illinois, has recently enjoyed an awakening afforded by the evangelistic effort of their pastor, Brother D. A. C. Teeter as preacher and Brother H. E. Eppley as song leader. They also received inspiration from the district conference which convened with them in October. They are making an effort to measure up on the Four Year Program.

The Fillmore, California, conference is reported by the secretary, Brother C. E. Snyder. He writes briefly and to the point, and thus paves himself a good reporter. Doubtless the young Fillmore church, which is shepherded by Brother Lowman, receives much help from the fellowship and addresses of the visiting Brethren.

Sister Detwiler writes to call our attention to certain typographical errors which escaped the proof reader in her report of the Hollywood revival. In the fifth line she intended to say that the number of confessions "were 20" instead of 50 and in the 21st line she said, "There were 50 present to study John." We thank her for calling our attention to the error.

All will be glad to receive word from "the Cooks;" Brother James gives good account of himself in this issue. He and the Salem folks are being honored of God in their work together. He still maintains a keen and vital interest in the work at Krypton, but he has been unselfishly trying to decrease that Brother Rempel might increase in the hearts and lives of the Krypton people.

Brother L. A. Myers, who has had charge of the Denver and Sydney, Indiana, churches, reports the closing of his pastoral leadership at Denver and the taking up of the work at College Corner in connection with Sydney. A number of gifts of love and expressions of appreciation, which are the pastor's greatest reward from his people, were given him as he was leaving for his new field.

The letter in this issue from little Marguerite Gribble was written before the one recently published containing the news of the death of Sister Rollier, but was received at our office a number of days later. You will be interested in the description of the journey up the Congo river. Knowing the fatal ending of Sister Rollier's sickness, we cannot help reading this message with a spirit of sadness. Let us pray that they may be spared further loss.

The loss of Brother P. M. Fisher by death will be greatly felt by the Brethren churches of the Southern Indiana district. He was a spiritual father to the Peru church and besides serving several churches faithfully as pastor, he held himself ready to help any church in time of need. Brother Fisher was a good and useful man. Our sincere sympathies go out to those who mourn.

President Jacobs and the editor were privileged to attend the Interchurch World Conference held at Columbus, December 1-3, and both came away convinced that the Interchurch World Movement is the most thoroughly planned and most ably financed of any religious movement in modern times, and is fraught with great possibilities for the kingdom of God. It has no thought of doing away with denominations, nor of lessening any people's denominational loyalty, but seeks to bring about a more vigorous prosecution by each denomination of its own task and a more perfect co-operation of all the denominations in the great common task of evangelizing and Christianizing the world. No church can afford to keep aloof from this movement and least of all the small church.

If any one in the brotherhood has had any doubt as to whether Ohio meant business in the college endowment campaign, such doubt will likely disappear when the report of the Fairview church canvass is read. Brother Beachler was full of smiles when he returned from Washington C. H., and it was not long till we learned the reason, for the news was too good to keep. The fact that one of the small churches had gone $3,600 was very encouraging; moreover, in that little congregation was found a man who raised the highest record gift 50 percent. That was reassuring to those who had faith in Ohio. We would like to reach over and shake hands with those Fairview members and extend to them our congratulations. May God continue to bless Brother Beachler's great mission. No one realizes the importance of this campaign quite so much as he and Dr. Jacobs, whose anxiety is keenly expressed in every installment of his "Notes."

Again we are privileged to welcome another new member to our Evangelist Honor Roll; and again we are made to realize that the mission churches are not the least among all the churches of Israel, for they are rapidly finding their way on the Honor Roll. Peru, Indiana, is the fortunate church that now is receiving the weekly visits of the Evangelist into at least 75 percent of the homes. "The Little Brown Church" is continually growing and boosting but when we remember who is pastor we are not surprised. Most everything goes that Brother Carpenter takes hold of. We learn that they recently set out to fill a "Joash Chest" with $1,000 and ended at the appointed time with more than $1,100.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Relation of Revival to City's Progress. By Charles A. Bame

First Article of Series By Local Ministers, Written for North Manchester Journal

The advantages of the city-wide evangelistic campaign that starts this evening can not be too highly estimated. One of the greatest needs of the present time is unity of thought and harmony of action with respect to the things that have made this country and town great. Perhaps no small city of Northern Indiana owes more to religion than our own. With the largest Dunker college in the country in our midst, we have attracted to our town, beautiful in itself and in its location, many people from distant places. They came here because they have thought of our city as a religious place where they would be surrounded with religious people, religious customs and religious opportunities.

We are passing through unusual times and experiences. Never in the world's history have so many unusual happenings occurred; never so many dangers threatened the government and things we once thought were stable and enduring. Never have been so seriously questioned, everything we have about us and of us. People are thinking as they have done in no time in all the known history of man. Some things remain unquestioned. Some are even surer of their place and their value is more certain. Religion is the one sure thing in its hold on man; men will pray; they will worship; the word of God or as we think of it, the Bible, was never so popular as it is right now. No book of man in any month for years has equalled the Bible in the sale as a popular book. As sure as man was God-created, so sure will he reach and search after him. Until another proves more popular in its hold on man; until another book has a system of morals for man and nations that excel that of the Bible, it will maintain its place.

Evangelism stresses the value of the Book. It stresses the need of citizens keeping in touch with God and keeping his commands. It stresses the duty of the community good and welfare. It tries to put down the things that wreck society and separate families and to build up at the same time, into the lives of the community, that which is of real worth. It aims to get together every class of society, and mold it into a more complete harmony.

More than that, it accomplishes its task, in a degree that is worth all it costs in time and money and devotion. In the coming weeks, more people of our town will be mingling with each other than any other opportunity offers during the whole year. None will be excluded because of the street they live on, their place in society, the clothes they wear or the kind of auto they ride in. It is the most cosmopolitan meeting the community offers during the entire year.

Furthermore, it will give every person a chance to do something for himself and his posterity. Yes, I said everyone. We shall sing together; we shall pray together; we shall speak our experience and tell what folks do not know who have not our experience. It will be a good time to have a good time together.

How Secure a Greater Spirituality? By H. C. Cassel

(Address given at the Pennsylvania State Conference, Johnstown)

This is a deep subject, and yet fundamentally the question can be answered in a single sentence: By the individual members becoming more spiritual. Doubtless you will say, We all know that; what we want to know is, What can be done that the individual members may become more spiritual? That is a practical question, but it is as old as the hills, and has never yet been successfully solved. Every conceivable method has been tried, sometimes resulting in a measure of success, but no fixed rule has been discovered by which the will of man can at all times be brought into captivity to the will of God.

Jesus breathed on the disciples and said, Receive ye the Holy Ghost; but we have no evidence that they received him at that time.

For a little later, Peter said, I go a fishing, and the other disciples said unto him, We go with thee. Doubtless Christ was grieved with them, as he was on many other occasions. Therefore he said unto them, "Tarry ye at Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." "For ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," and it was so, that after they tarried, fasted and prayed, for ten days, the Holy Ghost did come upon them in mighty power, which was made evident by their preaching, and the conversion of three thousand souls in one day. And the power to heal the sick, and raise the dead, and speak in other tongues was given to them.

The only unfailing recipe therefore which I can offer to "Secure a Greater Spirituality," is that given by the Lord himself, namely, "Tarry, fast and pray." The Lord is just the same today, as when he went away. He is no respecter of person. He admonishes all the saints to be FILLED with the Spirit.

Abundant provision has been made for every living soul to be filled with the Holy Spirit, if we are willing to make an unconditional surrender, but let this be understood, that we cannot dicker with the Holy Spirit for terms; he will not compromise with the carnal mind. Jesus said, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." "To him that overcometh, I will grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." The conditions of obtaining the fulfillment of this promise, which is transcendently above every other are, to "hear his voice," which is the voice of the Holy Spirit, and to let him lead. Another condition is that we "open the door," which is to throw open wide the door of our heart, and make an unconditional surrender. God saith, "Son give me thine heart." This he asks not because the heart is good, for God saith, "The human heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." But he asks that we yield him our sinful hearts that he may give us a new hearts which will be true, pure, loving and kind. With the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth. Confession is made unto salvation." The scripture saith, "Out of the heart are the issues of life." How very essential then that our heart should be right.

It should be evident to every Christian, that it is impossible to secure a greater spirituality in our churches than what the individual members including the minister bring with them. The Holy Spirit does not float about in space, nor does he sit around in empty church pews. He is not a vapor, nor is he simply an influence. He is a personality; a vapor or an influence, can not be grieved, but the Holy Spirit is easily grieved, because he is responsible for the perfecting of the saints. He must be grieved very much when we refuse him his rightful place in our lives and in the general activities of the church. The Lord distinctly said, "Ye are the temple of the Holy Ghost." This I consider the greatest responsibility that the Lord has ever placed upon any human being; we may well tremble when we think of our high calling, and yet it is seldom mentioned by our preachers and teachers. The laity of the church has a very vague conception of what is really meant by being the temple of the Holy Spirit. I wonder if all our preachers are blameless before the Lord for neglecting to emphasize this very important truth! One thing is sure; we never will have a greater spirituality in the Brethren church unless our preachers and teachers lay it to heart, and begin to emphasize the name, mission and power of the blessed Spirit equal with the name of Christ. Our people should not know less about the Christ, but they should know a great deal more about the "Holy Spirit," and give evidence of the fact by manifesting a greater spiritual warmth.

The blessed Spirit can only manifest himself through the human heart. And then only to the extent that he can get the control of the mind and the consent of the will. Man, at least in this world, is a free moral being. He has the power to accept or reject Christ, and resist the Holy Spirit. The heart may indeed be broken by the strong appeal of the Spirit, operating through some faithful servant of God, but if there is a reservation which the carnal mind is not willing to yield, the Spirit will not come in and abide.

He may continue to strive with a person for the possession of his heart for a life time.

A brother according to the flesh was converted at the age of 65 years; his testimony was that he had been under conviction for 48 years. O the infinite love of our God, and the faithfulness of the blessed Spirit is too wonderful for words.

There are many in the church that treat him no better. Some have been in the church for years, but have never made a full surrender. The Spirit is still knocking, waiting to come in, and bestow the most precious gift heaven contains, even the infinite love of Jesus, while their soul is famishing for want of the bread of life. Yes! while these church members are donning their fashionable clothes to go to the opera, Movie or worldly social function, the Spirit is knocking and waiting to come in. But the door is shut tight. O yes! they go to church, and Sunday school and they take communion, but they are not filled with the Holy Spirit, they are rather filled with the spirit of the world. To be honest with their own hearts they would rather go to the movie than to prayer meeting.

I feel confident that if our preachers would persistently emphasize the necessity of being Spirit-filled, if we expect to reign with Christ, and if they would set the example by having frequent special consecration services at which time they would press the necessity of making a full surrender, that many could be kept from affiliating themselves with secret societies and other ungodly institutions. The Holy Spirit must be greatly grieved when those who have professed loyalty to Christ, will deliberately go and affiliate themselves with worldly organizations, and are yoked together with the world, by oath and obligations contrary to the express command of our Lord, who said, "Swear not at all," and again, "Come ye out from among them and be ye separate and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." Note the conditions. No man can brush aside the Christ, and the Holy Spirit and rush into the presence of God with a petition for "God out of Christ is a consuming fire." The only possible way to get to the throne of God is through Christ by the power and guidance of the Holy Spirit. How very essential then to be on good terms with the blessed Spirit! When will we give him his rightful place?

Our Resources and Their Availability. By G. L. Maus

Some one has said that the proper study of mankind is man. The study of biography, therefore, is always a most fascinating and helpful study. We would know all that we may about them, about their beginnings, their struggles, their habits, about their viewpoint in life. It is my purpose to direct your attention for a little while to some of the demands that are so urgent and that we are called upon to meet.

It is unfortunate that many of the churches are more concerned about getting hold of some kind of a panacea that is guaranteed to fill their churches than they are about getting at some fundamentals which will indicate just what should be done, regardless of what may have been attempted elsewhere, even though these methods proved to be successful. There are two important considerations which every church should remember: First, that there is no panacea for all church ills; and, second, that no two churches are exactly alike.

There is nothing of greater importance than knowing how to diagnose one's situation. This refers to individuals as well as to organizations. When the family physician realizes that his patient has developed symptoms which he does not understand, if he be a good physician, he very wisely calls in a diagnostician—a specialist. This expert does not confine himself to surface indications,—the fact that the patient has a fever doesn't prove very much. The specialist studies very thoroughly into the history of the case. He finds what the patient's parents died of, and his grandparents. He goes into as many details as possible, but he spends much time in getting at the beginning of things. And when he masters the case (he very rarely prescribes) he tells the regular physician just what ails his patient, and the regular physician knows just about as well what to prescribe as the expert does, after he knows what is the matter with him. It is knowing what ails the patient that troubles the average physician, and often he will experiment quite a good deal before he hits upon the right remedy.

It is just so in the work of securing the release of the resources of the church and overcoming its selfishness. There is no remedy that will cure all the ills of the church any more than there is for the ills of the human body. They each require a thorough-going diagnosis. He must go into the history of their parentage, their training and the things that even now cause them to be selfish and tight-fisted. And after one has spent time and thought in studying the people, and the sacred Word of God, actually mastering the situation, it will be comparatively easy to know what method to apply.

There is just one method to apply, and that is the Gospel method: all other methods will fail. Of all the great truths taught by Jesus and recorded in the Gospel, the one that came nearest to oblivion,—being quoted, not by the four Gospels, but by Paul—is one of the best; namely, "It is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20:35). There never was a time in the history of the Brethren church when she had more money than now. All the demands that were made upon us during the great world conflict have been met and yet our resources have not been exhausted. You talk to some men about money for the Lord and you will be made to think they were poverty-stricken, and within one week's time they will pull off some land deal that will involve thousands of dollars, but which they have none for the Lord's work. It is appalling when we think of the billions of dollars that are being spent every year for chewing gum, for confectionaries, for jewelry and for tobacco, in comparison to what little is given to the Lord's work. The problem is not the lack of wealth but the LACK OF CONSECRATION. It is of thrilling significance that God has put the power of enormous wealth into the hands of his people just at this crisis, and it is of added significance that as never before he is arousing his faithful few to a right conception of their duty in giving. The triumph of the Kingdom is sure, but woe to that man who, when the King cometh, shall have buried his Lord's money (Matt. 25:20).

There were three methods of giving noted in the New Testament. There was first the Jerusalem Method, where they gave everything. This is not a practical method except in a few cases. It was used at that time because the early Christians thought the coming of Christ and the time of accounting were near. There is a sense in which a man cannot give all. He must have money to take care of his family, which is commended by Paul, and he must have capital with which to conduct his business that he may increase his ability to give.

But there is a sense in which he can give all by consecrating his time, talent, and money, whether he have little or much, to the building of the kingdom in the whole earth, the advancement of the race, and the development of his own Christian character. This was what Christ and the early Christians did, and it was what the rich man would not do, in order to follow Christ.

The second method of giving might be called the Philippian method, where the people gave only occasionally. Occasionally giving will not keep local work, missionary, benevolent, nor educational enterprises successfully moving forward. For all fields at home and abroad we must have regular, systematic, and increased maintenance of the work in order to hold what we gain and enter new fields. The occasional giver is generally the man who gives when he feels like it.

The man who will not give except when he feels like it ought to have a wife who keeps house when she feels like it. If she does not feel like getting up in the morning to prepare breakfast and set the house in order, let her lie abed and let her husband get his own breakfast. If she feels like making the beds, very well. If not, let them be unmade and let the husband sleep in the same impression he made the previous night. If she wants to garnish the house and have it clean and bright all right. If not, even so, let it go unkept and dusty. During my short ministry I have been in homes where the wife kept house when she felt like it and the homes were anything but pleasant to look upon. Most things worth while must be done whether we feel like it or not. They must be done because of consecration to our task. Giving should be given whether we feel like it or not.

Our third method of giving is the Corinthian Method. Paul is its author. "On the first day of the week let each one of you lay by in store as he may prosper that there be no collections when I come" (1 Cor. 16:2). This method people have misinterpreted. They take this weekly offering for the support of the church whereas Paul commanded it for the help of the poor, and that not as a substitute for the tithe.

What is meant by the tithe? The tithe is the tenth part of one's net income, that is, the gross income minus the necessary running expenses. "The tenth shall be wholly unto the Lord" (Lev. 27:32).

Why is the tithe holy? Because it is a sacred symbol. God has no seed of our gifts, seeing that everything is his, but he requires this portion to remind us of our stewardship. Just as the tribute money paid to Caesar was a recognition of his authority, so the holy tithe which God required was an acknowledgement of his Lordship. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22:21).

Just as the Sabbath, an institution already existing (Ex. 16:23), is enjoined upon Israel and given a national significance (Ezek. 20:11, 12), so the tithe is first introduced as already existing, (Lev. 27:30), and is made the basis for national giving.

The Sabbath is nowhere more than inferentially endorsed by Christ but the tithe is indirectly commanded. "Ye pay the tithe. . . these ought ye to have done" (Luke 11:42).

The tithe is a debt. The free will offering is a gift. If we owe a person we must pay that debt before we can give him a gift. So with our gifts to the Lord. We owe him a tenth and all we can give over and above that is a gift.

If every member of the Brethren church would give to the Lord the tenth, or that which we owe him, the Brethren church would be at a loss to know what to do with its resources. We would then need to go before the Lord and ask him to send men into the needy fields to fill our vacant pulpits and to the mission fields to carry the gospel to those who are yet in darkness. Our beloved college would not need to have a man out in the field pleading with people for money to support our institution of learning. May we pray that the time will soon come when such will be the case.

In conclusion, may I say that our Father has given us all things that he may lead us to himself and make us children. The Master has given to each time and talents according to our ability to use wholly for him till he comes. May we all, dear readers, practice it more and more as faithful and wise stewards, that having been faithful over a few things we may be made ruler over many things in the kingdom of our Lord.

The New Day for Brethren Churches

By William A. Gearhart, General Missionary Secretary

After God Almighty had created the earth with all its beautiful flowers, vegetation, mountains and lakes, and crowning it finally with the man, and last, but not least, the woman after discovering that man was lonesome without her, he looked upon this great achievement and said it was "very good," and it does seem as if no human being could look upon this great handiwork and doubt for one moment the existence of a creator.

Every day was a bright and new day, with no alarm clocks to disturb Mother Eve and her husband, no whistles blowing to tell them when to go to work, no weeds and thistles to hoe out of the potato patch; in fact there was nothing to mar their happiness or molest them until his Satanic Majesty appeared upon the scene and induced Mother Eve and her husband to disobey their Creator, and immediately their happiness was displaced with misery, disappointment, trouble, sorrow and death; and the world grew wicked, and more wicked until God Almighty in his infinite wisdom, thought it best to destroy the world with a flood, and it was done, saving Brother Noah and his family.

A new day and a new opportunity was given mankind to replenish the earth and enjoy the things which were made for him to enjoy, but after a time foolish man, in his selfishness, stubbornness and disobedience, finds himself again in a wicked world, making it necessary for God, the Father to start a new race, giving it a new day with instructions as to how he should behave himself in order that he might enjoy life, but you who are familiar with the Word know how that persistence in disobedience made it finally necessary for the Creator of all things to send his only begotten Son, who assisted in the creation, to this wicked old world to show man how he should live and finally to suffer and die the shameful, ignominious death upon that cruel cross in order that wicked man might be redeemed.

But how thankful we are that he arose from the grave and founded his church, the greatest of all institutions in the world, against which he said the gates of hell should not prevail, and we are living witnesses, bearing testimony that no power on earth can prevent the church of Jesus Christ from carrying out her mission, that of evangelizing the world and preparing the way for the reign of righteousness on the earth.

To be sure his church has passed through many dark and perilous times in which it may have seemed, at least to wavering Christians, that the devil was about to prevail, but these persecutions served to strengthen her for more terrible experiences through which she might be called to go before her task is accomplished.

The Brethren church, as one of the component parts of his body, has suffered along with other Christian denominations and is if necessary, ready to fight even greater battles than she has ever waged against Satan and his mighty army, knowing that with Jesus as her Captain, she must conquer.

The new day for Brethren churches is surely dawning, and we hope, that not one of our churches will be so dead that she can not seize the opportunity awaiting her to do mighty things for her Founder, in making him known to this sin cursed world.

We believe the Brethren church will keep pace with other Christian denominations in the aggressive movements which are being planned for the spreading of the gospel over the whole world.

The Presbyterian church contemplates the addition of 1,000,000 new members within the next five years, and the raising of $40,000,000 annually for the spread of the gospel. The spiritual development of the church, the consecration of lives and possessions, missionary education and extension publicity are also a part of their great program and they are now holding a convention in Dayton, planning to accomplish this work for their Master.

There are some very good reasons why our denomination should do her utmost to make Christ known to the world:

1—The Brethren church claims to have the whole gospel and nothing but the gospel for her message.

2—She is now and always has been opposed to war, slavery, brother going to law with brother, taking an oath, etc., principles, which the intelligent, earnest seeker of the truth should embrace.

3—The need for the teachings of the principles given by our Lord and Master while here on the earth, is perhaps greater now than it ever has been since the time it was given, for if there is anything that will cure the social, political, economical ills, and all other ills from which this old trembling world is suffering in these days, it is the unadulterated gospel of Jesus Christ, preached with all the earnest and fervor that possessed the Apostle Peter on the day of Pentecost, when the people were made to cry "men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter told them and thousands obeyed and were given eternal life.

Brethren, if every minister of the gospel should realize as he should, the dignity and importance of his position and calling, and every layman his responsibility and duty in properly supporting the ministry as the Apostle Paul enumerates them, what a mighty power the Brethren church would be.

If any of our ministers are looking for bigger jobs, they need not leave the ministry to find them, and if laymen really want to help their pastors to build up the body of Christ, let them attend the services more regularly, pray for their pastors daily, give them a better financial support, and live the true Christian life seven days a week, and then when they do cry out against the evils of the day and warn the people to flee the wrath to come, they can not feel that others are pointing the finger at them, and saying to them, "Look at your product!"

To be sure, there always will be people who do not care for the truth for they love darkness better than light. Just recently, in conversing with an intelligent man, about 60 years old, with reference to Christ and his teachings, he told me he thought Christ was a good man, a great reformer and an ideal character, but he said he did not believe in a future life and that when he would die, that would be the last of him, and if someone would arise from the dead and come to him, they could not persuade him otherwise.

Is this not what the Word says, that, "if they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither would they be persuaded if one arose from the dead?"

How can any one believe that Jesus Christ was such a good man and then disbelieve his statements concerning the future life which he verified himself by coming forth from the grave as he said he would? We are either for him or we are absolutely against him.

The new day which is rapidly approaching for the churches of our beloved brotherhood, we trust will be characterized by such zeal for the upbuilding of our churches as has never been known in all her history.

Some things which should give us encouragement and make us feel that we are going to do great things for our Lord:

✓ 1—The splendid spirit of optimism which pervaded in all the sessions of our Annual Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana.

✓ 2—The Four Year Program which is accomplishing so much for our churches through the earnest appeals of our Moderator, Dr. Bame.

✓ 3—The College Endowment Campaign, which is making such splendid progress with that dynamic force in the person of Beachler back of it.

✓ 4—The Evangelistic and Bible Study League which is launching out so encouragingly with that powerful Dr. Bell manipulating the oars.

✓ 5—The prospect for banner offerings for Home and Foreign Missions.

✓ 6—That splendid literature which is being spread over our brotherhood by our efficient corps of workers at our Publishing House.

7—The hopeful outlook for the future efficient ministry, which must be the result of the labors of our devoted Christian college staff, from President Jacobs and Dean Miller on down.

When we consider the blessings which the Master is continually pouring out upon us, and the splendid spirit of optimism among our loyal soldiers of King Emanuel and their willingness to do his bidding, we see no reason why the Brethren church should hesitate for one moment to go forward as the new day dawns upon us and when our Captain gives the command. She will not let a Red Sea, a mighty army ofimps or anything else stop her until she has reached the goal set by her Captain, and her faithful members shall have been promoted from the church militant to the church triumphant, and forever dwell with him, whose we are and whom we love to serve.

Dayton, Ohio.

How different the services of God's house would seem to us if we would prepare ourselves by calmness of demeanor and silent prayer. When people come rushing into the house of God, all out of breath because they are late, or talking and laughing as they take their places, there is little opportunity for the Holy Spirit to work, and little receptivity for the word of God.—St. Paul's Messenger, Albuquerque, N. M.

ADVENT--COMING

"Let every heart prepare him room." Are we ready for our royal Guest? Are our hearts fit to receive the holy Babe? This should be our first concern in preparing for the blessed Christmastide. It is coming with all its holy joys. "The heavenly Guest is at the door." Will you open for him and ask him to abide? In all your preparations remember that it is in honor of his coming that we should prepare all our joys. Then and then only will this Advent season be a blessed one.

"O how shall I receive thee,
How greet thee, Lord, aright?"

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Why the Church Must Go Forward. By J. Fremont Watson

(Moderator's address at Pennsylvania Conference)

Mr. Moderator and Brethren: We have been permitted through the good providence of God to assemble ourselves together as representatives of the churches of Pennsylvania district, in our Annual District Conference.

We have met, that we may together study more fully the great plan and love and work and resources of him who died for all men, but who now reigns until the last enemy shall be put under his feet. We come to study our human world, its vastness and its variety, its sins and superstition and suffering, its immeasurable need and its great possibilities. We come to study our personal resources of every kind, temporal and spiritual, and the obligation thence resulting. We come to study the work actually done, sure to find in the study much reason for thankfulness and joy; but also, it may be, many reasons for self condemnation and humiliation. We have come for these purposes of consultation, and, with these consultations, for common and earnest prayer to him who calls us to these tasks.

We have to face today the new problem of directing and controlling the great tides of life which are astir throughout the world. There is the great industrial avalanche that ever broke loose upon mankind, and we have to fraternize that great human power. We have the problem of humanizing nationalism. We must bring to bear upon it a universal religion with a universal brotherhood, with a spirit of universality of relations. We have the problem of re-enforcing and re-empowering Christianity, so that it will penetrate human life and all human relations.

How do you explain the turned keys in the doors of country churches? How do you explain the numbers of churches that stand impotent before their tasks? One of the great problems of our days is the releasing of these energies of our Christian faith so that they will make the character of our great nation an unanswerable argument in the proclamation of Christ to the world.

We are facing the problem of putting God to the test. We believe in his sufficiency. We stand confronting the great unsolved problems of our modern world; why are they unsolved in view of the sufficiency of God? Because we are not ready to venture out far enough on the sufficiency of God. We stand in the presence of the great problem of trying God out, of putting him to the tests to which he has challenged us against the intricate problems of our own land, against the mass of world problems rolling in upon us. We have seen turned loose in the world today great energies that make a man stand still and gasp unless there is somewhere in the world a hand that can be laid upon them and say to them, "I am your Lord. I conceive this to be the great central task of Christ's church in this present hour—that you and I like men, clear-eyed, unfearing, with a new and living confidence in God that has no limits to it, who dare cope with any problem on the earth, shall face the world today in which we live and claim that world, as a world over which Jesus Christ is to be King. He asks us to try him as to whether he can carry a seer. "Prove me now." That is his word. "Prove me now, prove ME now herewith, by bringing your tithes, the whole of them—which are mine, bringing these to ME and trying ME now. O, that in the days of this gathering there may come down such a new spirit of simple and living faith as shall make us bold to try to the limit the limitless God!

We are here today to confront these tremendous obligations, and to prepare ourselves, and so far as we may, to prepare the church for conquests and consecrations more truly apportioned to our resources, to the world's need and to the purpose of our Lord.

"I believe God Almighty has struck the world with the hammer of his eternal purpose, to awaken us from our lethargy. He is saying, "Awake, thou that sleepest, and see your tasks, your burdens, your opportunities and your possible glory."

THE CHURCH MUST GO FORWARD BECAUSE OF OUR CLAIM. We claim for ourselves more than for others; what do we more than others to justify the claim? We must go forward in order to justify our claim. Jesus claimed to be the Messiah, and in order to justify the claim, when John's disciples came and asked, Art thou he that should come? Jesus said, "Tell John the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed and the poor have the gospel preached unto them." This he said in order to justify his claim.

It would be to our discredit as representatives of the church of Jesus Christ, to ask on such an occasion as this, and at so late an hour in her history, What is the supreme mission of the church? To confess that we had not discovered it, would be to proclaim ourselves unworthy our position. It was declared long ago and with such plainness of definition that there is no room for doubt or speculation concerning it. The mission of Jesus Christ defines the mission of his church. The church if true to Christ has no new gospel to preach, no other foundation to lay than that which has been laid, no other book from which to teach men, than that inspired and infallible one of which she has been the custodian for ages, and no other power by which to save men and subdue nations, than that which comes from the crucified, but now risen and exalted Savior. She has no other work to accomplish than that defined in our Lord's last command. But while the great mission of the church remains the same, her opportunities for service and the corresponding special duties do not. With the changing times comes new duties; and there must be a wise discerning of the times by the followers of Christ if they would faithfully discharge their mission. We are brought face to face with new problems, new conditions of life, and changes in the world, which if they had been foretold, would have appeared incredible. There is also a growing conviction that greater changes are near at hand. There is a concurrence of signs attesting this. As by some prophetic instinct, devout men feel that God is preparing a new and glorious revelation of his Kingdom; and that he is rallying the forces under his control for new conquests. It is a time of confusion and unrest, of breaking away from old customs and beliefs. Men are musing, searching after truth, and exploiting new opinions. They are casting aside old environments, challenging old faith, and testing all things. Social and political changes affecting the destinies of great nations are taking place before our eyes with a rapidity that creates amazement, and the end is not yet. It is in the midst of such conditions that we, as a church, stand. It is not enough for the church to be ancient; it must be modern. To have sprung from an apostolic source is a credit, but it involves an obligation. There is something to live up to, and the cry, "Back to apostolic days" is necessary once in a while, lest we become intoxicated with the honor of a noble lineage.

But we are not in doubt, nor do we come to the present hour dismayed, distracted, and uncertain, as to our mission. One fact is evident beyond dispute, the Brethren church has borne steadfast and uncompromising witness to the truth as we have found it in the Word of God.

Among all the branches of Christendom we have insisted most strenuously upon the authority and sufficiency of the Scriptures. It is no time for silence, or for casting away sound doctrine, or for setting our sails to catch some breeze

Sitting at the Feet of Jesus

By Mrs. G. L. Maus

OUR SCRIPTURE

Now as they went on their way, he entered into a certain village: and a certain woman named Martha received him into her house. And she had a sister called Mary, who also sat at the Lord's feet, and heard his word. But Martha was cumbered about much serving; and she came up to him, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister did leave me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me. But the Lord answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art anxious and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: for Mary hath chosen the good part which shall not be taken away from her (Luke 10:38-42). Mary therefore, when she came where Jesus was, and saw him, fell down at his feet, saying unto him, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died (John 11:32). Jesus, therefore, six days before the passover came to Bethany, where Lazarus was, whom Jesus raised from the dead. So they made him a supper there: and Martha served; but Lazarus was one of them that sat at meat with him. Mary therefore took a pound of ointment of pure nard, very precious, and anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with her hair: and the house was filled with the odor of the ointment. But Judas Iscariot, one of his disciples, that should betray him, saith, Why was not this ointment sold for three hundred shillings, and given to the poor? Now this he said, not because he cared for the poor; but because he was a thief, and having the bag took away what was put therein. Jesus therefore said, Suffer her to keep it against the day of my burying. For the poor ye have always with you; but me ye have not always (John 12:1-8).

OUR MEDITATION

It was in one of Christ's journeys to the south that he came to Bethany, a small village on the eastern slope of Olivet, close to Jerusalem. It seems he preferred the quiet haven of Bethany as there are several indications in the Gospels that this was a favorite resort of Jesus during his Judean ministry. John speaks of Bethany as the village of Mary and her sister Martha (John 11:1). In his allusions to the family he makes Mary prominent, giving precedence to her name. St. Luke however makes Martha the central figure of his picture; "Martha received him into her house." She was the recognized head of the family. It was she who invited the Master and on her developed all the care of the entertainment, the preparation of the feast and the reception of the guests. Perhaps her guests outnumbered her invitations or something unforeseen had upset her plans; at any rate, she was cumbered and distracted. She breaks in suddenly among the guests and in the hearing of them all she says to Jesus, "Lord dost thou not care that my sister did leave me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me."

Mary was sitting at the feet of Jesus, listening to his words which fell like a rain of music upon her soul. Mary had assisted in the preparations and reception, as the "also" of verse 39 shows; while Martha's own words, "My sister did leave me to serve alone," themselves imply that Mary had shared the labors of the entertainment before taking her place at the feet of Jesus. The probability is that she had completed her task, and now that he who spake as never man spake before was conversing with the guests, she could not forego the privilege of listening to the voice she might not hear again.

But how does Jesus adjust this sisterly difference? He gently reproves the elder sister, "Martha, Martha," he said, as if her mind had wandered, "thou art anxious and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful: for Mary hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from her."

It is easy to see from this where Jesus thought the blame should rest. The fact was that Martha had misread the tastes of her Guest. She thought to please him by the abundance of her provision, the largeness of her hospitality; but for these lower pleasures of sense and of taste Jesus cared little. He had meat to eat that other knew not of and to do the will of him that sent him was to Jesus more than the nectar of the gods.

And so, while Martha's motive was pure, her judgment was mistaken. Had she been content with a modest service, she too might have found time to sit at the feet of Jesus.

While Jesus had a kind rebuke for Martha, he has only words of commendation for Mary. "Mary," he said, speaking the name Martha had not uttered, "hath chosen the good part, which shall not be taken away from her." Nor was the good part ever taken from her, for again and again we find her returning to the feet of Jesus. In the day of their great sorrow, as soon as she heard that the Master had come and called her, she arose quickly, and coming to Jesus, though it was bare dusty ground, she fell at his feet, seeking strength and help, where once before she had sought light and truth. And once more: when the shadow of the cross came vividly near, when Simon gave the feast, Mary sought those feet again, to pour upon them the precious and fragrant nard, the sweet odors of which filled all the house, as they have since filled all the world. Mary did not sit at the feet of Jesus in vain. She had learned to know Christ as few of the disciples did: for when Jesus said, "She has done it for my burying," he intends us to infer that Mary feels, stealing over her retiring but loving soul, the cold and awful shadow of the cross.

Mary gives us a type of the truest and best service; Martha shows us a kind of service which is only too common. She gave Jesus a loving welcome but his coming brought worry. She was so absorbed in the thought of what she could do for him, that she forgot how much more he could do for her.

Receiving, giving, praying, working—these are the alternate chords on which the music of our lives should be struck. That life shines the most and is seen the farthest which reflects most of the heavenly light; and he serves Christ the best who sits humbly and prayerfully at his feet, and then goes forth to be a "living echo of his voice," breaking for him the alabaster of a self-sacrificing love.

Cease for a while from your own works, and let God work in you. Wait in his presence, let his words take hold of you, and his love enthuse you, so you will find rest amid your toil, calmness amid the strife, and you will prove that the fret and the fever of life will all disappear at the touch of the living Christ.

OUR PRAYER

"Thou who are the everlasting light in our times of trouble, brighten the daily path of thy children with the shining of thy face. Let the sense of thy presence, like the shining of the sun, be always about us and within us. We ask not for thy coming, our Father, as if thou were afar off and needed our entreaty, but for the grace of hospitality in our own hearts whereby they may be open doors for thy waiting visitations of love and light. So may we come into those great communions of spirit which bring strength and quietness to our lives. Hear us, O Lord, in this deep wish of our souls, that we may be conscious of thy companionship, in the night watches, in the hour of temptation and in our seasons of loneliness and sorrow, for the sake of Jesus our Shepherd and our Savior. Amen."

Bryan, Ohio.

Laymen, do you think less of your church than your place of business and your show window? The church building should represent the glory of God and the beauty of holiness. In a bad state of repair, it is a poor advertisement for the Head of the Church and the denomination whose name appears on the weatherbeaten signboard.—The Inner Mission Worker, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Why The Church Must Go Forward

of popular favor. In a time of confusion and doubt we need most of all to hear the voice of certainty; the clear, strong, and conscience compelling accent of truth. The church of Rome ever on the alert, has sought to supply this need with her doctrine of Papal infallibility. Have we any testimony to make? If so, now is the hour to speak. Let us not mislead ourselves with the cry, "work, work," and then in some quiet, peaceful day settle our beliefs. No! the truth first, and the truth always. It is the instrument by which we work, the sword by which we conquer. The church that the world now needs most and that will best meet the new demands of the new day now dawning, is the one that shall have the purest and plainest scriptural appeal, and will fearlessly and honestly preach it. Our church has been characterized in the past as doctrinal, and this feature has been no small part of her strength and glory. Whatever truth we possess we must keep to the end. As faithful witnesses of Christ we must tell the whole truth as we know it, and in its right relations. There is no need to change our testimony to please men; that would betray the truth. For myself, I hold that we have no reason to abandon the venerable faith of our fathers, but rather to write it larger and clearer. A growing church will not be marked by a shriveling creed, nor by one that includes only the alphabet of the Christian faith; but by a larger and growing testimony to the truth.

Thus we must make the most of our message. If you were to ask what is this message, Christianity's message, I should answer in terms perfectly simple. This Christian message is this, "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself." This is Christianity's message, "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." We have lost no doubt some of the sharpness and acuteness of this message through long familiarity with it. Now, I will rest Christianity's case upon one word, redemption, and upon one Person, the Redeemer. In any land at any hour I will face the sin, sorrow, the strife, the hate, the shame, and the death of that world with that Person, the Redeemer, and that message, his redemption. The Redeemer is Christian-ity's gift to mankind. The redemption of all life is Christianity's purpose for mankind. I would not cross the street to give India a new theology, or China a new code of ethics, or Japan a new religious literature, but I would go around the world, again, and yet again, if it pleased God, to tell India, and China, and Africa and the rest of the world:

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins,
And sinners plunged beneath that flood Lose all their guilty stains."

This constitutes the message of Christianity; this makes it unique; this makes it essential; this separates it from all others.

I am afraid that we do not believe our gospel and that we have lost our message. We must preach the CROSS, a stumbling block unto the Jew, but unto us who believe, the power of God and the wisdom of God. "Until we can make that message ring with all the fervor and all the passion of our being and with a consciousness that it is the all-sufficient remedy for sin we will have proclaimed a message without a heart. The dominant note of our message must be, "I am persuaded to know nothing among you save Jesus Christ and him crucified." "And I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me."

The world is not being destroyed because of its poverty, or because of its sickness. The heart of the world is not breaking because of its poverty or because of its sickness. The heart of the world is breaking for life. The life of the world needs to be changed. Today we are talking of the nations becoming one. Hear me: They may become one or remain separate, but they will not become one in anybody except in Jesus Christ. Humanity may be saved, saved in its personal life, saved in its social life, saved in its political life, saved in its industrial life, saved in its international life; or it may go down to doom. But it is not going to be saved as far as anybody can see, except by Jesus Christ. To go forward we must make the most of our message.

Workable Prayer Meeting Plans

By Prof. J. A. Garber

In line with the Service Theme for this month we are herewith presenting some workable plans that have produced real prayer meetings. They have been tried and tested by others in both small and large, city and rural societies. They were collected by and are to be accredited to James DeForrest Murch, who directs the Service Department of the Ohio State Union, the Ohio Endeavorer being its official organ.

A Purely Prayer Meeting. Before the meeting, the leader for the evening, the pastor and the members of the Prayer Meeting Committee should meet together for a ten-minute pre-prayer service, praying for the success of the meeting. Let all the songs be prayer songs; let participation be by prayers only—sentence prayers, chain prayers, circle prayers, the Lord's Prayer, silent prayers.

A Thermometer Meeting. Draw an outline of a thermometer on the blackboard with white chalk. Get red chalk for the mercury. Appoint some one to mark up the rise in mercury. Let a clipping count one degree, a Scripture reading count two degrees, an extemporaneous talk count five degrees and a prayer count seven degrees. Any person can take part as many times as he cares to.

A Move-up Meeting. Keep vacant the two front rows of seats in the society room. Announce that all who take part in the meeting by an extemporaneous talk will come forward and occupy the front rows of seats. Those who will only read clippings will be asked to take the second row of seats. Everybody will want to be in these two rows by the time the meeting closes, and almost double the regular number will participate in this kind of meeting. Announce the meeting well beforehand.

A Question Contest. Divide the people present into two sections, one sitting on one side of the room and one on the other. The leader will prepare a series of questions dealing with the topic, and propound the questions to each side in turn. If one side is unable to answer a given question, it will then be referred to the other side. A correctly answered question scores one. Interest may be lent to the affair if the sides are chosen in the old-fashioned "spelling-bee" style.

"Fifty-two Varieties" by Githens (twenty cents) contains fifty-two different methods of conducting Christian Endeavor prayer meetings. You can buy it from the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union, 10 Chamber of Commerce, Columbus, Ohio.

Quiet Hour Talk. By E. M. Riddle

Dear Endeavorers:

As Quiet Hour Superintendent of the Christian Endeavor, I come to you, for a little talk through the Evangelist, relative to the great work that is OUR'S. It is my plan for the next few weeks to give you a series of talks on themes emphasizing "Loyalty." We are in the midst of a great Loyalty Campaign.

As a group of Endeavorers throughout the brotherhood are we as loyal to the church as we ought to be? Our membership is mostly composed of young people, the very age to which the hundreds of alluring temptations of the world appeal. In view of this fact we need to give greater heed to those things that tend to draw us nearer to our church.

We can enlist and interest our young people to a very large degree in service for the church if by some means through the aid of the Spirit we create a spirit of loyalty. We have talked patriotism to our country and have prayed for a greater devotion to every cause for the good of our country during the recent struggle; why not now talk and pray that such a spirit of loyalty and determination for victory may grasp the weakest to the strongest soldier of the cross, that the Brethren church may not want for anything necessary to her most rapid growth and abiding strength. Any church that has the support of its young people, sends out a silent, yet effective message to the community that it is alive and must prosper. We need to feel, my young friends, that we are a part of the church and it is "ours."

Recognizing the fact that the mission and work of the Christian Endeavor among our young people have such a vital influence upon the future of our church and nation, that we should spare no effort or sacrifice in developing this agency to the highest possibility attainable, your Superintendent of the Quiet Hour now, co-operating with the leaders of the various Christian Endeavor societies, is calling upon Endeavorers to rally their forces for an advance movement during the months of December and January.

Upon the suggestion of our president, Brother Garber, we have decided to offer two dates when all societies should make a special appeal for COMRADES—the second and fourth Sundays of December. The first date coincides with the plan of the Ohio C. E. Union, the latter a final appeal for this year.

Challenge, "Come on"—Response, "Let's go."

Four New Officers. By Dr. F. E. Clark

So greatly has the work of the United Society expanded that at its last meeting it elected four new officers, two of them to fill vacancies. Let me introduce them.

EDWIN PERCY GATES

The first one, as I have often heard the chairman of a meeting remark, who "needs no introduction,"—the new General Secretary of the United Society, your friend and mine, and everybody's friend, E. P. Gates. I believe that if when Dr. Shaw resigned, an election could have been held and every Endeavorer in the country had voted, Mr. Gates would have received an overwhelming majority for this office. The trustees of the United Society, knowing how they would vote, anticipated this election. A man tried and true in many important positions, a "master of assemblies" and of conferences, always genial, knowing Christian Endeavor from A to Z, never palming off platitudes or mere oratory for a genuine Christian Endeavor speech,—we always know where to find Gates.

CARROLL M. WRIGHT

The second is our new Executive Secretary, Mr. Wright, though not so well known in Endeavor circles, has also earned the degree of T. T.—Tried and True. As head of the Baltimore Union and of the Maryland Union, the promoter and manager of large meetings, a trusted business man, young, but with large experience, he is greatly needed, and with God's blessing will be greatly successful.

STANLEY B. VANDERSALL

Our Alumni Secretary, too, "needs no introduction." "He's from Ohio," as Buckeye Endeavorers are fond of reminding us. He made good in every department, as Field Secretary of that great union, in the office, on the platform, in conferences, and in counsel. A thoroughly educated, alert, wide-awake Christian gentlemen,—what more can we ask? So rapidly has the Alumni movement grown that it must have a man to give his whole time to its development. Its success means the vast enlargement and firm establishment of Christian Endeavor in all the world.

RODNEY A. WALKER

Our Western Business Manager, too, is an "epistle known and read of all" Endeavorers. His fine work in Indiana, his consecrated "western hustle," his power to lift and lead at conventions, his financial integrity, and his success in state work, all pointed to him for Western Business Manager when his efficient and well-loved predecessor Walter R. Mee, laid down his tasks.

These are our new leaders,—all of them young, tested, vigorous, enthusiastic. They are chosen by God, I believe, as well as by men. Endeavorers all, I pray you,—love them, trust them, co-operate with them in the Master's work.

NOTA BENE. DON'T FORGET TO EMPHASIZE AND ENFORCE IN ALL SOCIETIES AND UNIONS THE MOST IMPORTANT SERVICE THEMES FOR DECEMBER AND JANUARY, "THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR PRAYER MEETING." This is the heart of our movement. Its pulsations go out into all branches of our work. Don't have heart failure!

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ANOTHER AFRICAN LETTER

On Board Steamship "Djah" Congo River,
September 12, 1919.

My dear little friends: It is just one month ago today since I wrote to you. Then I told you what I have so often written before, that I hoped my next letter would be written enroute, for our much-longed-for field of service. You will see from the heading of this letter that God has in the fullness of his own time and after long waiting answered our prayers. You will see, too, at least the Editor will, how mamma's hand shakes as she writes this for me, for the vibrations of the engine are very noticeable on this small boat; as it tugs and pulls against the current of the great Congo.

There are only two cabins; and besides our little party of eight, there are two other passengers; the deck at night is transformed from dining room to dormitory. The tables are put on edge for partitions, and some in the cabins, and some on deck, we sleep sweetly and safely through the night, (glad to be on our way, praising Jesus every day) until the morning dawns bright and glorious on the waters.

But I must confess to you that I am just a little homesick. That may seem strange to you, but Brazzaville is my place of longest residence. I never in my short life have lived in any other place for eighteen months, and I think of Uncle William and Mr. Bragg, who were still there when we left, and of the boys who worked for us, all of whom we left behind us. Then, too, I like a tent better than a cabin, and the camp-ground was so much larger than the deck of the "Djah." I have to be so careful or I will fall overboard, as we are the first white children who have ever traveled in this line, and there are no railings sufficiently high to prevent my falling into the water. But I am learning to be careful, and all are so watchful of us, and especially of me, because I am the smallest.

Just the day before we were to start our dear Marie was taken with another severe attack of fever. It was a subject of earnest prayer with us all, and Marie was anointed. The next day she had no fever, and was able to be taken to the boat in a "push," a little cart with a single wheel, propelled by two natives. The next day however, the fever returned, and we were all so very sorry. This is now however, her second day without fever, and we expect her out on deck this afternoon.

Last night we were all so very sorry when Aunt Mary came down with the first attack of fever. We are praying for her too, and we believe she will soon be better. Mamma says Satan will make fierce attacks now upon our health. For eighteen months at Brazzaville, he hindered our forward journey, and now that we are actually enroute, he is trying to destroy our bodies with the fierce fires of African fever. But we are safe in Jesus' care and we can laugh at our conquered foe.

At the side of our boat are two smaller boats which are loaded with baggage and with natives. They have to endure the showers of sparks which fall from the smoke stack on one side or the other, according to the direction of the wind. Mamma put my nightgown out to air this morning, pinning it to the single railing which is about four feet from the deck. Alas, it has three holes in it now, burned in it by the falling sparks. But riding on the boat is so much pleasanter than riding on the Congo Railway, was, and there too we had to be so careful of the flying sparks.

I have almost forgotten what coal looks like, for everywhere here, on the trains, the boats, in camps and houses, they burn only wood.

We are traveling only by day. At night we stay anchored to the shore, and in the early morning, at 5:30, or thereabouts the whistle wakens us all from our slumbers, and the day's journey begins.

I want to finish my letter so as to mail this tonight at Tshumbiri, and then I hope to continue to write to you as we journey on, so that you may know all the details of our trip.

Last night when mamma tucked me in my berth in the cabin, I said, "Mamma, Jesus did send the boat, didn't he?" How we praise him! MARGUERITE GRIBBLE.

CLAY CITY, INDIANA

We closed our work with the church at Flora, the last Sunday in September. One evening, the week before we left, a large crowd of the members and friends came in on us very unexpectedly and before leaving they presented us with a fine leather cushioned chair. During our stay at Flora, we found some very warm friends that we shall always remember and respect. Brother W. E. Thomas of Milford is our successor. We wish the Lord's blessings in the fullest measure on the pastor and his people as they labor together.

The first Sunday in October, found us in our new pastorate at Clay City, Indiana. This is one of our new churches in Indiana. It is only four years old but it is a live wire. Brother George W. Kenzie was the former pastor. Brother Kenzie did some fine work during his pastorate of three years. A large number were added to the ranks and the church's influence was increased in the town and community. During his pastorate a parsonage was purchased. We found a very fine class of people at Clay City, who accorded us a hearty welcome. They have some fine talent and a host of willing workers, a thing that goes a long way in building up a church. They have made remarkable progress during the four years they have been established in the town and we believe that the work is ready to enter on a larger era of usefulness. As this is the only Brethren church in this part of the state, we wish to extend a welcome to any of our isolated Brethren to visit us at any time.

On the Sunday following the State Conference at Goshen, Dr. W. S. Bell began us a series of meetings. Dr. Bell was employed for the meetings before the change of pastorates and our newness on the field was a handicap to both ourselves and the evangelist. Bad weather added to our troubles, but Brother Bell soon found his way into the hearts of the people and in spite of all interferences we had a great meeting. Twelve were added to the church. Six by baptism and six by relation. Two others came out in the meeting and will be baptized later. Others are thinking seriously about the matter. It is the opinion that if the meetings could have lasted another week that there would have been many more. It should be remembered that Brother Bauman held a successful meeting here not over six months ago and that in the two meetings there were added about 35 members. This makes a fine record for Clay City.

On November 2, a very impressive anniversary memorial service was held for Robert Andrew, son of Sister Andrew, who fell fighting for his country in the battle of the Argonne Forest in France. Brother M. S. Goshorn gave a very touching tribute to the life and Christian character of the fallen hero.

On November 7, the churches of the town united in a joint reception for four new pastors. It was a big event, and served to get us acquainted with each other.

At present we are planning for greater things ahead. Last year Clay City was a star church and next year we want to be a front liner. Brother C. C. Roush our Sunday school superintendent and Miss Iva Long, president of the Christian Endeavor and are planning for front line places. We close asking your prayers in behalf of our work at Clay City.

S. C. HENDERSON.

FROM CERRO GORDO

On our pastor's return from conference, we began a three weeks' revival meeting, which resulted in three additions to the church.

Brother Eppley of Decatur, had charge of the song service which was a great help to Brother Teeter and was much enjoyed by all.

Brother Teeter gave us some stirring sermons all through the meetings, which helped us all, I think and made us feel that we come short many times in doing, "His Holy Will," and all we should do as Christian workers.

The first Saturday in October we held our regular business meeting which closed our year's work. We had a good attendance and good reports. The reports from all auxiliaries of the church showed the balance of funds on the right side of the ledger, which makes us feel our church is at its best in its history. We have made some of the goals of the Four Year Program and have lost some but still want to do more the coming year.

Sunday, October 6, we observed Promotion Day in our Sunday school, with 26 pupils graduating in the different departments of the school.

The Illiokota conference met with us October 8-9, which we counted a great privilege, but were disappointed in not having more delegates present. The rain on Sunday before kept away many who would have come.

There were many good things in the conference for us all, and we shall long recall having with us Dr. Jacobs from Ashland College and the closing address he gave us, on "The Church and Its Opportunities."

The Missionary Society served dinner and supper each day at the church.

On Monday evening, October 14 we held our communion services with 63 present which closed four busy weeks for the church at Cerro Gordo.

I think we have all been greatly blessed by these services and made to feel there is yet a great work to be done by the church here. We hope we may accomplish much in the year to come.

Corresponding Secretary.

ASHTON, VIRGINIA

On October 15th, I was called to the Brethren church at Ashton, Virginia, the home of my childhood, for a week's meeting. There had been no preaching since February. It has been four years since I was there, and in that time the church has suffered the loss by death of Brother John Fogle and my father, besides two or three among the best families have moved away; however we still found faith and works there. I found Sister John Fogle superintending a Sunday school of about 80 scholars.

Our meeting proved to be much needed as well as much appreciated. The results were four by baptism and three by relation. We had to close in just one week, because I was due to begin services at Mt. Zion church, Reliance, prior to our Love Feast which was to be on the following Saturday night. We were rained out however until Saturday night when only a small attendance was at the communion. But there were some who really wanted to come. One dear family came 18 miles and had to go back home at the close of the service. The refreshing rain sometimes tests our faith and proves how much we love our church and our blessed Lord's commandments. We recently added two to the church by baptism.

I must tell you that while at Ashton I had the pleasure of eating a meal in father's and mothers' old home where we used to eat 50 years ago. I looked at the spot where mother had us kneel when we were happy little tots. I found only two of my dear parents' associates in the whole neighborhood, mother Stuehler, 92 years old, and father Bozzle, 86.

I expect to go back in two weeks for baptism and then on to the Hammer church in West Virginia. I am going immediately to Nethers, Madison county, Virginia, where we held the first meeting about three years ago. Now we have about 20 members and are trying to get a little house of worship for them. If any one wishes to help us, it will be appreciated, for we hold services now by the wayside.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

The Lord still continues to graciously bless his work here. Regardless of the fact that leave of absence was granted the pastor to deliver prophetic lectures at the Long Beach and Spokane conferences, thus necessitating his five weeks' absence, the work moved along, being guided by a higher than human hand. The attendance, interest and spiritual life of the church remained normal.

The latter part of the summer was full of rich ministerial fellowship for us. This is one thing we have missed very much since coming to the Northwest. The two elders who were here at our coming could not supply such fellowship for one was unfit in life and the other in belief. But we have enjoyed rich feasts with Brother Bell, Brother McClain, and Brother J. Allen Miller. The church shall long remember the messages of these brethren.

The Sunday school is pushing steadily ahead this fall. We have won the first place in several points in our South Yakima district. We stand first in average attendance, in the largest cradle roll, in having the largest delegation present at the county convention (78), in the largest amount contributed for the Inland Empire Sunday school work. We also led in the district on "Go to Sunday School Day" in attendance and offering. Our offering was $103.00. This was not a spurt for the Sunday following witnessed more in attendance than the special day brought forth.

The S. S. C. E. welcomes the change in name to the Women's Missionary Society for it removes the stigma that for years has been placed upon them of being mercenary as an organization. Here, the mission study is receiving uppermost attention and any work second. Regular meetings are being held and are well attended.

The young people are remaining faithful to the work. We are blessed here with a company of excellent young people. They bear a large responsibility for the pastor, but also present a big opportunity. To properly direct their social and spiritual life is a task full of joy.

But the church proper here comes first. We are now giving an exposition of the Book of Romans in the morning service and the auditorium is full every Lord's day. Recently, we had a Family Day when all members of the family were together in the same pew. This proved to be the largest service in attendance within nine months. We took the occasion as an opportunity to emphasize the teachings of the Word upon marriage, divorce, remarriage, etc. We have received 8 members recently. Right now we are just finishing a canvass to defray the expense of a new furnace and wipe out the remaining $1,500.00 church debt. As the returns are coming in, we feel confident of reaching our goal of $2,000.00 in this canvass.

On Sunday, November 23, we open our evangelistic campaign. Brother A. V. Kimmel, of Whittier, California, will lead us. We are enjoying our preparatory cottage prayer meetings and looking forward with keen expectation to the opening day. Will every reader pray for the success of this soul seeking effort?

C. H. ASHMAN, Pastor.

BOON CHAPEL, ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

I have been preaching for the Brethren once a month for a little over two years at Boon chapel, a union church house, owned by the Methodists, Baptists, Church of the Brethren and the Brethren.

We planned for a revival meeting for October, but before we got ready, the Church of the Brethren held a two weeks' meeting and they had good preaching and fine results. Twenty-eight accepted Christ as their Savior. We baptized sixteen of them into our church, all being young people, ranging in age from 14 to 18 years. And on Saturday evening before the third Sunday, in October, we held our Communion service and we had a glorious meeting, one of the best I ever attended. About sixty members surrounded the tables.

We also have a fine Sunday school at this place and Brethren literature is being used. Brother Milton Boon is superintendent. He is efficient, a good worker and has been very successful.

This is a fine body of church people, one of the best I ever served. Boon Chapel is located twelve miles south of Roanoke City.

W. E. BEAHM.

MEETING AT MCKEE, PA.

It is usually left to the pastor of the church in which a meeting is held to make full report of the same, but a word from the evangelist is not out of order. It was on the thirteenth day of October that we opened up on the evil one in the McKee church. This church has quite a record for turning out workers, the Hyers boys and Brother DeLozier hailing from this place. We found one of the most hospitable people at McKee that it has been our portion to meet. Of course it rained, but the people could not help that so we went after things rain or no rain, and even though we had only two rainless days in the two and one-half weeks' time we had a good time in the Lord. As is usually the case we were able to do some good work for the church proper and besides this we had a goodly number make the great confession. This field has been well gleaned, and when one realizes that in order to get our church full some people had to come several miles, it is all the more remarkable the way they turned out considering the weather conditions. I never enjoyed preaching to a people better than to those at Vicksburg, for that is also the name of the church. And that man, Brother Hall, is simply one of the best of good fellows, and a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. He is a goer and consequently the church is on the move. How nice it is to a pastor-evangelist to hear the people of a church say nice things about their pastor and the folks at McKee can and do say them about Brother Hall. We made our home with Brother and Sister Campbell whom we had already met at conferences. They are two of the kind of people that assure the future of the Brethren church. All the folks treated us royally, but we cannot help mentioning the Mentzers and the DeLozier clan. They tried to make Methodist preachers out of us, that is, they chickenized us, but the preachers were equal to the test and are still able to sit up and take notice.

While at McKee we tried to do some making up to the Four Year Program and we did. Undoubtedly the "increase goal" has been reached, and the communion service held on the last Sunday evening put them over clean on the communion goal. It was the largest in the history of the church and I can say that it was one of the best that I have ever been privileged to attend. The church house was full and some were not able to get inside. Truly things look bright for the work at McKee. At present there is one representative of this church at Ashland College in the person of Miss Dively. I do hope that more of the fine young stock may do likewise. Long live McKee and her loyal supporters is my earnest prayer. Your treatment almost forces one to desire a return engagement. Thanks to pastor and people for the support given in our effort to do the Lord's work.

E. L. MILLER.

FILLMORE CONFERENCE

I am sending you a brief outline of the three-day conference held at the First Brethren church of Fillmore, California on October 7th, 8th, and 9th, for the benefit of the readers of the Brethren Evangelist.

The conference opened on Tuesday night with a sermon on the "Deity of Jesus Christ," delivered by a lover of the Book, and a man well known throughout the brotherhood, Rev. N. W. Jennings, of the First church of Los Angeles. The attendance was good for the opening night.

Wednesday morning Rev. Broad of La Verne church read an address on "The Boy and the Sunday School," written by one of his Sunday school teachers.

Wednesday afternoon Rev. J. C. Beal of the Compton Avenue church, Los Angeles, delivered a powerful sermon on "The Resurrection," in which he pictured very beautifully the life, death, resurrection of our blessed Savior. After a short intermission, Rev. A. V. Kimmel of the Whittier church preached a wonderful sermon on the theme, "The Millennial Reign of Christ," using a large chart to illustrate the different ages and proving all points in his discourse by great numbers of references from all parts of the Bible.

Wednesday night we heard a fine message on "Tithing or Gods' Method of Financing Christian Activities," by J. C. Beal, who, with his Bible references did justice to the great subject. Immediately after this Rev. L. S. Bauman, of Long Beach, delivered a powerful sermon on "The Anti Christ." Like most Brethren preachers, Rev. Bauman is well versed in the Bible and stays close to it in proving all points.

Thursday was well taken up with good subjects and grand messages including one of Rev. Bauman's greatest sermons, on "Christian Science."

The conference ended Thursday night with a splendid attendance and every one feeling very happy as a result of the meeting.

Rev. S. Lowman, pastor of the Fillmore church, and his people had everything arranged for the comfort and pleasure of the visiting Brethren. Brother Lowman has done a wonderful work in building up the new church at Fillmore and is much loved by his people and any Brethren visiting Southern California are cordially invited to visit Fillmore and will receive a warm welcome.

C. E. SNYDER, Secretary.

MT. OLIVE, VIRGINIA

Brother Charles Cook and wife, Sister Margaret Cook, held a three weeks' revival at this place, closing on Sunday night, November 2, with the communion. Really, it was only a two week campaign, as the first week was so inclement that but few attended. By their earnest preaching the church generally was made more spiritually minded, and two young men found the way of the Cross, and others were brought under deep conviction. While here they made many friends who will always cherish their memory.

JNO. W. HARTMAN.

DENVER, INDIANA

We closed a three and one-half year pastorate at Denver, October 1st. During this time the church just about held its own. There were no large numbers added to the flock. Two union revivals were held and souls were received into the church. Others have been received at different times. While this is true others have been those whose names have been dropped and some who have died and others who have moved out of the community. Thus one can see no great gains. But when you are on the field you can understand why.

The intensive activity is more plainly manifested. The first impressions we had were from the marks of our predecessor. We found a well organized church. It had a Front Line Sunday school, a Woman's Missionary Society which held the Standard of Excellence and similar conditions in other organizations.

We found it necessary to put forth effort sufficient to hold the church to this standard. When we set out to do this we found the faithful people at our side and there they re-maintained until the end. The Sunday school has been a Front Liner for six years in succession. If they desired they could place a full teaching corps into service, everyone of which are graduates of teacher training. But some are teaching who have not had the teacher training course whose work is too valuable to make such a change. The Denver school has the honor of graduating the first Teacher Training class in the new three year course. This they did in about 23 months. Brother Garber was present at the commencement and delivered the address September 24th.

The Woman's Missionary Society, has held the Standard of Excellence for the last five or six years until last year. They failed in one point and thereby lost the Standard. But this means hard persevering work on the part of a few faithful ones.

Our hearts were indeed sad when the time came for us to leave. The kindness of the people made us feel that our work had been appreciated. The Young Peoples' Society came in bringing refreshments and spent the evening in a very enjoyable way. When they departed, they left a very valuable gift as a token of their appreciation. A few evenings later the Teacher Training class came bringing refreshments. They helped celebrate our Thirteenth Wedding anniversary.

Before leaving the president of the class presented us with a 36 piece dinner set as a token of the class's appreciation and good will. May God bless this class to great usefulness.

Individuals came and left us valuable gifts of esteem which we can not refrain from mentioning. They are tokens of friendship and kindness. The day before leaving the Woman's Missionary Society showed their appreciation by giving us a reception which consisted of a program and later served refreshments. A goodly number of members were present as well as a number of visitors from Deedsville. We cannot forget our work with the Women's Missionary Society. When moving day came a number of the brethren and sisters were present to help pack and load. Brother Gilbert took his car and brought a load to Sidney which we appreciated in him. For all these favors and kindnesses we are truly thankful. I suppose there were some who sang Happy Day, when we left. If there were, we pray God's blessing upon both them and the loyal members too.

We are now living at Sidney. This is not a new field. We are here for the third year with a substantial increase in salary and other advantages. Our field for the coming year is very promising. College Corner invited us to spend half the time with them. This we are enjoying to the limit. We will submit a report of the work in these fields a little later. God bless the Brethren everywhere.

FIELD REPORT OF EVANGELISTIC LEAGUE

Clay City had arranged with me while Brother Kinzie was its pastor to hold a meeting for them in October; in the meantime he resigned as pastor and left for Ohio. Brother Henderson was secured as pastor of the Clay City church and arrived just one week before the meeting began, so that both of us were strangers to the people which was a great handicap in the campaign.

This is one of our mission churches and is located about 20 miles from Terre Haute. It is isolated from other Brethren churches, the nearest one being more than seventy miles away.

We have here a neat comfortable church with parsonage, which has been built about four years. The membership is made up of a fine class of people of representative citizens of the community, is well commanded and has an unusual amount of talent for a church of its size. In my judgment the work here has a promising future and should become in time a center from which new work in surrounding places can be started.

Brother Henderson and the membership gave the fullest co-operation and we enjoyed our work and stay in this place. Will certainly will be glad when it freezes up, as it seems that "Jupiter Pluvius" cannot be shaken from my trail. In the very heart of our campaign the heavens literally opened and never closed up until we had nearly five inches of rainfall. We have the satisfaction of knowing we did our best and that God blessed the people and evangelist, that some were won for Christ and that the Gospel was preached. It was my first opportunity to work with Brother Henderson and I enjoyed the privilege. He is well pleased with his new field and hopeful of the future.

I stayed here as long as possible closing the meeting on Monday, November 3rd and leaving for Canton, Ohio, to begin a meeting with Brother Belote on Tuesday which was held in conjunction with Ohio State Conference.

W. S. BELL.

SALEM, OHIO

Where are the Cooks? Well instead of going west as we had expected, the Lord pointed his compass towards the Southern part of Ohio to a little body of earnest, consecrated, determined workers for the Lord. You note I said small, and I would have you remember that the largest packages do not always contain the most valuable gifts and that is often true in regard to the churches. It happens to be true of Salem. My what a dear people God has placed us with. But he always does things right when left to him.

These people speak well of their former pastors and that helps us to feel they will speak well of us. However this is the first time they have ever had a pastor for full time. The circuit to which they were united was broken and it was a case of either sink or swim, and it is unlike this bunch out here to sink as long as there is life. We are going out of the mud, every fellow is at the wheel; we are going up the hill, and we believe, over the top, and believing is half of it, you know.

We had scarcely gotten settled until we were aroused one evening by a crowd at our door—one of those crowds that makes a preacher feed good these days when the "High Cost of Living" is a proverb in the mouth of all men. Well, you can guess what this crowd had, but they went over the top that night. The top of the table would not hold it all, at once, but it has been going over the top ever since, and so has that crowd and we will prove it to you by the following statements.

After a couple of weeks of consecration and preparation we began a two weeks' campaign for souls and a spiritual uplift for the church with the pastor as the preacher. It rained the first seven days and nights, but in spite of that the crowds were good; towards the last the house was crowded. The church seems to think that Salem and the community is stirred which will result in great good for the coming months. There were 14 added to the church, thirteen by baptism and one by letter. Many of these were heads of homes, and the rest young men and young ladies. We are expecting several more in the near future. We had a communion service at the close of the meeting with all the members present but three or four, and I understood they were sick.

I want to add to this that Mr. Ross McDonald from Dayton did splendid work in directing the music through the meetings. This will be of interest to those of you who have been with Brother McDonald in previous meetings.

Suffice it to say, that Salem is on the map and you will hear from us again.

Somehow I feel it is due us to add a word in regard to the Krypton work, after reading Brother I. D. Bowman's splendid report in regard to the meetings in Kentucky, and his short visit to Krypton. There is nothing dearer to our hearts than the Krypton work and we tried for months to untie ourselves as far as our personal interests were concerned, and made every message ring, with the thought of standing by their new pastor and by the work. Every letter we have written has been full of that sort of a gospel; we want to see Krypton succeed and we believe it will. There are some fine people there and the work was in the best condition of any time in its history. It must be remembered also that it took us years to win the confidence of those people. And we must not expect any new person or persons to reach them all at once; it will take months. But with the faith that dear Brother and Sister Rempel have and with the love they must possess that would lead them to a hard field like that, they will win these dear people to Christ in ever larger numbers. Let every person in the brotherhood pray that Brother and Sister Rempel might continue to be led by the Holy Spirit that every act and thought might pierce its way into the lives of the people at Krypton, that there may be no halting in our work there. Every one should support them with prayer and substance and be confident of their success. And may our entire Kentucky work be laid very heavily upon the hearts of our brotherhood at the Christmas season.

Peloubet's Select Notes

OF THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1920:

The World's Greatest Sunday School Commentary

The 1920 volume of Peloubet's SELECT NOTES is the forty-sixth annual volume. No other Commentary of its kind approaches it in duration or in the wide evidence of popular appreciation. To maintain such a book for nearly half a century, with ever increasing popularity and usefulness is unique in the editorial and publishing world.

This Commentary focuses upon each lesson the very best material compiled from two of the largest private libraries in the country and Bible students have learned that in Peloubet's NOTES they have the very best aids to Bible knowledge and class work.

Rev. F. N. Peloubet and Dr. Amos R. Wells, method of treatment which has characterized the editors of this Commentary, demonstrate in the volume for 1920 the same thorough in the volume for previous years.

It is scholarly in that it is a storehouse of the most up to date information in relation to Bible history, Bible lands and Bible customs. It is comprehensive in that it covers every phase of the lesson. It is CONDENSED in that it puts into concrete form that which is available immediately—the truths which are to be taught. It is PRACTICAL in that it suggests ways and means by which the lessons may be most interestingly taught.

The most valuable teaching methods for the different grades are suggested and the pictures really illustrate the text, while the word illustrations are fresh and vital and the spiritual teaching sound and inspiring.

In it, every superintendent, teacher and scholar can find his own personal requirements.

The volume has two accurate and up to date colored maps, four full page illustrations printed in color, and the text is illumined with more than 125 pictures.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

The work in Ohio was resumed in the Fairview congregation at Washington C. H. This is a rural church and does not represent as much numerical strength as do many of the Ohio churches. However what the Fairview congregation may lack in numbers is made up in some other ways. The canvass among this people was very pleasant and not soon to be forgotten.

This was the eighth church in Ohio to be visited and as pertains to results Fairview has stepped into first place among the Ohio churches thus far canvassed. A new standard has been set in "Buckeye" circles and it will be well for the Ohio Brethren yet to be canvassed to sit up and take notice. Fairhaven was top notch among Ohio churches at $2300 until I went to Fairview, but now even Fairhaven is far behind. Fairview church went $3600 and, as I have already indicated, Fairview is a comparatively small congregation.

There are some interesting things to note in this connection. For instance, Ohio is the first district to put a man into the $1500 class, and Fairview is the church that has that man. I have waited and worked for over two years to find some man or woman who had the courage to raise the maximum gift in this campaign above the thousand dollar mark. I thank the Lord that finally I found the individual who had a mind to break the spell. And better still, I have a strong feeling and hope that the individual who gave that $1500 will yet put $1000 more to it, thus making the amount $2500. If this materializes my promise will be kept and the readers of the Evangelist will have the privilege of seeing the picture of that individual on the front page of the paper. There is yet this other mentionable feature about the Fairview canvass, viz., that almost the entire result was in cash and Liberty Bonds—more nearly so I believe than the result in any church where I have thus far been. It may be of further interest to note that in addition to the $1500 gift, there were two who enlisted for $500 each, also one for $300, and one for $200, and the remainder of the result in sums of $100 and less.

At present Fairview is without a pastor but I am hoping that this people may very soon secure a leader. Brother Bryan Stoffer was their pastor until the early fall when his school work called him away. Brother Stoffer left many friends in this church. Preceding Brother Stoffer, Brother Wilkins was pastor. Sorry to say, at the present time Brother Wilkins is not preaching. However, he is living at Washington C. H. and I found him keenly interested in Ashland College and the present campaign. Not only was he present at each service during the Fairview canvass, but he was more than willing to help in any and every way to make the Fairview result a real credit. I am very much indebted to Brother Wilkins for his able assistance.

Needless to say, the hospitality of the Fairview people is of the very finest. The Charles Himiler home, the Amy Hegler home, the Dave Hegler home, the Oris Hegler home, the Shobe home, and the Finn home were all thrown wide open to me and I entered in and had royal treatment and a pleasant time at each place. Thanks to all of these good people. May they all live to entertain many more field secretaries.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

P. S.—The mercury now stands at $128,500. Incidentally I suggest that all of our people read again very carefully Dr. Jacob's "College Notes" of last week. This is a frank, unglorified statement of facts. And that statement should be quite sufficient to convince our people of the imperative necessity of the present endowment campaign, and of every man and woman doing his or her level best NOW.

COLLEGE ENDOWMENT

THE TIE THAT BINDS

SHAFFER-SMITH—At the home of the undersigned was solemnized the marriage of Luther Orlando Shaffer and Alice Jane Smith, July 1, 1919. The bride was one of our regular attendants at Sunday school and a member of the church. May God keep and bless them ever. A. B. COVER.

YOUNG-SHOW—Earl W. Young and Myrtle Show, two young people from the city were married on November 15, at the home of the undersigned. Both are splendid young people. May the blessing of heaven rest upon them continually. A. B. COVER.

MOSER-ZEIGLER—Lloyd B. Moser and Vera A. Zeigler, both of the city were married November 25. Both are exemplary young people, the bride being a member of the Hagerstown First Brethren church. May God's blessing follow them. A. B. COVER.

SMITH-BOVEY—John Gattrell Smith and Grace Mary Bovey were married at the church, on the evening of September 24, by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. M. Tombaugh. The church was tastefully decorated for the occasion, palms, ferns, and snap-dragons, being used. A large circle of relatives and friends gathered to witness the ceremony. Both groom and bride are well and favorably known throughout the city and are both active church workers. After a wedding tour, they will reside in their newly furnished home. May God bless them in their new relation. A. B. COVER.

BEDDOWS-COOPER—Miss Bertha Cooper became the bride of Mr. Charles Roland Beddows on Thanksgiving day at the home of her mother, Mrs. Hiram Cooper, in this city. Philadelphia. Mrs. Beddows is a loyal member of the Brethren church at Tenth and Dauphin. Mr. Beddows is an energetic young business man of this city. The writer performed the ceremony. ALVA J. McCLAIN.

BEAL-KIRKPATRICK—Mr. Dale Beal and Miss Hazel Kirypatrick were married at the home of the groom's brother on November 21. Mr. Beal is a very active member of the Mansfield church.

The entire church with a great host of friends wish for Mr. Beal and his wife a happy and profitable voyage through life. May the richest blessings of our heavenly Father be their inheritance until the journey is successfully completed. E. A. ROWSEY.

HOSTETLER-STEINER—At the home of the bride's parents, occurred the marriage of Mr. Ira Boyd Hostetler to Miss Violet Odesa Steiner on October 19th, 1919. May the choicest blessings of God accompany these young people through life. A. L. LYNN.

CRIDER-HARTZLER—At the home of the writer at Ashland, Ohio, the wedding of Mr. Elmer C. Crider and Miss Emma Hartzler was solemnized. May these young people be the recipients of God's richest blessings. A. L. LYNN.

IN THE SHADOW

SWANSON—Andrew Otto Swanson was born near Stockholm, Sweden, January 1, 1851 and died at the Hebron, Nebraska, hospital, June 20, 1919. Brother Swanson was a member of the Carleton church since 1888. He is survived by a wife and four children. Funeral services at the church with interment in the Carleton cemetery. J. D. KEMPER.

THOMSON—Lieut. Guy G. Thompson was born near Falls City, Nebraska, May 20, 1887, and died near Colombey-Les-Bains, France, January 31, 1919. He was graduated from the Morrill, Kansas, high school in 1908. He then attended the Grand Island, Nebraska, College for three years and the University of Nebraska for four years. On January 21, 1916, he was married to Mellie Wilfong of Morrill, Kansas. One child, Helen Marie, came to bless this union. Soon after America's entry into the great war he offered his services for the cause of humanity and was commissioned second lieutenant and soon sent to France. He was the only one from the vicinity of Morrill to make the supreme sacrifice.

Surviving besides a wife and little daughter, are father and mother, one sister and two brothers, one of the latter being a lieutenant in the aviation section. Memorial services were held in the Morrill church May 25, 1919, by the writer, assisted by H. F. Stuckman of Falls City, Nebraska, and A. E. Whitted pastor of the church. J. D. KEMPER.

HARTLE—Clarence J. Hartle passed to the great beyond June 21, 1919. His death was caused by a motorcycle he was riding colliding with an automobile. His death was sad, he being in the very prime of life and responsible for the support of his mother. His father has preceded him in death during this same year. Clarence was a member of the First Brethren church and of the Sunday school. May our loss be his gain. Funeral services by his pastor, A. B. Cover.

NUNAMAKER—Welcher Kendle Nunamaker, a life long resident of this county closed his eyes to earthly things, October 28. He was a progressive farmer and fruit grower, a good husband and considerate father. He leaves to mourn his departure his faithful wife and one daughter, Mrs. James Keedle of Mapleville, Maryland, and four grandchildren. A daughter preceded him to the spirit world. God bless the bereaved.

Funeral was held from the Fahney church by the undersigned, assisted by Rev. Wm. Noment of the First Christian church.

THE PASSING OF REV. P. M. FISHER

Peter M. Fisher, son of George and Barbara Fisher, deceased, was born July 15th, 1859, departed this life November 16th, 1919, aged 60 years, 4 months and 1 day. He was born and reared in the vicinity of Mexico, Indiana. On March 5th, 1883 he was united in marriage to Alice A. Stowman, who survives, and to this union were born four children: Mrs. Inez Cline of Balsam Lake, Wisconsin; Omer P. Fisher of Chili, Indiana Carl C. Fisher of Mexico, Indiana and Mrs. Mary Auspach of Ashland, Ohio. He also leaves eight grandchildren and two brothers.

He became a charter member of the Mexico Brethren church in 1888. In 1901 he was ordained to the ministry by Elder G. W. Rench. His work and counsel in the home church through all the years have been invaluable. Besides a number of churches which he served as pastor he organized the First Brethren church at Peru, Indiana, in 1914 and donated his services for several months until a pastor could be secured.

He exemplified Christ in both conduct and conversation and sought always to overcome evil by doing good. In both public and private life he endeavored to honor the Christ he loved. He was personally interested in public welfare and could always be depended on to help every enterprise that aimed to protect and uplift humanity. His neighbors will ever remember him as a man of ready hand and kind heart, helping in every time of need. The church has lost a loving brother, a zealous and loyal worker. But he will be missed most in his home for he was a loving husband and a kind and tender father.

Brother Fisher was sick less than a day as the result of a stroke of paralysis which occurred while he was performing a marriage ceremony. The funeral sermon was preached by Rev. G. W. Rench of South Bend, Indiana, who had been his pastor for many years. He was assisted by Rev. L. W. Ditch of Mexico, Indiana; Rev. G. C. Carpenter of Peru, Indiana; Rev. Charles A. Bame of North Manchester, Indiana and the writer. Besides the above who assisted in the services, the following ministerial brethren were present,—L. B. Wright, W. E. Ronk, Kenneth Ronk, A. T. Wirick, C. A. Stewart, John M. Fox, C. C. Grisso and L. A. Myers. There were also two Church of the Brethren ministers present, making a total of fifteen in all. There was also a large congregation of relatives and friends present to pay their last tributes of respect to this noble man. It was said to be one of the largest funerals ever held in Mexico.

HIBERNATING?

No, we have not yet gone into winter quarters with the expectation of remaining in seclusion until spring. Neither has the Evangelist HONOR Roll suffered from a U-boat attack, but because of the Evangelist being crowded for space for several weeks we have withheld the Honor Roll for a few weeks and we trust the church that should have had this recognition will forgive us for the apparent neglect.

It is another one of our mission churches that has won the honors for this week's report: namely, "The Little Brown Church on the Corner," and the indefatigable pastor of this flock is none other than George C. Carpenter, president of the General Missionary Board of the church. This is a great victory for Peru, even as it is a great victory for any church; but we feel that it is a greater victory for our mission churches, as they usually have heavy burdens to bear. Moreover, we are sure our experienced missionary pastors are thoroughly convinced that they can scarcely find a more efficient assistant pastor and aid to the aggressive work they must do in a mission church than the weekly visit of their denominational church paper to every home in the congregation. We did not have to draw very strongly on our imagination to see Brother Carpenter's smile as he wrote us "this increases our subscription list at Peru nearly FIVE HUNDRED percent;," and still we suppose there are some people who think we are foolish for now imagining that it is possible to swell the subscription list of the Evangelist to SIX THOUSAND paid subscribers. There is nothing foolish about it, and we are firmly convinced that seventy-five percent of the churches placing the Evangelist in their annual budget and sending it to every family in the congregation, or even by reaching seventy-five percent of their families by an every member canvass and thus winning a place on the Honor Roll would easily bring our list up to six thousand. When we compare the twenty-two hundred and fifty subscriptions we had only a few years ago with the five thousand we now have we get a vision of what an aggressive and persistent campaign with one object in view can accomplish.

But remembering what the Word teaches about boasting and remembering that "Pride goeth before a great fall," we will not say too much at this time, for we realize that within the next MONTH thousands of subscriptions will expire, and the great work now is to secure all these renewals and then later see if the list can not be increased twenty percent more.

Work for the Pastors

This will mean a great deal of hard work for the pastors, but all real pastors enjoy hard work and no one can hope to accomplish things worthwhile in any department of life unless he is willing to work hard, and we are sure most of our pastors are willing. Within the next week we hope to be able to write personal letters to the pastors of all the churches where their subscriptions to the Evangelist are about to expire; but in the meantime we trust that none of them will fail to take the preliminary steps necessary to continue to hold their place on the Honor Roll.

What If Christmas Continued Throughout the Year!

At no time in the year is the world so kind and generous as at the Christmas season. Everybody is thinking of the happiness and welfare of some one else. Everyone is puzzling himself as to how he can bring joy into the life of some one who is near and dear to him, or into the life of some one who is unfortunate and in need. The giving of gifts and the cheering of hearts is everybody's business at Christmas time. Even the life that has been confined to self-seeking and miserliness throughout the year is made a little less selfish and finds that even against himself he absorbs just a little of the Christmas spirit of generosity and good cheer because it is so widespread and contagious.

Of course people are not ideal even at Christmas time. There is much selfish giving—giving to those from whom we expect to receive again in equal measure. There are many to whom much is given, more oftentimes than is appreciated, and there are others—oh how many, others—to whom little or nothing is given, not even that of which they are in need. There is some giving for policy's sake, because it is the respectable thing to do and will enhance one's standing and influence in society or politics, or add to one's business reputation. There is sadly too much of this even at Christmas time, because people live so persistently on that level throughout the year. But still there is less of it at this season than at any other. And even those who give half grudgingly because they are ashamed not to give, feel just a little more satisfied with self and are agreed that Christmas time is the best time of the year.

Note the manifestations of this unusual generosity and kindness of Yuletide. The Near East Relief is ever seeking the relief of the thousands of starving and homeless men, women and children in Armenia and Syria and other lands of the Near East, but it is making stronger appeal to the American people at this season than at any other, and it is right that they should do so. If there is any need that ought to be presented to men when their hearts are tender it is the unparalleled need of those who suffered most from the war and had least to do with it.

Campaigns are being launched in behalf of the poor children of the cities. Christmas baskets are being called for, that in the homes where sickness and want reigns there may, not be an entire lack of the Christmas joy. The Red Cross calls for the support of its campaign against the "White Plague." The Salvation Army is receiving offerings on every street corner for "Christmas baskets and the relief of the poor." Fraternal orders are planning Christmas treats for poor children and democratic spirited communities are erecting community Christmas trees where happiness may be fostered by a union celebration of Christ's birthday and where the children who would otherwise be missed are remembered with a token of good-will. Churches and Sunday schools are conducting Christmas services, giving gifts and bringing joy into thousands of hearts, many of which would otherwise be cheerless. And in many homes the Christmas joy is shared with those who have no homes and no joy. Oh, how kind the world seems at Christmas time! Suppose if were always thus!

At Christmas time we are generous beyond other times in behalf of the church's crying needs. It is then that we bring our gifts in large numbers that the gospel story and the gospel standard of life may be carried to the backward people of our land. No mission of the Brethren church has been more popular than that which has so large a place in our thoughts at the Christmas season and enjoys so large a share of our "White Gifts for the King." May it not be partly due to the fact that the joyous Christmas spirit and the needs of the less fortunate peoples of the Kentucky hills have been so persistently linked together? And it is at this season, too, that we are wont to give of our substance to make possible the religious education of our young people in our own church school, Ashland College. So worthy a purpose is it that we put it side by side with missions and link them both with Christmas and ask our Sunday schools through the land to celebrate the birthday of the King of kings by giving to these noble causes. And they give so generously that there is enough and to spare for the work of the great and noble Sunday school organization itself. Our people have always given at this Christmastide far beyond that which was asked of them to these worthy purposes. But why should it not be so? Why should it be thought a thing incredible that the children of the King should give gifts to him on his birthday? At this happy time, at this generous time, they could not do otherwise. The very air is filled with the spirit of giving. And oh, how exhilarating and joy-giving it is! What if it should continue throughout the whole year!

And why not? Why should Christmas be limited to the Christmas season when Christ remains throughout the year? Why could we forget the joy of the Yuletide when the holidays are gone? Why, not be generous and kind every day in the year as on the day when we celebrate the birth of our King? Is it not the increased consciousness of the love and presence of Christ that makes the joy of Christmas so keen? When Christ was born love became incarnate and took shape and form and dwelt among us. We beheld the glory and saw the fulfillment of our hopes. Peace and good-will among men and salvation from self and sin were the heavenly gifts that he brought. And so our hearts are happy and we unite with the heavenly hosts praising God in the highest and bowing with the humble shepherds worshipping the King of the earth and sky, who dwells in our midst. And so we are happy at Christmas time. But why should we not be so throughout the year, for did not Jesus say, "I am with you always?" How happy, how heavenly this world would be! Then would be realized the petition Jesus taught his disciples to pray, "Thy will be done, thy kingdom come, on earth as in heaven," and the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, if Christmas should continue throughout the whole round year.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Homer Anderson writes that the Lord has blessed their work at Pleasant Grove, Iowa, and at their recent revival, in spite of the hindrances, there were a number added to the church. He was joyfully received into his new parish.

We learn from a brief note from our correspondent at Sydney, Indiana, that the Brethren there are in the midst of a revival conducted by the Richer Brothers of Peru, that state. We wish Brother Myers and his people great success, and hope to hear of the results in due time.

We learn that the blessings of God are still falling upon the Compton Avenue, California, church in generous measure. Brother Kenneth Monroe reports the work there, and he does it in a splendid brief manner. He tells us of several special services and of several new converts.

From a newspaper clipping taken from the Daily Tribune of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, we learn that Brother Forrest Byers, recently ordained to the ministry and having been serving the Windber church for some time, is filling the unexpired term of Brother L. G. Smith at the Conemaugh church. Brother Smith has entered Boston University to continue his school work.

Brother Shively reports the progress of his work among the loyal people of Masontown, Pennsylvania, and the work is truly progressing. They recently had the good fortune of being led in an evangelistic campaign by Brother B. T. Burnworth of Lanark, Illinois. The number of souls added to the kingdom bears witness to the fact that it was a successful meeting. Brother Shively is leading his harmonious band on from one victory to another.

A letter just received from Brother Baruhart reports an evangelistic campaign held for the Prosperity Brethren church in West Virginia and also announces that he is still in the field for evangelistic or Bible institute work, that in spite of the many calls for evangelists he has been overlooked and is idle. Address him at Pleasant Hill, Ohio. Because we have no space for his letter in this issue, we make the announcement for him before its publication.

You will be interested in the "College Notes" of this week, as you doubtless always are interested in them. Dr. Jacobs puts in a good word for the Purple and Gold, and we want to add our word of praise by saying that we never saw it look so good. You will note also from the "Notes" that Ashland College is not the least of all the colleges of the land, nor is it the poorest, but if any one is getting the idea that our college is now pretty well fixed with the endowment that it has, they will change their minds when they learn that other colleges whose endowments are several times what ours will be when we reach our present mark are campaigning for added endowment ranging $200,000 and $500,000 on up. When we get to giving to our school in terms of tens and hundreds of thousands, then we can talk about an adequately endowed college.

"The results of the elections in Ohio and Kentucky, despite everything that has been said and written, will have no appreciable effect on national prohibition," says Edwin C. Dinwiddie, legislative superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League. Kentucky voted dry by 8,000 majority and became the thirty-fourth state to adopt prohibition as its own policy. Ohio voted to increase the majority for state prohibition, defeated the attempt to permit the manufacture and sale of 2.75 percent beer and wine by a large majority, lost the Crabbe enforcement bill and also failed to endorse the ratification of the national prohibition amendment by about 500. A recount of the votes is to be had and it is by no means certain that enough errors and frauds will not be unearthed to change the result. This announcement is made at this late hour because some of our readers outside of Ohio seem to be confused as to the real situation.

We knew Louisville would do her share on the college endowment proposition, and she did. Turn to Brother Beachler's campaign notes and see what this loyal church did. You can always count on her; every mission board secretary, will testify to that, as well as every former pastor of Louisville. And we are in a position to know that the amount reported in Beachler's notes from Louisville is mighty good for that church. These people give well not because they are a community of rich folks, but because they are, as Brother Beachler suggests, a church of tithers. Not every one is a tither, but they have as large a proportion of tithers as any church the editor has ever been in touch with. Their present pastor, Brother Riddle, is a noble leader, and with his enthusiastic and talented bunch of young folks and his loyal group of older folks, he is leading on to the realization of "A Greater Brethren Church in Louisville," and at the same time they are doing what they can to bring about a "Greater Ashland College," "A Greater Publishing House and Church Paper," "Greater Brethren Missions," and greater everything that has to do with the church and the kingdom.

MORMON EFFRONTERY

Mormonism appeared in person at the recent World's Christian Citizenship Conference, in Pittsburgh, and claimed for itself a hearing there. Its spokesman was Apostle James E. Talmadge, one of its "Prophets, Seers and Revelators" and its ablest theological controversialist.

His demand for a hearing was denied as a right by Dr. James S. Martin, the presiding officer of the day, on the grounds that Mormonism was distinctly non-Christian and its apostles could not claim place in any assembly whose whole character and work and purpose was distinctly Christian.

But as a courtesy, Talmadge was heard and then questioned. He admitted the teaching of polygamy by his church, as a divinely ordained system of marriage, although he disavowed the present practice.

Mrs. Lulu Loveland Shepard challenged him to state whether or not he was wearing the secret undergarment which is placed upon priests and priestesses in the esoteric rites of the Mormon temples and which is the ever present symbol of the awful oaths,—the treacherous and blasphemous oaths,—which the priests and priestesses take in the revolting ceremonial. Talmadge refused to answer and he declined to demonstrate to a committee of gentlemen,—in fact he tacitly admitted the wearing of the secret garment.

The significance of Apostle Talmadge's appearance and utterance is two-fold: First, Mormonism which has always bitterly denounced evangelical Christianity, is now seeking to fraternize. Second, Mormonism admits the present teaching of polygamy.

And the significance of the Conference action in refusing to the apostle any hearing as a right, will go far to clarify the issue. Mormonism is distinctly anti-Christian; and its emissaries have no proper place and are not entitled as a right to any hearing in any Christian body.

NO ROOM IN THE INN

By Mrs. Grace P. Srack

No room in the inn for Mary that night,
No room for friend or stranger,
So Jesus, the blessed Son of God,
Was born in a cattle manger.

No silken covers or pillows of down
Prepared for the heavenly guest,
Only a manger and a bit of straw,
On which God's Son might rest.

"No room in the inn" rings down through the years;
The Lord is left in the stall.
Hearts are so filled with the pleasures of life
Jesus finds no room at all.

Will you ope' the door of your heart tonight,
And welcome the Savior in?
Or will you resist and turn him away,
Still saying, "No room in the inn?"
Long Beach, California.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Reversing the Order---White Gifts for the King.

J. Fremont Watson

President of the Sunday School Association

The churches of Christendom in recent years have faced about in the order of the observance of the Christmas festival. They have been convinced that the former way of keeping the Christmas spirit alive was wrong. The birthday of the Savior King was celebrated by taking the Kings money and buying candy and other presents for the pupils of the Sunday school, while the usual custom of celebrating birthdays is to give presents to the one having a birthday.

It was with keen interest that I read of the proposed change in celebrating Christ's birthday in a way fitting to him and the larger interests of the Kingdom. The new way was based on the "White Feast" in Cathay as a means of arousing interest in giving White gifts to our King." I decided at once to learn all I could about the plan and urge its adoption. The result through the years has more than justified the effort required to make the change.

The many ways by which Christ is proclaimed through the Christmas anniversary is a challenging fact, a fact as gratifying as challenging to the man who has seen into the heart of Christ. Christmas at this hour calls from every church steeple, rings from every belfry, speaks from every store window, office, factory, and home. Christmas meets you in the face of every friend and acquaintance you greet on the street. And the explanation of Christmas is Christ. Every unselfish act of Christmas day and other days suggests the Christ; leads directly to him. Christmas gets its name from him, its spirit from his spirit, its suggestion from his life.

The "White Gift Christmas" proclaims that life is full of meaning and that we should do our best in loving God's world and wishing every human being the gladness of trusting and obeying this wonderful God.

In the ebb and flow of the tides in man's nature, Christmas marks high tide for the better part of that nature. We must keep Christmas as a personal matter. It must touch our hearts or we fail to find the meaning of Christmas.

Christmas is characterized by giving. In this, man is exercising himself in a way the very opposite to that which engages him for the larger part of the year. Most of his time and energies are employed in getting. At Christmas he gives. But giving is the choice fruit of unselfishness, unselfishness which has its opportunity at Christmas. It was probably the gifts of the wise men that enabled the parents of Jesus to travel with their child to Egypt. Real gifts are not purposeless but serve practical ends. Much Christmas giving is spurious because it is extravagant and needless. "After all," says the man at his Christmas festivities, "this making others happy is the deepest satisfaction, the most real pleasure." Thus unconsciously, this man is in harmony with our blessed Lord, who said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Speaking of the forthcoming Christmas season, a mother said, "We shall not be able to give many presents this year; money is very scarce. We are preparing some homemade ones, and will try to put a good deal of love into them. Each evening now, after supper is over and the dishes washed, I gather the children about me and tell them of the birth of the baby Jesus; how he loved people when he was grown up, and how he still loves everybody. They are getting the meaning of Christmas, and seem much interested." That is a wise mother, and she is getting at the heart of the matter; doing her part towards unspoiling Christmas, which the world has done so much to spoil by covering it up with error and "junk."

The "White Gift Christian," presents to the Christ gifts of SELF, SUBSTANCE, and SERVICE. What season of the year is more fitting to give SELF to Christ than Christmas?

When Jesus was born he entered humanity, and humanity became forever different from what it would have been had Christ not been born in human nature. Christmas is not only the birthday of Jesus Christ, but it stands for the birthday of all twice-born men, their new birth into the life of the Kingdom of God. There are always some who have never given themselves to Christ. Here is a splendid gift of "Just as I am." Only thus can we in the fullest sense come to worship him. Let us come to the Christmas season praying,

"O holy Child of Bethlehem,
Descend to us we pray;
Cast out our sin and enter in,
Be born in us today."

How important is the gift of ourselves to some SERVICE for the Lord. When we think of the thousands in the church that are merely nominal Christians and do nothing definite in the work, there is need that Christ claims be presented. Never have we faced a Christmas time with such monumental needs of comfort, courage and cheer. What will we do with our lives; give them to him, or continue in our disgraceful neglect of his service? O how many churches would become real soul winning stations, and no longer a burden to a pastor's heart if only we would give ourselves anew to his service! Give your life to some definite work this year for his glory.

The "White Gift" appeal comes with renewed emphasis this year to give of our SUBSTANCE. We should be possessed with the spirit to do our best to make this the greatest year in the history of our Sunday schools. Our program of work for the year includes many projects and your best financial aid is needed. Our work has been growing rapidly through the years and has reached the place where we must make a great forward move. You have as schools made it possible for us to keep moving forward, and you must not fail us now. We must take care of the work as new demands arise and this will from year to year mean larger and more liberal support. Every school should do something and that something should be a determined best.

What we can do, depends on what each school does. We cannot move faster than you are willing to go. Let us sincerely hope that your vision of the work will broaden each year and that your gift will be as large as your vision. You have thrilled us again and again with your loyal support and kindly help and we are counting on every school that has helped in former years to send us liberal help again. We wish you every blessing and the fullness of Christmas joy and trust that it will find expression in what you do.

Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

The White Gift--Importance of Its Objects

By Albert Trent, Secretary-Treasurer

A large proportion of the White Gift offerings from our schools is given by the children and young people, and therefore should be applied to the most important, as well as the most promising enterprises of the church. The interest of our young people in the work of the church can be most readily maintained by showing them that definite results have been attained through their efforts and contributions.

Where can we find more convincing evidence for their encouragement than the continued progress that the work in Kentucky is showing? Our National Sunday School Association's budget requires one thousand dollars for this fruitful home mission field.

The great need of education and Christian teaching by the people of this section of our country, the evidence we already have of the strong character and ability of this people when properly trained and developed, the foundation of the work that has been successfully laid, and the promising outlook for future success,—all mark this field as a worthy and important object of our gifts.

The second item of our budget calls for one thousand dollars to help support the Chair of Religious Education in Ashland College established for the preparation and training of the young men and women who will carry the Master's message of good news to others.

The old and the young can readily understand the important need of this department in our church's institution. It would seem but fitting that a reasonable proportion of the support for this department in our college should come from our Sunday schools. The splendid response we have had in past years for this work indicates that it is an object that appeals to the minds and hearts of the men, women and children of our schools.

After the above two items have been met by the offerings; the surplus will be used in completing the books for an adequate Teacher Training Course of our own, and bringing to the individual school more effective means of organization and teaching by holding institutes, by distributing helpful literature and by personal correspondence.

These are the objects to which the White Gift offerings will be applied; we feel that these stand second to none in the general advancement of the interests of our brotherhood.

The increase in the offerings and the increase in the number of schools contributing each successive year is evidence that this work appeals to the hearts of our people. Last year but thirty-six Brethren schools failed to contribute to this good work. We are hopeful that this year there may be no delinquents.

Brother Superintendent, as you are building that fine Christmas program, that will cause your school again to think of the shepherds abiding in the fields, again, to see the glory of the heavens and to hear the voice of the angel, "Fear not;" may I ask you to plan for its climax the greatest White Gift offering in the history of your school in this VICTORY year of our church.

BUILDING IN WHICH THE KRYPTON MISSION WAS STARTED

The Kentucky Roll Call. By G. C. Carpenter

Readers of the Evangelist are interested intensely in the mountain mission work of the Brethren church. Not many have the opportunity to visit the Kentucky mountain field, however all are invited to come whenever possible and study first hand the field and the many opportunities to carry the good news of salvation to great numbers of people in our own land who have thus far been deprived of the blessings of the open Bible and the Sunday school and the church of the living God. If all the members of the Brethren church only knew. Then many with hearts of compassion would pray as never before and give and work as never before! Then the White Gift offering would be multiplied many times! Our readers will be interested in a roll call of the workers now on the field. Lack of space will forbid extended comments.

Rev. and Mrs. G. E. Drushal

These faithful laborers need no introduction after fifteen years of continuous service in so-called "bloody Breathitt county," which they have helped to transform into "beautiful Breathitt county." A great change has taken place and Riverside Institute and the Brethren church at Lost Creek have largely brought about the change. These were the pioneer missionaries of the Brethren church in the mountain field. They have a family of three children, two boys and one little girl.

Mr. and Mrs. Alan Pearce

Brother Pearce came into the Brethren church at Montreal, Canada, graduated from the Bible Institute at Los Angeles, married a splendid wife and arrived at Lost Creek last July. Both are devoted to the work, giving themselves unreservedly to service at Riverside, teaching and preaching and doing whatsoever their hands find to do.

Mrs. Katherine Woodmansee

She is the mother of the above Mrs. Pearce. She is a faithful mother to the girls and the boys at Riverside, the matron of the girls' dormitory. Her past experience makes her a splendid helper.

Miss Bessie Hooks

She is a loyal worker, teaching in the grades. What an opportunity these teachers have to shape the young lives for Christian manhood and womanhood.

Miss Dove Byrd

A native of the hills, Miss Byrd is rendering splendid service as a grade teacher, both the grade teachers being supported during the public school term by state funds.

Miss Bethke

She is a faithful helper lending a helping hand in the work of Riverside in many ways. Miss Bethke came from sunny California. The land of oranges and roses is well represented at Riverside this year.

Miss Verda G. Hade

The staff of mission workers at Riverside is not quite complete especially for the winter months unless a nurse is among the number. Her ministry is almost indispensable.

ASHLAND COLLEGE

Where your offerings help support the department of Religious Education

Miss Hade is a member of the Brethren church at Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Rempel

These people of great faith and loyalty to the church are the successors of Brother and Sister J. E. Cook at Krypton Kentucky. They are superintending the school and church work at Krypton and also the work at Chavies and Napford and nearby stations. The opportunities in the hills

OUR KENTUCKY FARM. Crops in the soil and coal in the hills for miles around Krypton are very, very many and Brother and Sister Rempel are praying that the Lord may use them as leaders to possess the promised land. They have a family of two children.

Miss Elizabeth Haddix

She is a product of Riverside and was a student in Ashland College, but is now conducting the work at the new station known as Happy, about twenty-five miles beyond Krypton. Two Sunday schools meet regularly and plans are being made to establish the Lord's work here, even as at our other stations. Miss Haddix is giving herself in faithful service, denying self and taking up the cross.

Miss Charlotte Hillegas

A former teacher at Krypton and at Riverside, Miss Hillegas is now teaching the public school at Happy. The future of the church in the hills depends upon claiming the children of today for Christ. Hence the great need of Christian school teachers who will lead the children day by day to love God and the Bible; surely it is a high calling. The Misses Haddix and Hillegas make a strong team.

Rev. Thomas Allen

To know him is to love him and to hear him preach the Word and to watch him practice it in his daily life is to be convinced that he is a splendid Christian man. He is highly respected among his own people and is preaching every other Sunday at Happy. We are hoping that it may be possible soon for him to give his entire time to the Lord's work for he is an able preacher and there is great need of preachers in the hill country.

The Conclusion

Those who remain at home dare not be less loyal and faithful than those who leave their homes and friends and deny themselves many other blessings that they may obey the command of Jesus to "Go and make disciples." Our material gifts are small in comparison but we must make them gifts of sacrifice and self-denial. A teacher will be needed January first at Krypton. Here is an opportunity for the giving of self for service on the field. Who will go? Every member of every Brethren church and Sunday school will have an opportunity to bring a gift of self in the form of substance, a "White Gift for the King" at the Christmas season. "Give and it shall be given unto you." is the word of Jesus himself. Yours for a Victory White Gift offering in this Victory Year!

The Chair of Religious Education and the White Gift

By President E. E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

One of the really great movements of the times so far as the church and education are concerned, is what is generally known as religious education. This movement differs somewhat from other similar movements, in that there is sought a permanent basis for it in the colleges of the country rather than in blustering talk about the "godless public schools of America." To be sure, when the whole programme has been worked out, there will be some form of religious instruction in every branch of our educational system but just now most attention is being paid to the training of teachers who will be able to lead the lower grades in the right direction.

Every thinking person will agree that education, that is, the acquiring of certain facts, without a corresponding moral basis for the use of those facts, is not wholly desirable. It is putting the sharp tools into hands that should not use them. It is raising the steam in the engine without furnishing a governor for the machinery. And those who will not agree to calling this governing force religion, will at least agree that there should be a certain idealism developed along with the giving of facts. Only with this developed, can education be safe.

Now, we as Christians believe that the world is full of God; that he is to be seen in every process of life and of nature; that, it is in very deed and in truth, in him that we live and move and have our being. We long for nothing as we do for the full realization of him in our lives. We earnestly covet the God consciousness in the individual life. We profess to believe, that there is a plan which is his, for every life. And there are those who go the limit and see in all the movements of history, only the working out of his will for the race. They believe that neither things present nor things to come, neither things above or under the earth, can in the end defeat his righteous purpose of this world.

And yet amidst all this, we have failed in large measure, to give a decidedly religious basis to our education. In many denominational colleges in America, the Bible was not formerly taught. Brief talks at the convocation hour together with fragmentary bits of religious instruction scattered elsewhere throughout the courses, were all the religious training that was given. Yet we are sure that sociology, biology, literature, and even chemistry, mathematics and physics, may be made to reveal God. Indeed, the very devout believe that much of the finest of all these is lost, if studied apart from him.

Now to be added to all this, is the very great desirability of having established such character that, when the young person finds himself out in life face to face with problems, he will not only have the mental acumen sufficient to make him a good citizen but that he will also have enough moral character to impel him in the right direction. For men and women who are now in college, will in less than a generation be the ones who will be called upon to help settle some very grave questions. IT WOULD BE WHOLLY INEXCUSABLE IF IN THE NEXT GENERATION WE SHOULD MAKE AS MANY SERIOUS BLUNDERS IN THE HANDLING OF SUCH QUESTIONS AS THE PRESENT SOCIAL UNREST, BOLSHEVISM, ETC., AS WE HAVE MADE THIS TIME. If our public sentiment is as ragged, if our statesmanship is as dull and stupid, if our leadership is as faulty two decades from now as they are now, then our colleges will not have done their whole duty!

It is in the interest of just this and much more, that the colleges are seeking a fuller programme in religious education. There are in Ohio alone this year something like fifteen thousand men and women enrolled in college. It is unthinkable that the church of Jesus Christ should not TOUCH THESE LIVES IN A VERY FORMATIVE WAY. Anything less will not only menace the future of the church but of the nation as well!

It is for these reasons that Ashland has established a professorship in religious education. It is rather a unique distinction that we were among the very first colleges in America to get a vision sufficiently wide as to make such a course possible. Slight now the Interchurch World Movement is pushing this phase of education most vigorously, and what they are now paying so much attention to, we here at the College have had in the focus of our attention for over five years. And right now, the Brethren church has no greater obligation than to keep this department up to high tension. We have led off and we must keep to our course.

Therefore, any part of the great White Gift that comes to this department of Christ's cause will help to forward a cause not wholly needful, but one of whose importance will increase with the years. It is the youngest member in the family of college departments, and is an infant that is already vigorous and one which gives promise of a very strong and healthy growth within the next few decades. I earnestly pray that God may lay it upon the hearts not only of my brethren in our church, but upon the hearts of God's people everywhere, to make possible the strengthening of the departments of religious education in all our denominational colleges.

The Chair of Religious Education in Ashland College. By Miss E. Marie Lichty

Department of French Language and Literature and Dean of Women

In the above article Dr. Jacobs has made the statement that the department of Religious Education is the youngest of the departments in our school. Such being the case, it might be well to give a brief outline of the scope and activity of this department.

First of all, its name signifies its mission. But since this course stands not alone among others such as English and Classical Divinity and even our Academic courses for religious education, a distinction must be made. Whereas the English and Classical Divinity courses generally train for an educated ministry, this department trains for an educated laity. For those who feel that, while they have not been called to preach, they have been called to do a particular work in, from and among the pews. And training in this course offers the necessary help.

There is no phase of our church life which is not touched by this program. For instance, there is the Biblical outline to give a foundation for all forms of service. Along with this, are courses in Bible History and in Doctrinal and Practical Theology. With these in hand one can readily see the opportunity for real service after a course in Teacher Training which is offered for the Sunday school worker, or a course in Expert Endeavor for the Christian Endeavorer, or Personal work for evangelistic efforts, or a world-important subject like Missions, applicable to every phase of our church life. Add to this training in Educational Psychology or Religious Pedagogy or Practice Teaching and you have a well fortified course. However, it must be borne in mind that the student can still take any electives such as Child Study, Homiletics, Church History, or Greek, which he is prepared to take.

The support of the chair of Religious Education means the support of a course like that—but it means more. It means the placing in the school faculty of a good Christian man, one who thus far has made himself admired as teacher and friend. It means added influence for the right of the young people of our school and church. It means valuable direction in our school of this important program of Religious Education by one who has studied it and constantly keeps in touch with it, linking us with the big movements beyond our walls. It means the personality of one like Prof. J. A. Garber in our midst. He has been with us since the institution of this work in Ashland College and has built up a department of which the college can justly be proud.

The courses named above are taught by Prof. Garber. It may be of peculiar interest to know that along with these that he teaches the Bible course for the Academic students; an outline which includes the life of Christ, a study of the life of St. Paul, the Hebrew Patriots and Prophets. Also he directs the Freshmen and Sophomore college courses in New Testament and Old Testament alternately.

Such in general can be said to be our department of Religious Education. If you want it to grow, give; if you want to see how it works, come; if you want to get a benefit from it in your own church, send a representative to us for training and then judge for yourself.

How Honor the King on His Birthday? By George H. Jones

When Albert King of the Belgians, was driven with his courageous little army into France, his people during the whole of the war kept him constantly reminded of their loyalty, in numerous ways. Not the least was the conveyance of some token to their brave King, upon his birthday. Sometimes it was a jewel, at other times a sum of money, and again, it was a pledge of their continued loyalty.

In each of them their king discerned the love which was back of the gift. His birthday became to him a sacred day, by reason of the emotions of his people, annually refreshed and fortified even in the darkest days of terror and violence. These events and the appreciation of them ennoble all the actors in the historic drama. The observing world that took no part in the matter had its share of inspiration from the noble act. The Belgian people honored themselves no less than their king by their deeds.

It is so with every people. The loyalty that finds expression in acts of encouragement and sacrifice is the refined gold of human nature. Christians can do no less for their King. The "best by test" is true in the spiritual realm.

Our Feelings Toward Him

are best discovered when there is a call for an expression of them. "Lovest thou me?" is still pregnant with possibilities. Loving ourselves is a common trait of character; but what an uplift to love another! What a supreme inspiration to love the Lord Jesus, our King! Formerly men found that some conspicuous act of daring was needed to have kingly recognition and knighthood, but now, how simple! Just the spontaneous flow of our affections toward him, and lo, we are ennobled. So quickly does divine favor react on the awakened divine spark in man. The channels of spiritual exaltation are never choked at God's end; always at ours. "Let a man examine himself whether he be in the faith."

Times of Trouble and Misfortune are the "Acid test" of our devotion. Beset by the enemy forces within and without, what uncertainties are settled! "The Lord knoweth them that are his." How quickly the heart of the fickle faints! How essential that the emotions be reinforced by a sturdy will! It is hard enough to resist the enemy "at the gates;" but to what heights of favor we rise when the enemy "within" is overcome! What splendid history is made when in the face of discouragement and pessimism, the people co-operate in an expression of love toward their King!

Opportunity to Prove Loyalty comes every day. United efforts to express it come only at intervals, more or less widely separated. Perhaps no opportunity is as favorable as the birthday of the King. The air is fragrant with generosity and good will. The kindest and most charitable impulses are cultivated. Business houses everywhere are decorated with mottoes of love and loyalty. Even the hardened hearts are sensible to the general spirit of the season. Earth and heaven rejoice in song. "Glory to God in the highest" is on every heart. Angels sing and serve; that is their opportunity. We may give and grow; this is ours. The most precious spiritual treasures are only dug as needed.

Our noblest characteristics are discovered unexpectedly. Loyalty at its best is the spontaneous defence and support of an absent friend. It is so in relation to friend and friend; it is so in relation to family and loved ones; it is so in relation to country, but here we call it patriotism. It is so in relation to church and the Lord Jesus Christ; here it is called Christianity. However the form or the method, all so inspired are honoring the object of their loyalty.

Too Busy

We are sensible of the world-wide obligation to be busy, to produce, lest the many perish through hunger and exposure. Night and day industry is urging to greater efforts and we answer the appeal. But there is a danger in being too busy. We are only too often diverted by a mistaken sense of duty. We are like the prodigal daughter. Bereft of mother in her young womanhood, she loved her father with added fervor. The Christmas season was before them and with all the abandon of youth she spent hours in secret devotion to her needles and yarn. Father spent many lonely hours, assured that she was in her room, but denied the privilege of her company. Only he knew and felt his loss. After many days she re-appeared, just through in time to place her bundle upon his chair before breakfast on Christmas morning. How her eyes sparkled as she eagerly watched him unfasten her token of love. Only then she saw how tired the lines in his face and how lonely and sad the look in his eyes. He smiled his appreciation as he unfolded the gift of a warm sweater for the cold winter days. But like a flash came a vision of another world to the loving heart of the daughter. It was not sacrifice he needed, so much as love and companionship. A great light broke into her thoughts. Gifts cannot be measured by their value; God's scales have neither dollar mark, nor pound weights; they are the expressions of a contrite and broken heart. Honoring him thus, we honor ourselves. Our gifts become, not a credit to our opulence, but a credit to our natures. Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

The Necessity of the Incarnation. By Miles J. Snyder

When we begin to think about the incarnation we are approaching holy ground. It is a word not found in the Scriptures, though the thought of it was in the mind of God from the foundation of the world. The doctrine of the incarnation means that God manifested or showed himself in the world as a man. It involves the entrance of God into humanity in the person of Jesus Christ, by virtue of which Jesus was at once a person both human and divine. One so constituted must have been unique in his personal consciousness. The spirit that constituted his personality was divine, and the fact that the spirit lived within human habitations rendered his personality human. The indwelling Person was divine, the tabernacle was human.

Paul was the first writer to set forth with clearness and definiteness the fact of the incarnation, that God as Christ entered this life from another. In Philippians 2:5-9 we read, "Have this mind in you which was also in Christ Jesus; who, existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, becoming obedient even unto death, yea the death of the cross." In other words, Christ came into this life by a voluntary surrender of an existence in God's own form or mode of being. This was the Christian view of the incarnation within thirty years of Christ's crucifixion.

In the gospel of John, one of the latest of the New Testament writings, the same doctrine is even more clearly set forth. In the first chapter of John's gospel we read, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made through him. In him was life. And the Word became flesh and dwelt among us and we beheld his glory, glory as of the only begotten from the Father, full of grace and truth." This can mean nothing else but that the divine Word assumed the human form in the person of Jesus Christ and brought and revealed to man the moral qualities of God.

It is beyond the province of this article to be concerned as to just how "the Word became flesh." I cannot explain it any more than I can tell how the soul of which I am conscious is united to my body which I know to be not me but mine. It is one of the mysteries of grace; and is enough to know, as stated in 1 John 1:2, that "The life was manifested, and we have seen and bear witness, and declare unto you the life, the eternal life, which was with the Father and was manifested unto us." This is the fact announced without attempting to explain the process or method.

The questions of practical import to which I wish to address myself are, Was the incarnation a necessity? What are its results and possibilities? Granted it must be that the incarnation was not purely a remedial work made necessary by the perversion of humanity; but rather was it an original thought in the mind of God when he created man in his own image and likeness, as a means by which he could raise humanity to a higher and fuller fellowship with himself. It did not involve the abject humiliation of God but advanced man to his highest estate, bringing joy and glory to God as well as to man. It was the means of giving God more intimately to humanity and bringing it more vitally to him, thus making accessible to mankind great spiritual blessings and possibilities not otherwise attainable.

In the first place the incarnation was a necessity in order to satisfy the longing for God in the heart of humanity. From the dawn of man's history he had been seeking after God and the incarnation was God's response to that ceaseless search. Not only did it satisfy the yearnings of devout souls, but it was the fulfillment of divine prophecy, the realization of the dreams of poets, and the unconscious voicings of true philosophies. Man longed to find, to see, to know God,—a God whom the mind could comprehend and the eye see and the heart understand. So "the Word became flesh and dwelt among us," and the hungerings and that "Prayer is an effective way of getting things by begging," or else "Prayer is merely the reflex action of a man's own mind." This is a mistaken idea. We need only refer to the Psalmist of old to realize the true meaning of worship in prayer. Think of the majestic words: O give thanks unto Jehovah; for he is good; for his lovingkindness endureth for ever (Psalms 136:1-2). My heart is fixed, O God; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises, even with my glory. I will give thanks unto thee, O Jehovah, among the peoples. And I will sing praises unto thee among the nations (Psalms 108:1, 3). Is not this the distinctive faculty of man and the noblest which he possesses? How then are we treating this best of our endowments?

Second, we worship our King by our service. The spirit of Christ is the spirit of service. Recall the words of the Master, when he said, "I am among you as he that serveth." This was always true of him, and it should be ever true of those who are sons of God by saving grace. Our hearts should ever rejoice to do service to our King. Perhaps the most beautiful service ever rendered by a human being to his Lord was that which Mary bestowed upon her Master. Her heart was full of gratitude and love and she had resolved to do honor to him. It was customary to anoint the head of an honored guest, but she went in and poured the ointment on his feet and wiped them with her loose tresses. Though Mary's conduct was contrary to the custom of the day, she cared not what men might think. Well did she remember how her Lord had wiped away every tear from her eyes and saved her from her sins.

In many ways we may serve him, but let us not forget that we owe our Lord our best service. Our best is very small compared with God's matchless Gift, who came at this Christmas time to be the servant of all. We ought to be willing to give anything, or make any sacrifice for him. But how often do we hear men say, I am willing to do this or that if I don't have to do so and so. That is to say we are only willing to surrender a part of our lives. God is not satisfied with half-way service, neither will there be any satisfaction on the part of the person rendering it. Let us not miss the point. It is only through a wholly surrendered life that we can experience any satisfaction in worshipping our King through service.

Thus at this time, let us be thankful to God for his eternal blessings and goodness. Let us reconsecrate our lives anew for a greater life of service and love.

OUR PRAYER

O God, by whom the meek are guided in judgment, and light riseth up in darkness for the godly, grant us, in all our doubts and uncertainties, the grace to ask what thou wouldst have us to do; that the spirit of wisdom may save us from all false choices, and that in thy light we may see light, and in thy straight path may not stumble, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Worshipping the King. By Cora Edith Aksland '20

OUR SCRIPTURE

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold wise men from the east came to Jerusalem, saying, where is he that is born King of the Jews? For ye saw his star in the east, and are come to worship him (Matt. 2:12). And they came into the house and saw the young child and Mary his mother; and they fell down and worshipped him; and opening their treasures, they offered unto him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh (Matt. 2:11). For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men (Luke 2:11, 13-4).

OUR MEDITATIONS

We have at this time of the year brought to our memory that beautiful picture of the light that shone on the Bethlehem plains nineteen hundred years ago, and the song, "Peace on earth, good will toward men," which for the first time hallowed the midnight air.

The time draws near the birth of Christ,

The moon is hid; the night is still;

The Christmas bells from hill to hill,

Answer each other in the mist.

As the wise men of old came forth to worship the newborn child, the Savior of the world, so in like manner, it is with praise and gratitude in our hearts that we come forth to worship him, our Christ and Lord. This is he who died for our sins, was raised again for our justification and lives in the power of an endless life, able to save to the uttermost all who come to God by him. Every heart should worship him for his matchless worth.

Then we may ask, How can we best worship our dear Master? There are numerous ways, but we wish to consider the following: First, we may worship God through prayer. Prayer is universal and is not brought about by argument. It is a native tendency, and remains the natural and deepest impulse of the soul. Consider the meaning of the fact that prayer and worship are thus universal; that all peoples do "seek God, if happily, they might feel after him and find him." Prayer is the communion of the soul with God in which pours itself out in adoration, thanksgiving, confessions, and supplication. It is not an uncommon thing to hear men say thirstings after God were the means of bringing men to him.

In the second place, the incarnation was necessary to give men an adequate idea of God. It was God's answer to the question, How can the Infinite and Eternal best reveal himself to humanity. Not by the demonstration of power and size and dazzling glory, but by the manifestation of goodness and holiness and love. In other words, God could best reveal himself to man by what was personal, moral, like himself; hence he took upon himself "the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men, and being found in fashion as a man." This was the necessity laid upon him: God taking unto himself our humanity, entering into human life, walking our way with us, sharing our sorrows, knowing our temptations, meeting our needs, disciplining our lives.

It is impossible from a mere description to fully understand the thing described. We have all tried to form a picture of a machine the description of which we have read, and later found we failed. For ages no one could make a correct picture of the Golden Candlestick as described in the Old Testament; and it was not until a carved picture of it was discovered on a tablet within the Arch of Titus that anyone really knew its true form. A representative of it made it all plain. And so it is that Jesus reveals to us God. Seeing and knowing him, we see and understand the Father as no description of his moral qualities or spiritual attributes could enable us to do.

In Christ we see what God is, how he feels, what he does, how he meets temptation, how he goes about doing good, teaching, forgiving, commanding, inspiring, saving,—as One sent to deal with man and not one springing from the race. He is the shepherd going in search of the lost sheep, the woman seeking the lost coin, the father hastening to meet the returning son. Thus by means of the incarnation God revealed himself not only through the finite but through the familiar. It was when, in Christ Jesus, God spoke with human voice, touched with human hand, felt with human sense, that he lifted humanity into fellowship and knowledge and newness of life.

Again the incarnation assures us of God's perfect sympathy. Through the ministry of Jesus Christ "He knoweth our frame," "He is an high-priest who can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities." Having been a man he knows man's heart. We can always be sure that he understands our ease, and though he has ascended into glory we may be confident that—

"In every pang that rends our heart
The Man of Sorrows had a part;
He sympathizes with our grief,
And to the sufferer sends relief."

The writer of the epistle to the Hebrews 2:17-18 says, "For this purpose it was necessary that in all respects he should be made to resemble his brothers, so that he might become a compassionate and faithful High Priest in things relating to God, in order to atone for the sins of the people. For inasmuch as he has himself felt the pain of temptation and trial, he is also able instantly to help those who are tempted and tried." (Weymouth).

This is the tenderness and the allurements of the gospel. God incarnate in Jesus Christ attracts the souls of men, for he comes to dispel our fears and wipe away our tears, to soothe our wounds with sympathetic love, to purify our lives with his holiness, and to give us guidance and strength in the temptations and trials of life. He was made what man is, except sinful. He was made to be weak, hungry, tired, lonely, sad, discouraged, tear-stained, and sorrow-marked, that he might be able to sympathize with us and help us in times of need. It required Deity in human form slumbering in a manger, walking among men, partaking of their infirmities, weeping over their sins, bleeding on the cross, to enable man to get rid of his guilt and look to God and have fellowship with him.

Once more, the incarnation was necessary to give sacrificial efficacy to the death of Christ on our behalf. The death of Christ is sufficient, but the death of no other person would have sufficed. The life of an innocent man would have been of no avail to atone for the sins of the world; and to have required the life of God is altogether unthinkable, for that would have meant no salvation but universal chaos. The only life whose sacrifice was efficacious was that of the incarnate only begotten Son of God. And it is only because he was the Son of God that every one may sing—

"His blood can make the foulest clean,
His blood avails for me."

Finally, the incarnation was a necessity in order to make the resources of God available to man. The omnipotence of God becomes accessible through the humanity of Jesus. Of what avail is a harbor of refuge if a ship cannot make the port? Christ is "As an abiding place from the wind and a covert from the tempest." He was a man, therefore we can get to him; He is our God, therefore when we are in him he becomes our shield and life.

Through the incarnation he again becomes flesh, but this time it is our flesh. As through a door, he enters into our life that we may grow into his likeness. He imparts to us the divine nature so that instead of saying, "Christ was in Galilee," we can say with Paul, "Christ in me, the hope of glory." The beautiful life of the Man of Galilee must be perpetuated in the lives of his followers, his holy sacrifices must be repeated hence he imparts his life and love to those who trust and obey him that the life of God may find expression through the souls of men. Nothing but the presence and power of divinity will drive from man's heart the madness of sin and waken to vigorous action the atrophied functions of the soul.

Before the incarnation there was a great gulf fixed between God and man. Man could think about God, he could pray to God, he could practice a measure of obedience to his will; but, even in his best moments, he was conscious of his utter separateness from God. The incarnation became the golden bridge spanning the chasm which had separated heaven from earth; and from the day of Nativity there was a change in the relations between God and man. To be one with Christ was to be one with God, and this union with God through Christ is the secret of the new kingdom of souls which he founded and over which he reigns. And all in whom Christ dwells will share his destiny. Where he is they will go. Even death must play the part of a servant to open the door to glory and newness of life for those of whom the incarnate God has said, "I go to prepare a place for you, that where I am there ye may be also." God came to man that man might come to God.

The incarnation of Jesus Christ is the center and turning point in the history of the world. When he was born the angelic choirs chanted the only song of heaven ever heard by human ears, whose echoes shall not cease until they become the songs of celestial choruses when this earthly life is exalted to its heavenly realization. And with each recurring Christmastide the glad some song breaks forth anew as the story of the Christ-child charms our hearts, sweetens our lives, beautifies our homes, and sanctifies our love.

"How silently, how silently, the wondrous gift is given:
So God imparts to human hearts, the blessing of his heaven.
No ear can hear his coming, but in this world of sin,
Where meek hearts will receive him still the dear Christ enters in."

Heart Failure, Its Symptoms, Its Causes, Its Cure

(From Rev. Francis E. Clark's Article in the Christian Endeavor World. Selected by Prof. J. A. Garber)

Like every human being and every human organization, the Christian Endeavor Society has diseases to which it is exposed, and its worst trouble is heart-disease.

The Symptoms

This is surely a serious malady. Its first symptoms are seen in the weekly prayer meeting. Few of the members are present on time. They come straggling in for ten minutes after the bell stops ringing. The leader opens the meeting late. The singing drags. The leader mumbles the Scripture reading, and has made little or no genuine preparation for a worth-while meeting. There are long pauses which after a while get terribly embarrassing. Few of the members have graduated from the verse-readers' class. The attendants are scattered all over the room, and the three front seats are absolutely vacant.

In the "chain of prayer," if there is one, those who pray have their heads bowed over the seat, and mumble their words so that few can hear them. The small boys on the back seat often giggle, and the larger girls make eyes at the larger boys.

No new idea has been introduced into the prayer meeting for five years.

The members sit in the same helter-skelter way in which they sat years ago. The leader never makes a change in the order of service.

At the consecration meeting the roll is called in a hum-drum way, always beginning at the same letter of the alphabet; absentees seldom send excuses; and the lookout committee never takes pains to look out for new members, to look up absentees, or to find the reason for their absence.

But these are not all the symptoms of a weak heart. All the committees are affected by it. The lookout committee, as I have said, is negligent of its most important duties; it seldom proposes a new member or looks after an absentee.

The prayer meeting committee does its work in a slipshod way, perhaps printing a list of topics with leaders for a whole year and then considers its duties done. It never takes the front seats as it ought, or takes an early part in the hard end (which is the last end) of the meeting. It never encourages the timid and bashful, or devises new plans to interest and help the members.

The missionary committee, if there is one, shares in the general debility caused by a weak heart; and its meetings drag while its treasury is usually empty.

The social committee might be expected to be the least affected by a weak prayer meeting heart; but that, too, is seriously affected, and the socials are apt to be dead-and-alive gatherings, or else rough house affairs that bring the society into disfavor with the elders.

Truly a long list of appalling ailments; but cheer up; they can all be cured.

The Cause

But first, before we can find the cure, we must know the cause of society heart disease. Granting that the prayer meeting is the beating heart of a Christian Endeavor society, we must look there for the seat of the trouble. It arises very likely from ignorance of Christian Endeavor anatomy.

Some societies do not know where the heart lies. They think the heart is the pastor or the president, perhaps or some particular committee. No, important as these factors are, none of them is the heart of the society.

From the first day of the first society, nearly thirty-nine years ago, the prayer meeting has been the beating heart of every society. When it slows down, the society slows down. When it ceases, the society ceases. When it is strong and vigorous, the society shares its abounding life.

This is only another way of saying that Jesus Christ is the heart of the movement, for the prayer meeting is the place where he is honored and worshipped, where we dedicate ourselves to him, and gain strength, courage, and knowledge to do his will. As the heart is the center of the life of the body, the prayer meeting is the center of the life of the society.

But even when the anatomy of a society is understood, and the prayer meeting is acknowledged to be its heart, other causes often contribute to weaken it. The worldliness of its members is a terrible heart disturber. The member who neglects the prayer meeting for a dance or a bridge party, or even because it is a rainy night, causes the heart to beat less strongly and evenly.

The example of older church members who neglect the church prayer meeting hurts the heart of the Young People's society. The society usually has a hard struggle in a church that has no weekly prayer meeting.

The coldness or aloofness of the pastor is a terrible injury to a Young People's prayer meeting, though not necessarily fatal.

Yet do not be discouraged by all these symptoms and possible causes of heart trouble; there is a cure for every one.

The Cure

First, recognize the importance of the prayer meeting. Realize that it is the heart of the society. If a man with heart disease thinks the chief trouble is in his teeth, because he happens to have a toothache, he is not likely to diagnose his trouble rightly or to find the remedy. Do not go to work patching up the society here and tinkering it there, getting up a big social or a great fair or a concert, thinking thus to put new life into it. These things are all admirable, but they do not effect a heart cure. To cure heart disease the heart must be cured.

Second, set resolutely to work with God's help to effect a cure.

Get the literature on the subject. The United Society publishes many admirable leaflets on the cure of Christian Endeavor heart disease.

Call a small, informal meeting of the most devoted members; study the best plans; and go confidently to work to cure the malady.

A View of Riverside Institute

A prescription composed of four parts prayer, three parts brains, and three parts co-operation, well shaken together and taken regularly before each meeting, and all the week after it, until the next meeting, will inevitably effect a cure.

Once More

Do not be unduly alarmed or discouraged about your symptoms.

I once knew a man who literally scared himself to death because he thought he had heart disease, when there was nothing serious the matter with his heart.

In my early ministry I thought I was doomed to an early death from heart disease. My heart thumped, and palpitated, and fluttered, and stopped for a beat or two, and then went on again. Many times I went into the pulpit, expecting never to come out alive. Yet it has beaten a good many million times since those early days of my ministry.

The doctors have told me that there is a great difference between organic and functional heart trouble.

Mine was of the latter kind. My heart didn't function right, but there was no disease in the heart itself. So it is with society heart trouble. The heart itself, the prayer meeting, is all right. It is a splendid heart, sound, strong, capable of beating for a million years if the world lasts so long. Especially is the variety called the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting heart usually sound for our pledge makes it beat strong and rhythmically, and when observed faithfully never fails it.

Now the Endeavorers of all America are called upon, especially during December and January, two of the best church months in the year, to look to their society hearts, not with worrying introspection, but with a determination to see whether their hearts are functioning rightly, sending the life blood into every limb and muscle of the society and inspiring to devotion and real consecration.

Remember the special division of the theme for December: Attendance, Consecration Meeting, Music, Private Devotion, Quiet Hour. For January: Testimony, Public Prayer and Personal Evangelism. Take these remedies in regular and sufficient doses, not for two months only, but throughout the year, and you will have no more functional trouble with the heart of your society.

COLLEGE NEWS

School has resumed after the Thanksgiving recess with the addition of a few new students. We welcome Mr. Louis Cushenau of Dayton, to the Seminary.

Seminary Students—

I call attention to the roster of Seminary students printed two weeks ago. There were an even forty. It is a list of fine high-minded young people. The church should be appreciative of this showing. There is not a church in the world that would not be proud of such a list of seminary students and there is, moreover, not a church that would not make every provision for their proper training. They would finance and equip their colleges until such training were an actuality, for in fact, that is just what the protestant churches of America are doing right now.

Finances—

So far, the College has been able to meet her obligations both to the teachers and others but this is our lean season of the fiscal year. We have had extra and unusual expenses to meet. Since September 1st, we have paid upwards of $800 back salaries and must make provision for two delayed payments on the street paving, which will be the last payments. Then, too, we took out of the current funds $200 which had been carried there but which was designated by the donors as a gift for the purchase of books. This is now being spent for books for the library. Moreover, the Purple and Gold has been put on its feet, the College Quarterly re-entered and enlarged and some extra repairing done both in the Dormitory, the gymnasium and the college building. Moreover, there are more employees about the place as the five coal furnaces require three janitors now, instead of one as before. The mailing list and clerical work now take the time of Miss Stoffer, there are now paid librarians, and two directors of Physical Education. All this, together with other minor items, makes our expenses at least $2,000 greater than heretofore. I hope, therefore, that those who have pledges will not delay in sending in their amounts. We need the financial support of the Christian Endeavor societies, the Woman's Missionary societies, and the Sunday school organization. The College is fully aware of its great obligation to these national organizations and I want here both to thank these auxiliaries of the church and also to encourage them to make prompt payments for the ensuing year. If there are any signs of delinquency in any of these, it is desirable that prompt attention be paid to this matter.

The Purple and Gold—

I must say a word about the fine showing this publication has been able to make this year. The subscription price was raised to one dollar and a good subscription list was secured even at this advanced rate. Mr. Puterbaugh, to whose capable management much of the credit belongs for the financing of the paper, informs me that all current bills are met and that there are upwards of $200 now in his hands. Mr. Puterbaugh, together with a capable staff, is giving us the best supported paper we have had in years.

Interchurch World Movement Again—

Your Editor and myself attended the Interchurch World Movement convention at Columbus the first week in December, my particular duty being to meet with the Educational Division for Ohio. About twenty-five colleges were represented. I was impressed again that the supreme need at this hour is a vision of our future. We, as an institution of higher learning, and perhaps as a church, are surely standing at the fork in the road. Colleges all over Ohio are receiving GREAT GIFTS, right now. One received a gift of $100,000 on the condition that an additional $500,000 be raised. Other cases could be sighted and this particular college is not a great deal bigger than our own, but they want the money to enlarge and more fully equip their plant. Another college of similar rank is asking for $200,000 in order to TAKE CARE OF THE NORMAL GROWTH THAT IS BOUND TO COME WITHIN THE NEXT FIVE YEARS! And here we are, one of the smaller colleges of Ohio and WITH AS WEALTHY CONSTITUENCY, PROPORTIONATELY, AS ANY, and with many of our wealthy members unaroused! We must get a vision of what we must be in order to survive!

There came to my hand today the enrollment for forty Ohio colleges. Note carefully: The State leads with an enrollment of over 6500. Then follow others, with Ashland twenty-fifth with an enrollment of 176. Blank college closes the list with 36! Just above this one are colleges with, 45, 74, 103, 115, and 82 students enrolled. Now tell me in all good, hard sense, what is Ohio going to do with colleges whose place in the educational world is so small? Not only Ohio, but what will the educational world do? Oh, you say, "We do not want to be measured either by number or by endowment." Perhaps not but there you are! So let us talk of the doctrines of the church which are so dear to us. Let us talk of our mission as a church. Let us talk about standing true to our historic faith. Let us dismiss such unpleasant thoughts as those relating to regulation of colleges. Theology is above learning! Well, admit it all, then what? Just one thing remains and that is to meet the growing demands put upon the colleges of today. To make sure is nonsense, to delay is fatal, and to withhold is wicked! If this is begging and if you think I am beset with a certain college phobia, with a certain educational dizziness, make the most of it! These are still the facts.

But there is the encouraging side. Note, that we stand very high in the list of enrollments. We have much of which to be justly proud. Let us thank God and take courage. Let us make intercessory prayer to the end that some of our wealthy members may get the vision of an Ashland endowed and equipped to make sure our church teachings for years in the future.

MINUTES OF THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCHES OF THE PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT

Johnstown, Pennsylvania, October 7, 8, 9, 1919
Opening Session, Tuesday, 2 P. M.

The opening session of the thirty-first annual conference of the Brethren churches of the Pennsylvania district was called to order by Moderator J. F. Watson in the Somerset Street Brethren church of Johnstown, at 2 P. M., Tuesday, October 7, 1919.

"Faith of Our Fathers" was sung as the opening hymn.

Elder Martin Shively conducted the devotional service, reading John 15:1-16 and leading in fervent prayer for the blessing of God upon the sessions of the conference and upon the churches here represented.

"Jesus Is All the World to Me," was sung with feeling.

The Moderator introduced to the conference Brother H. W. Darr, Moderator of the Somerset Street Brethren church of Johnstown, who in most fitting and pleasing words extended to the conference a most cordial welcome to the 31st conference held in this district and to the seventh district conference held in the Somerset Street church.

Elder H. M. Harley, Vice-moderator of the conference, responded to the welcome, stressing the importance of the conference and the work of the church in these crucial times. If this is to be "Victory Year" for the Brethren church we must meet the challenge of the times in the spirit and power of Christ.

"Showers of Blessing" was sung.

Vice-moderator Harley at this time took the chair and called for the annual "Moderator's Address." The very inspiring address of Moderator J. F. Watson on the timely topic "Why the Church Must Go Forward" will appear in the Evangelist.

Elder George H. Jones, pastor of the Morrellville Brethren church, Johnstown, addressed the conference on the subject "What Our District Should Expect from Its Ministers." This very earnest address was followed by the singing of "The Light of the World Is Jesus."

"Business Methods in Church Work" was the subject of an address by Wm. Kolb, Jr. In the work of the church there is first the need of a vision of the purpose of the work, then follows the question of methods by which this purpose may be attained. Unanimity, efficiency, and co-operation are essentials of success. Some of the errors we are apt to make are (1) to think the pastor should be and do all that there is and all that is done in church work; (2) pastors themselves sometimes think they must do all or it is not done right; (3) we are too haphazard in our church work; (4) we fail to organize the church membership into an effective army of workers; (5) failure to profit by the example of business men; we should be as diligent and as persistent in the work of winning men to Christ and to activity in the church as the agents are in selling stock, etc.

A Committee on Credentials was appointed by the chair. Brethren George H. Jones, Fred Platt and H. S. Myers were named for that work.

A Committee on Resolutions was appointed, the chair naming Brethren I. B. Trout, W. H. Menges, and Norman Statler.

The Moderator expressed his pleasure in welcoming the conference to his church and asked for brief responses as to the work to be accomplished in this gathering. Responses were had as follows: "We came to give and to get spiritual help," Martin Shively; "To be energized and filled with the Holy Spirit," W. C. Benshoff; "Strengthened in fellowship," E. L. Miller; "To plan wisely for the work of the church," M. A. Witter; "We have made a good beginning. Pray. Without HIM we can do nothing," Benjamin Goughnour. Touching reference was made to the faithful ministry of Elder Stephen Hildebrand who is now a helpless invalid but who is with this conference in spirit.

"The Son of God Goes Forth to War" was sung and Elder Martin Shively pronounced the benediction.

Inspirational Session, Tuesday, 7:00 P. M.

This session opened with an inspiring song service under the efficient leadership of Prof. L. B. Furry. "Bulah Land" and "I'm Dwelling in Bulah Land" were sung with fervor.

Elder J. I. Hall read the scripture lesson from Phil. 2:1-7 and led in devout prayer for the guidance and power of the Holy Spirit in the work of the conference.

Brother H. C. Cassel, Philadelphia, addressed the conference on "How Secure Greater Spirituality." His address will be published in the Evangelist.

Moderator Watson introduced the splendid choir of the Somerset Street church, the choir responded by singing the anthem "O Light Eternal."

An offering of $10.00 was received, Elder A. L. DeLozier returned thanks for the offering.

The choir inspired the audience by their beautiful rendering of the anthem, "Lord of All Being."

The sermon of the evening was delivered by Elder A. L. DeLozier, who brought a heart-searching message from Luke 12:15, "Take heed and beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth." This sermon will appear elsewhere in the Evangelist.

"Since Jesus Came Into My Heart," was sung with enthusiasm.

The closing prayer was offered by Brother H. C. Cassel.

Inspirational Session, Wednesday 9:00 A. M.

The session opened with a spirited song service led by Elder Martin Shively. "I Love Him" and "Come Thou Almighty King" were sung.

Miss Nora Bracken led the devotional services. In a short spiritual talk she prepared the way for earnest united prayer, a verse of "Nearer My God to Thee" was sung and short prayers were offered by H. F. E. O'Neill, Mrs. Shafer, M. C. Myers, Alva J. McClain, J. I. Hall, and Miss Bracken.

An "Open Forum" was conducted by the Moderator who directed the thought of conference to the spiritual goals of the Four Year Program, especially to Goal 1 and prayer meeting methods. The following named delegates took part in the discussions, E. L. Miller, A. J. McClain, H. M. Harley, A. L. DeLozier, J. I. Hall, W. C. Benshoff, E. D. Burnworth, I. B. Trout, M. A. Witter, Geo. H. Jones, Martin Shively and H. C. Cassel.

"When I Survey the Wondrous Cross" was sung.

Brother H. F. E. O'Neill addressed conference on "The Church and the Man in the Industrial Center." Brother O'Neill prefaced his address with earnest words touching the spiritual life of the church and the importance of the life of prayer. He also referred to the true spiritual value of the Army Y. M. C. A. work to which this conference made a contribution in 1917.

Business Session, Wednesday, 11:30 A. M.

A report of the Credential Committee was presented by Brother Fred Platt reporting 41 ministerial credentials and 37 lay credentials approved by the committee. The report was approved and the committee continued.

The Moderator ruled that the Credential Committee of the church conference should collect the credentials from the Sunday schools.

Election of a Treasurer to fill the unexpired term of Treasurer H. E. Eppley who had removed from the district resulted in the election of Elder E. Fehnel, Allentown, Pa.

A motion prevailed that E. L. Miller be appointed to furnish daily reports of this conference to the Johnstown newspapers.

Election of Members of the Ministerial Examining Board resulted in the choice of J. F. Watson to succeed himself for three years (1922) and of L. G. Smith to succeed E. H. Smith for a term of two years (1921).

Election of members of the Board of Appeals resulted in the choice of M. A. Witter to succeed himself for a term of three years (1923). W. C. Benshoff and Alva J. McClain were placed in nomination for a term of two years. The ballot resulted in the election of W. C. Benshoff (1921).

A board of tellers to conduct all elections of this conference was appointed by the moderator, H. F. E. O'Neill, Shafer and M. L. Sands constituted the board.

Election of two members of the Executive Committee resulted in the choice of I. B. Trout and E. D. Burnworth.

A letter was read from C. E. Hunt, Colonel 320th Infantry, Camp Lee, Virginia, thanking this conference for the gift of $16.00 to Army Y. M. C. A. work made at our last conference in Altoona.

H. F. E. O'Neill spoke of the work of supporting the Superannuated Ministers' Fund in this district, making an appeal to the ministers of the district to see to it that this worthy cause be presented in every church in the district. Many churches have failed utterly to respond to former appeals.

"Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow" was sung.

The benediction was pronounced by Elder A. J. McClain.

Sunday School Session, Wednesday, 2:00 P. M.

3:00 P. M.

This session opened with District Sunday School President Albert Trent in the chair. The conference praised God in the singing of two hymns, Brother Elmer E. Fehnel conducted the devotions, reading 2 Timothy 3:10-17 after the singing of another hymn, Brother Fehnel led in prayer for God's direction and blessing.

Brother W. C. Benshoff reported the work of Teacher Training in the Pennsylvania District. While there was no specific report of the work of the past year Brother Benshoff made some very practical suggestions for the work of the coming year.

Brother Martin Shively gave a most splendid comparative report of the O. A. B. C. of the Brethren Sunday schools of this district, a summary of which follows:

Brother Marcus A. Witter took the chair while President Albert Trent addressed the conference on "The Sunday School Outlook for the Coming Year." This paper will appear in the Evangelist.

At the close of the Sunday school session a male quartette rendered a most beautiful selection entitled, "That Beautiful Story."

Christian Endeavor Session, Wednesday, 3:00 P. M.

The work of the Christian Endeavor session opened at 3:00 P. M. with District Christian Endeavor President A. L. DeLozier in the chair.

The report of the District Secretary of Christian Endeavor, Miss Nora Bracken was heard. Owing to the failure of some societies to furnish reports the statistics for the district are incomplete. Enthusiastic societies are reported at Pittsburgh, Altoona, Philadelphia, and Johnstown Third church. Some societies fail (1. because of lack of leaders, (2) because of neglect of training (class in Expert Endeavor are very essential), and (3) many senior societies often fail because of lack of foundation. With good leaders the outlook for Junior and Intermediate Christian Endeavor is very encouraging. Children are always ready if we have something to give them. The points of the Christian Endeavor Challenge were presented and an appeal was made that the work of the Christian Endeavor in this District be given such loyal support that Pennsylvania may become the keystone state in Brethren Christian Endeavor.

Elder E. O. Miller discussed the topic, "The Christian Endeavor Back of Church Work." With his usual enthusiasm he emphasized the need of training the children in the work of the church. Daniel Poling, George Shelton, John Willis Baer were cited as the fruits of Christian Endeavor training. Endeavorers must stand back of the church service by attendance. We must emphasize the "C" and the "E" in C. E. Hold up the C. E. and the C. E. will hold up the church.

President A. L. DeLozier made his report. In this report, President DeLozier emphasized the work of the Christian Endeavor conventions, presented an earnest plea to meet the Christian Endeavor challenge, and called attention to the use of Christian Endeavor literature.

Mrs. Karl Gross, the field workers of the western part of Pennsylvania, was introduced to the conference.

Business Session, Wednesday, 4:00 P. M. Moderator Watson took the choir for the business session at 4 P. M.

A committee to nominate Sunday school officers was appointed by the chair. A. J. McClain, H. F. E. O'Neill, and Albert Trent constituted that committee.

Election of members of the Mission Board of the Pennsylvania district resulted as follows: For a term of two years, L. J. Replogle (1921) and Wm. Kolb, Jr., (1921); for a term of three years, Norman Statler (1922) and W. H. Menges (1922).

T motion to adjourn brought the session to a close.

The benediction was pronounced by Brother H. C. Cassel.

Inspirational Session, Wednesday, 7:00 P. M.

This session was opened with the enthusiastic singing of "We Are Marching To Zion." Elder Alva J. McClain led conference in "Constructive Devotional Bible Study." The scripture studied was the Lord's own prayer recorded in John 17. This study was of exceptional spiritual helpfulness, disclosing the wonderful treasures of this most wonderful prayer ever offered.

The deep spiritual tone of this service was continued as the choir sang with effect, "How Beautiful Upon the Mountain."

An offering of $16.82 was received and again the choir sang "Te Deum."

Elder W. C. Benshoff addressed the conference with great earnestness on the topic, "The Must of the Four Year Program." This paper will appear in the Evangelist.

Brother Edward Byers of the choir sang most beautifully, "I Will Extol Thee."

The sermon of the evening was delivered by Elder H. M. Harley who brought a stirring message on the subject, "Investing for Eternity." This sermon will appear in the Evangelist.

The benediction was pronounced by Elder E. M. Cobb.

State Missions Session, Thursday 8:15 A. M.

In the song service, "Since Jesus Came into My Heart" and "Pentecostal Power" were sung with spirit. Devotional service was conducted by Elder W. A. Crofford, who read from Acts 2 and led in prayer.

The Vice-moderator was called to the chair at this time.

Brother S. A. Snook, Treasurer of the Pennsylvania District Mission Board presented the Treasurer's Report which was received and ordered spread upon the minutes. The report follows:

Johnstown, Pa., October 9, 1919.

Treasurer's Report of the Brethren Mission Board of Pennsylvania for the year ending October 9, 1919:

S. A. SNOOK, Treasurer.

Brother Albert Trent, Secretary of the Mission Board made the following report which was received and spread upon the minutes:

REPORT OF SECRETARY OF MISSION BOARD FOR CONFERENCE YEAR Ending OCTOBER 9, 1919

To the Moderator and Members of the Conference of the Pennsylvania District:

Brethren: Your Mission Board respectfully submits the following report of its work for the current conference year ending, October 9th, 1919:

The prevailing conditions throughout the district have not been favorable for any special effort in the extension of our work. Your Board has been caring only for the missions already started and giving assistance to some of the weaker churches in maintaining services regularly, with some financial aid given for holding evangelistic meetings.

We feel that the greatest help in missionary endeavor in our district would be the employment of an evangelist in the field continuously. And doubtless this would have been done already had we been able to secure the man. This can be done without increasing the apportionments, and can be made a source of help to all our churches, and especially to the weaker congregations that are at present scarcely able to maintain regular services. By this means the localities for establishing additional missions could be investigated and where favorable and promising fields are found, these can be gradually developed and in due time be made self-sustaining.

The contributions on the apportionment during the current year have been quite gratifying, even surpassing all previous years. Some of the congregations failing to pay last year, have paid for both years during the current year. Giving us sufficient funds to meet the requirements of the work, maintaining a fair balance for a start in the ensuing year, and for any additional work that may be undertaken.

Eighteen churches paid the apportionment in full; nine paid more than the amount apportioned; eleven paid in part, and only eight failed to contribute.

There are yet a few churches, equally able to pay in full, and more so than some of those that are meeting the requirements regularly, that still fail to catch the vision of their financial ability, thus bringing in a note of discouragement.

The following is a brief outline of the conditions of the work in the places given financial help during the year:

ARMSTRONG COUNTY—The principal points in this circuit are West Kittanning and Brush Valley and have been under the care of Elder E. H. Smith for the past few years. On account of his wife's health, Brother Smith has resigned the pastorate and moved to Ohio.

Both places are well organized, having growing Sunday schools and are considered promising congregations by all our ministering brethren who have preached there. They have met all their financial obligations during the year. Your Board is very anxious to secure the services of a good man to take up this work at once and feel that it is a fine opportunity for some live preacher to build up a splendid work. Your Board expended $203.10 for pastoral support and $75.00 for evangelistic services, a total of $278.10, on this charge and received from them $108.00.

BEDFORD COUNTY—We have continued financial assistance here in order to maintain regular services at four different churches in this circuit. The care of the field is in charge of Prof. Edward Byers. Your Board paid $175.20 in support of the work and received $72.00 in apportionment from them.

BETHLEHEM—As you are aware the work here has been abandoned for some time past, and the membership in Bethlehem has united with the Allentown congregation. The property is offered for sale. Our expense has been $80.34, interest on the mortgage and insurance on the building.

CALVARY, N. J.—This mission continues in charge of Elder M. L. Sands with the pastorate at Sergeantsville. The membership is well organized and is faithful to all the interests of the church. The financial assistance given during the year was $50.00 and we received their apportionment of $22.00.

JONES MILLS—Elder L. A. Clifford is ministering to this congregation since Spring. This church has been pastorless for about a year but is now showing creditable advancement with a growing Sunday school and renewed activity in the work. Your Board has given $35.00 in pastoral support, and received from them $49.75 for mission work.

JOHNSTOWN THIRD CHURCH — The work here is under the care of Elder George H. Jones and is moving along quite successfully. They have purchased two lots for the location of a new church and paid for them in full. All departments of the work are well organized and are showing healthy development. There were twenty additions by baptism and fifty-six by letter. The Board expended $276.00 in pastoral support and received $72.00.

PLEASANT VALLEY AND TERRA ALTA—These two points have been in charge of Dr. J. M. Tombaugh during the past summer. Terra Alta has met all expenses of the services and paid $20.00 apportionment. Pleasant Valley was given $67.94 pastoral support and contributed $15.00 for our work. Three members were added by baptism and one by letter.

PHILADELPHIA THIRD CHURCH—The good work started here some years ago by Brethren Braker, Cassel and Roberts and their helpers is showing most creditable growth. They have a Sunday school attendance of 160 to 170 and an active membership of 70 people. It is the most promising mission on our field. Unfortunately their chapel is too small to accommodate the attendance of their school and it has become practically imperative to arrange for more room. They are now working on some plans for enlargement of their building which they hope to accomplish within the next year with the assistance of some financial help from the General and State Boards. During the past year our Board paid them $75.00 to assist in an evangelistic meeting by Elder L. S. Bauman, which resulted in over fifty confessions and the addition of thirty-six by baptism to the membership. They paid $54.00 apportionment to the Board.

WINDBER—The work here has been in charge of Brother E. F. Byers of the Third church of Johnstown. They are maintaining a Sunday school and regular services. Your Board assisted in pastoral support to the extent of $240.00 and they paid into our treasury $85.00.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

Louisville was the ninth church to be canvassed in Ohio. I went there knowing that Louisville has been long and vitally associated with the college. It was here that Brethren Josiah and John Keim lived—both loyal and unfailing friends of the school in the years of its struggles and uncertainties. In this church there are also others who have helped the school substantially in the past. This was also the church home of Miss Katie Harshberger from whose estate there came to the college $2,000 some years ago. So when I went to Louisville I felt that I was going to historic ground as it pertains to Ashland College.

Brother Riddle is the pastor of this congregation, having assumed charge of this field when Brother Baer closed his work there to take up his duties at Ashland as Editor of the Evangelist. I found Brother Riddle thoroughly acquainted with his church even though he has not been there very long, and I also found his work in excellent condition and himself and family greatly loved and highly esteemed by his people. Under such conditions a canvass is always both easy and pleasant. Brother Riddle is an all around booster for Ashland College as was fully demonstrated during our stay with him by the way he so ably assisted me and also encouraged his people to do their very best by this great cause.

The results of the canvass were such as not to disappoint the campaign secretary, or the pastor. I am sure when the finals are in it will place Louisville at $2,400. This will put Louisville in second place among Ohio churches so far canvassed. However, I am hoping that Louisville shall have to soon yield this second place to some other Ohio church.

The top notch gift in this canvass was $250. There were two $150 gifts also and a number of $100 gifts and from that on down. The various organizations also helped, including the Sunday school, the W. M. S., the Y. P. S. C. E., and the S. M. M., also a men's organized class enlisted in a substantial way. This is always a source of pleasure to the secretary. There were at least two inspiring things about the Louisville canvass. First the response of the young people was at once very inspiring. I have been at few places where I found such splendid, consecrated young people as at Louisville. Louisville may justly be proud of her young people. A congregation with such young people may feel measurably sure of a future. Incidentally I may say it is from among the young people of the Louisville church that Melvin Stuckey has come, who is now a theologian in Ashland College. Many of these young people are tithers; and it was truly a joy to see these young people enlist in behalf of the college. I feel constrained to say that if Brethren Josiah and John Keim could have seen what I saw during the canvass they could not but have felt that what they did in the past for Ashland College was not in vain. I beg also to state briefly another incident which was both inspiring and touching. One of the members of this congregation at the time the campaign was launched was Miss Winona Knoll. Miss Knoll was a school teacher and an earnest Christian girl. And being keenly interested in the campaign from the very start she spoke often to her parents as to what she would give to the cause when "Beachler" came. Sad indeed, this noble girl did not live to see the day. The epidemic last winter took her as it took so many thousands; but her parents were determined that their daughter should still have some part in helping to endow our school. Hence, Miss Knoll being a tither, the parents paid the daughter's pledge to the local church out of her tithe, and turned the remainder (a snug little gift) over for endowment. I confess I have rarely been touched in this campaign as this touched me. And I have said since in my own heart, I would to God our people with their broad acres and thousands in wealth were also tithers, with the vision and the measure of consecration of this noble young woman! How easy it would be then to raise this money and what a grand future would become possible for our only school!

Among the homes where I received kindnesses were Riddles, Eshelmanns, Oysters, Stoners, Clappers, (Frank and Louis) Painters, Monks, Brattens, and Wertenbergers. I shall remember all of those people for their kindness to me. And I am truly grateful to Brother Riddle for the royal assistance he gave me. May God richly bless this pastor and people.

The mercury now registers $130.500. Middlebranch will be reported next. We are hoping and praying for good weather so that the campaign may be pushed with all the speed the work will justify.

WM. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

MASONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

An unusually long time has passed since any report has been sent to the Evangelist from this church, but it is not to be taken as evidence that we are lying down on the job. In fact, there has been enough to do to keep all hands busy, and some of us have been trying hard to keep up with the demands. In common with many other congregations, we had been led to believe that the end of the war would bring a great revival in the field of religious activities, for had not the men who served as religious leaders at the front told us that the young men were coming home to take the reins in the churches and give us all such a demonstration of what the church could be, and ought to be, that most of us would sit back and rub our eyes with wonder at the transformation? Well, at any rate we hoped to see it that way, but in common with most other folks we have not found it that way. The slump in religious endeavor has been and is, all but world wide, so far as we know, and only one thing has given us heart to go on, and that, that if one has the patience to wait, the pendulum will swing as far to the right, as it had swung to the left. No, there is still another thing which has kept hope alive,—the fact that thousands are praying for a revival, and praying with such persistence and faith that the petition will not be permanently denied. In spite of the slump, three had been baptized and received into the church during the summer, and our Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother Kratz, had kept up unusually well during the summer months. Better in fact than any previous summer during my pastorate here. Attendance at the church services left much to be desired, but the pastor felt that perhaps his service was growing too long, and that he ought to give way to a new voice. However, as the weather grew cooler, there was improvement even in this, and again we took hope. We decided to hold a revival service, and called Brother B. T. Burnworth to lead us in the effort. He came on November 4, and for three weeks he poured out his soul in splendid gospel messages, demonstrating the fact that he is truly a servant of God and one who knows the Word, and knows how to present it in convincing and convicting power. And God gloriously honored his effort by bringing to confession of Christ 42 souls, nearly all of whom were confessing their Lord for the first time. It is indeed a great victory, and the hearts of all are glad. The boys and girls of the Sunday school turned to the Lord splendidly, and the Master who went out early in the morning to seek laborers for his vineyard, did not seek them in vain, for a troop of them are with him at the task. Young men and women too, and adults were among the new additions to the ranks of the church. The meeting closed on Sunday evening, November 23, with the largest communion in the history of the congregation, and a sermon following, at which three more made the good confession. Brother Burnworth made for himself a host of friends and many prayers will follow him into any of the fields in which our Father calls him. It was truly a revival and we are hoping and expecting permanently good things to follow. Having been on the field so long, naturally I see many others who ought to follow the example of those who have come, but we shall pray and work on, confidently expecting God's continued favor, with all the victories which are thus possible.

Yours in the hope of eternal service,
MARTIN SHIVELY.

Communion Notices

G. H. JONES.

ROSE-NICHOLSON—Brother John Rose of the Pike and Miss Viola Nicholson of Indiana, Pa., were united in marriage at the parsonage of the Third church. Brother Rose is also one of the members of a faithful and active Brethren family.

G. H. JONES.

OAKS-STIFFLER—Brother Christ Oaks of Johnston, Pa., a member of the Third church, was united to Miss Laura E. Stiffler of Altoona by the pastor.

G. H. JONES.

COBURN-MILLER—Mr. John Coburn, Jr., of Nanty-Glo and Sister Elvina Miller of the Pike church were united in marriage at the parsonage of the Third church. Sister Miller is a member of one of our faithful Pike homes.

G. H. JONES.

KELS-MICHELbacher—Brother Louis F. Kels of the Third church of Johnston, Pa., and Miss Alice Michelbacher of Vinco church, were wedded in the parsonage December 11th. The Kels family are one of our "standbys" in Morrellville.

G. H. JONES.

BURNS-ALBAUGH—Mr. Wm. C. Burns and Sister Alice Singer-Albaugh of Vinco church were married in the parsonage of the Third church by the pastor on December 6th. We were formerly pastor of most of these young people and as we marry them our prayers and best wishes go with them for a happy and useful life in their new relationship. Sister Burns is a member of old Dunkard stock which has been for years actively identified with our Vinco work.

G. H. JONES, Pastor.

HULLER-BOYER—Mr. Verdie Huller and Miss Laura Boyer were united in marriage at the home of the writer, in Sydney, Indiana, November 26. The bride is a member of the Brethren church and the groom a member of the Church of the Brethren.

L. A. MYERS.

WILLIAMS-WAGNER—Mr. Charles Williams and Miss Sarah M. Wagner were united in marriage on Wednesday evening, December 2nd, at the Conemaugh Brethren church. Mr. Williams is a son of Abraham K. Williams of 513 Raab Avenue and the bride is a daughter of Mr. Samuel Wagner of 703 Vickroy Avenue of this city (Johnstown). The attendants were Mr. Fred Wagner, brother of the bride and Miss Alice Stutzman of East Conemaugh, Pa. The writer officiating.

E. F. BYERS.

MITCHELL-GOSHORN—At the home of the bride's parents in Clay City, Indiana, on November 26, occurred the marriage of Miss Ruth L. Goshorn to Mr. Paul V. Mitchell. Both young people are members of the First Brethren church and are highly respected young people. The bride is the daughter of Mr. J. B. E. Goshorn of the Church of the Brethren. The groom is one of the enterprising farmers of the community. He has spent several terms at Purdue University. The couple departed immediately after the ceremony for Detroit where the groom will be in school for several months. The ceremony by the undersigned.

S. C. HENDERSON.

IN THE SHADOW

WISE—Brother Sanford Wise, one of our younger men of the Morrellville church was called to his heavenly home, November 9th. He was the only support of a widowed mother, and of an infirm father. He had been many years since we had a sadder service. He was just in the full vigor of early manhood, being 29 years of age. His death was due to appendicitis; he lived but a week after the operation. The prayers of the church are raised in behalf of the grieving family. Funeral services by the undersigned.

G. H. JONES, Pastor.

GROSSNICKLE—Benj. F. Grossnickle of North Manchester, once a member of the First Brethren church, died April 11, 1919, aged 67 years, 8 months, 27 days.

C. A. BAME.

CARPENTER—Pearl Richards Carpenter, a young member of the First Brethren church, died in Wabash of her own hand, July 17, 1919. She leaves a young baby and husband.

C. A. BAME.

JOHNSON—Joy Johnson formerly an honored teacher of this city, died in Minneapolis and was brought to the city. Her funeral arrangements had all been made to the writer three years before. She was an artist by profession and in her life a model young woman, whose parents pressed her to the spirit world a few years, she being the last of the family. Funeral in her own home by the writer and Rev. Bechtold of the M. E. church of which she was a member.

C. A. BAME.

HEETER—John Wesley Heeter of Michigan, united with the First Brethren church at this place last winter and departed this life November 14, 1919. Funeral services by the writer. He was 57 years, 11 months and 18 days old. He leaves five children.

C. A. BAME.

WOOD—Viola Wood died November 30, 1919 at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, and was brought to this, her former home, for burial. She was a member of the Methodist church, aged 42 years, and leaves a husband and son and daughter to mourn. Funeral by the writer.

C. A. BAME.

LANDIS—Jacob J. Landis, a member of the First Brethren church of North Manchester, died December 2, 1919, aged 73 years, 19 days. He leaves three children, five sisters, two brothers, five grandchildren. He died full of faith and departed ready for the world beyond.

C. A. BAME.

GROFF—John S. Groff was born in Miami county, Ohio, November 9th, 1828. He came with his parents to Michigan when a small child, locating in Campbell township, Ionia county. He was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Zacherle on December 27, 1858, who preceded him to the spirit world on December 14th, 1889. On March the 17th, 1896, he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret Allardine to which union were born three children, William A., Burton A., and Melle A. He united with the Campbell Brethren church in 1915, to which he was true and faithful until death claimed his own. Although he suffered much the last years of his life, yet he smiled for every one he passed. About two years ago he moved with his family to Lake Odessa, where he died on December 1st, 1919, aged 91 years. He was a true and faithful man, and a beautiful cemetery on the bank of the Jordan Lake. Besides his family he leaves to mourn his departure an aged mother, one brother, one sister and a host of relatives and friends who will miss his pleasant smile and cheery greeting. Services were conducted by the writer.

M. V. GARRISON.

LICHTY—Josiah Lichty was born in Somerset county, Pa., April 12th, 1841, and died at his home in Watrous, Iowa, on the 5th of December, 1919. The funeral services were conducted from the First Brethren church in Waterloo on Sunday afternoon at 2:30 by the writer. Brother Lichty was a member of the Brethren church for many years. He was an honorable citizen of the famous Orange Township and Blackhawk county, Iowa. The funeral was largely attended.

A Great Need and How It Is Being Met

One of the greatest tasks that has faced the Christian church (of North America more than any other country, because of her wealth and freedom from war devastation) in the last generation is the relief of the great masses of people who are dying of starvation and exposure as a result of the havoc that war has wrought. It is so big a task that the churches working independently could not possibly measure up to it, and, at the same time, it is so urgent that they cannot neglect it and be true to their common Lord, whose great compassionate heart was ever going out to the hungry, suffering multitudes. The church is neither being negligent nor working independently; the great Christian masses are co-operating in what is known as the "Near East Relief," with offices at 1 Madison Avenue, New York, for the purpose of following their Lord in the service of humanity. This organization has taken over the work of saving 800,000 starving Christian people of Armenia, Syria and other parts of western Asia. The Red Cross has announced its withdrawal from this field, leaving Near East Relief alone responsible for meeting the needs of this great needy field. Many of the former Red Cross workers remain in Turkey to continue their work with this new organization.

A bowl of hot bean soup every day is all that is keeping alive 150,000 little children in Near East Relief centers in the Russian Caucasus, Armenia, Syria, Turkey and Persia, according to Miss Adelaide Dwight, a worker who has just returned to the United States. So far sufficient relief funds have not been obtained to give these children more than one meal a day but this keeps them from starvation which they faced during the many months that their sole food consisted of grass, roots and filth gathered in the streets and along the roadside. Many thousand of these children have already perished from starvation and others have not been reached because funds are not available. And every day that the Christians of America delay in sending aid, hundreds more of these suffering babes will die.

There are 120,000 persons in the bread line at Alexandropol daily. The need for immediate relief is very urgent. Miss Dwight says the suffering in the Russian Caucasus is terrible and thousands will starve before the next harvest unless help is given them. She comes to the United States to make a special appeal for the 120,000 homeless, ragged, and wretched wanderers under 15 years of age, whose parents have been murdered by the Turks. Several thousand of these children have been gathered into orphanages and it is planned to care for others as fast as the generosity of the people of the United States permits.

Miss Hermine Dakesian, a pretty 20 year-old Armenian girl, who survived four years of Turkish persecution, has just arrived in the United States. She will go to Oberlin, Ohio where she will enter Oberlin College. She came to America with Miss Adelaide S. Dwight. On the same boat, which arrived in New York City a few days ago, were fourteen other Armenian girls who expect to complete their education in the United States. All of them have relatives in this country.

Herself a witness to the murdering of hundreds of helpless women and children by the Turks and a victim of deportation, Miss Dakesian says there is still untold suffering in Armenia, Syria, and Palestine, and hundreds of thousands of persons will starve unless help is given them until the next harvest.

Faces of many hundred Armenian girls have been tattooed by Arabs, Kurds and other semi-barbarous tribes of Asia Minor. When the Armenians were deported the girls were sold to the Arabs and the Kurds for use in their harems. Tattooing is considered a mark of beauty by these people and they desired to have their new women as beautiful as possible, in their opinion. The result is that many of these women who have escaped from captivity are appearing at Near East Relief hospitals with the request that the marks be removed, and others have scarred their faces beyond power of medical skill in an effort to burn out the marks with acids. Near East Relief by means of our gifts takes care of more than 50,000 Armenian and Syrian refugees each month in their hospitals. All manner of diseases are treated but most of them are the result of the deportation and suffering of the people.

Though food and clothing are given to suffering Armenians and Syrians when necessary, whenever possible the refugees are given work instead. In many of the industrial homes established by Near East Relief, these people are permitted to earn their own living.

Owing to the scarcity of machinery and materials it is not possible to give the men and women all of the work they desire, so just enough is given each person to keep them from starvation. A person with no dependants is allowed to work only a few hours each week, while a mother with several small children to support will get a chance to work throughout the entire week. Each case is investigated and only enough hours of work given to keep the person from actual want. And these people are thankful even for a chance to earn a bare living.

Great Survey Conference at Atlantic City in January

Invitations have been sent to more than a thousand leaders in home and foreign missions, and other church activities for the World Survey Conference to be held at Atlantic City, January 7 to 10 next. Those who attend will be the representatives of the evangelical deominations and boards, numbering nearly a hundred, which are co-operating in the Interchurch World Movement of North America.

The invitations were signed by Robert Lansing, who recently became chairman of the Interchurch General Committee; John R. Mott, William H. Foulkes and S. Earl Taylor.

The conference will consider the preliminary results of the world-wide surveys the Interchurch Movement has been carrying on for many months and decide on a joint program. The surveys will make it possible for the first time to visualize the whole talk of the church and to know approximately what it will cost in men and money for American Protestantism to undertake its fair share of responsibility for world evangelization. The various denominations will be asked to determine their individual responsibility, to frame their own budgets and to decide by mutual agreement on a date in the spring of next year for a united-simultaneous financial appeal both to their own constituencies and to American Protestantism as a whole.

The Interchurch Movement has made public the following tentative program of its activities next year:

Spiritual Emphasis during January, beginning with Week of Prayer Conference, Field Department: Atlantic City, January 6-7.

World Survey Conference: January 7-10, Atlantic City.

Ministers' State Conferences: January 20—March 1.

National Household Visitation under the auspices of the Home Missionary Survey: January—March.

Laymen's Conference: January 31—February 1-2.

Christian Stewardship: February 22, Stewardship; February 29, Life Enrollment.

County Conferences: February—March.

Metropolitan Conferences: February, March, April.

Township Conferences: March—April.

Life Service and Evangelism: March, culminating in a great ingathering on Easter Sunday, April 4, 1920.

Financial Campaign: Probably last of April. Date to be determined by World Survey Conference.

May to September: Conservation conferences, also Missionary education and General Interchurch World Movement conferences.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Carpenter appears on the Mission page again with his usual newsy "Home Mission Notes." We are quite sure no one will miss reading them.

Brother J. I. Hall rejoices in the fact that he has had a successful revival in both his churches. At McKee, Pennsylvania, Brother E. L. Miller very ably assisted him, and at Martinsburg, Brother H. M. Harley was his effective helper. Brother Hall speaks highly of the services of both of these brethren, also states that both his churches are in splendid condition.

Brother Yoder gives another letter from Rio Cuarto. The work is going splendidly, and Brother Yoder is steadily working his way into the good graces of the generally cold and indifferent student body and college professors. We cannot know how valuable this kind of work may prove to be to our cause in the future. Already fruit is appearing. Brother Sickie is now on the grounds and at work.

Brother E. H. Smith, who has closed his pastorate in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania, gives us a report of the work accomplished during his leadership of the churches of that county. Among the other good things done, he succeeded in bringing about the erection of a new church in Kattanning. All the churches realized commendable material improvement, as well as growth in number and power.

Brother Wm. A. Gearhart, our General Missionary Secretary, who tells about his trip to Kentucky, said in a personal word to the editor, "I hope we will have a very liberal offering, for I see enough already to know that they need help down here and need it very much." This is the testimony of every one who visits our Kentucky missions. The same statement of urgent need may be made concerning the department of Religious Education in Ashland College. With these two calls sounding so loud, every loyal Brethren ought to make the most liberal offering possible at this Christmas season. Be sure that your gift is both white and generous.

We are pleased to receive a news-letter from Brother Willis Ronk of Roann, Indiana. As he says, he has not crowded us with letters in the past, but he has certainly been busy, and we shall hope to hear from him more frequently in the future. He gives us a splendid report of his work at both Center Chapel and at Roann. The Roann people have made such progress that they require the entire time of one pastor, and Brother Ronk is to continue his good work with them.

IMPORTANT: There is pressing need of a teacher for the Krypton school, according to word from Brother G. C. Carpenter, to begin January 1 to 15 and to continue five or six months. Brother Smith of Krypton writes that the people will guarantee $50 per month above expenses for a good Christian teacher. Here is an opportunity for service that the one qualified cannot afford to pass by. May the Lord make the right person willing to answer this call.

Brother E. M. Cobb, in a note to the editor, states that he is delivering a week of Bible lectures in the New York City Tabernacle and that a number of confessions have been received. He also encloses an editorial clipped from the Philadelphia North American attacking the "Un-Christian and Un-Businesslike" policy of underpaying ministers. We hope to publish this editorial in whole or in part at some future date.

A company has been organized in Chicago for the purpose of publishing a Christian daily newspaper. They state that the average daily paper is dominated "not by the spirit of Christ, but by the spirit of commercialism, and often of yellow commercialism." They also state that it is their intention of publishing a paper that will be "Christian and politically independent," and that it shall be controlled by "no clique or faction," but by a body of honest, God-fearing men. Headquarters will be 708 Garriek Bldg., Chicago, Illinois.

Of course you will not fail to read the business manager's notes. He has good news to tell you this week. The churches are still showing their appreciation of the Evangelist by putting it into every home, or at least 75 percent of them. We are frequently receiving letters telling us that the paper is growing better all the time. We do not take this selfishly to ourselves, but attribute it to the splendid articles that are being written by our excellent writers. We want to pass the good word on to them in this way.

Brother Lytle is pushing hard the work of his charge, which includes the churches of Burlington and Darwin, Indiana. He conducted evangelistic campaigns at both places soon after General Conference and the membership was greatly refreshed thereby. He announces the call to the ministry of Brother Sylvester Wheatstone, extended by the Flora church. Brother Wheatstone has proven himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed; he has been a leader in his own church and in the Sunday school forces of his county. Doubtless Brother W. E. Thomas, his pastor, will soon report more definite news.

We have received the most hearty response to our requests for articles, and have also received a number of articles unsolicited, for which we are equally as grateful as for those we solicit. We are pleased to have our readers who can serve the church with the pen, to write upon themes they think will be of interest to our Evangelist family. If we do not happen to call on you as often as you think we ought, be free to write without solicitation. We welcome you. Only please be patient, one and all, with us as we seek to use our best judgment in publishing the articles, when and how we can, having in mind the best interests of the brotherhood. If you have written an article that has not been published, and you have not heard from us about it, do not take it for granted that it has found its way into the waste basket. Very likely, it is in our barrel waiting "a more convenient season" for publication. We are very grateful to the good Brethren everywhere for their loyal support. We take pleasure in serving you.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

How Are You Coming?

I wish I had the extra money this afternoon, to wire every pastor about his status on the Four Year Program. Alas, I do not. I wish I might even wire each of the DISTRICT DIRECTORS, but I do not have the money or the "sand" to do that. Anyway, I would like to have a word from many sources about what we are doing to make this a VICTORY YEAR.

Victory Year

I am glad to see that word as often as I do on the pages of the Evangelist. I know from that, that the word is kept before us pretty well. But you know, my brethren, that a look at the chart on the wall will be a mighty good thing, every day, till you are sure that your church is reaching the limit in its effort to make every possible goal. The reckoning day is fast approaching and if your churches are not making the goals, the district and the national conferences can not.

A Revival in Every Church

How are you measuring up on that? Note the slogan is not a series or "serious" of meetings, nor a protracted meeting but a revival in every church. Of course if you are not arranging for one, it will not likely arrive. If you tried and failed, try, try again. We want and need a revival in every church to get across on goal 4.

"Watch Indiana"

Remember that the state that took off most of its yellow is at work on this task. Slowly, we have worked out a plan which we hope will work out among the churches.

Let me give you the outline of it. I do this because it may help some states that I know are working on a similar plan. It is like this:

Our Board of Evangelists are right now soliciting each of the churches and missions of our state in a questionnaire with the following questions:

1. Have you had a revival this winter?
2. What are the results of your effort?
3. Are you in need of help?
4. Can your pastor give time for a revival in each church?
5. If your effort did not succeed, will you try again?

If any pastor of Indiana did not get such a questionnaire, he may address either H. H. Wolford or myself with the answers at once.

More of the Plan

The pastor who is loaned by his church for some of this outside work will be guaranteed a certain wage and at the same time asked to turn back into the evangelistic fund all over a specified sum.

The churches of Indiana will be solicited on this basis for this fund: All worth over $10,000 to give $5.00.

All worth over $5,000 to give $2.50.

All worth $1,000 or less, $1.00.

Those desiring to make as little work for the evangelists as possible, may send their quota to Wolford at once and receive receipt. Now, this plan may not be the best one that could be evoked, but it will get money and men if the people are at all serious about what our conferences have again and again voted. It is an effort to take very seriously, our own resolutions.

Leaks! Leaks!

The big reason we do not grow as a church, numerically, as is called for by goal 4, because we have so many leaks.

So many places where our members move and are lost to our denomination. What shall we do about it? There is but one cure for it. Make more churches, and surely keep the ones we have now. To keep the ones we have now, we must evangelize, evangelize, evangelize! And after all, this is our business. Our big churches because of their strategic location have a lot of good people and can pay the preacher the biggest wages and then, alas! Too often they are so stingy of him that they want to monopolize his time and talent and keep him at home where he will dry up, if he does not get into evangelism some.

Then, when he has died of "dry rot," they will turn him out and monopolize another "greenhorn." Not? Now honestly, is not that about the game they play? How long will they play it? Well, if they play at it too long they will not get many preachers. There will not be many of their kind and they will die clear dead.

Preachers! Preachers! Leaders!

Have you recently gone down that line of goals? Will your Christian Endeavor be another "tailender" next year? How about your goals for your Sunday school? Do you have them all coming? How about your Teacher Training?

How about the books your leaders are to read? How about your prayer meeting? Your communion? Your Honor Roll for the Evangelist? Your Woman's Missionary Society? All these must be right up to top-notch if we are getting the goals ready for next September. My! How soon that will have arrived

Reports Soon

Before you are aware, we shall have to ask for your half-yearly report. Are you ready for it? Line up and be quick to respond to the call that will be bound to come. I must know and you will want a look at the brotherhood as it is, and there is but one way to get that—reports.

Busy

Now, I am sure that you are and have been busy. If you have not, you are not happy. We get happiness by "doing these things." The folks that leave undone the work of the program leave undone the work of the kingdom. The people who object to being measured are kicking against the God for he is measuring us and tabulating as we can not. The 1920 conference will be a time of apologies or a day of VICTORY. The final report will be a jubilant one or a sad one. What you are doing these days is telling the story of what the next conference will be.

"Work for the night is coming,
Work through the morning hours,
Work while the dew is sparkling,
Work mid springing flowers.
Give every flying moment
Something to keep in store,
Work for the night is coming
When man works no more."

BAME.

When is a church financially efficient? When all its current expenses are promptly met, and the benevolence paid in full? It is financially efficient when every member has a definite share in its support, and is doing his full duty also to those who do not have the full privileges of the Gospel. The primary work of the church is spiritual, but that does not preclude the necessity of sanctified common sense applied to its business affairs.—The Nebraska Lutheran, Emerson, Neb.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Our Girls and Other Girls. By Mrs. G. T. Ronk

Evangelist readers who visited the Inn Chapel at our late conference saw the motto on the wall, "Our Girls for Other Girls." Although it is not our adopted slogan, yet it is the purpose of our Sisterhood organization.

"Our Girls for Other Girls." Who are our girls? Does it mean just a few girls here and there, girls of responsibility, of earnest endeavor, "thoroughly furnished unto every good work?" Girls with trained minds, with high ideals, with loving thought for others? Or does it also mean the weak girl, the silly girl, the thoughtless one, the girl with the wayward tendencies,—the girl we all know too well, alas, in our religious work.

Verily, the purpose of our Sisterhood leaders should be to reach out and claim these girls of varying characteristics, turn their thoughts away from self and selfish ambitions and focus them upon the "twilight" regions where dwell the "other girls." It should also be to educate and train them so that their emotions will be directed in the channels of love, self-sacrifice and service; to educate them by giving them a knowledge of the needs and condition of the "other girls." This can be done through the careful study of our mission books as well as in our regular monthly meetings which are of a missionary, devotional, or "uplift" character. Their sympathies will soon be aroused and willingness to give freely will be a natural result. To train them in the joy of giving time, money and service and it may come to pass that many will give up erstwhile pleasures for the sake of these "other girls." Mayhap, too, some will give up that greatest of all gifts, a life of service.

And the "other girls," too, are legion. You will find them in our homeland. From north to south, from east to west, in country and city, they are holding out beseeching hands. The Sisterhood is interested especially now in the Kentucky mountains, where a nurse is being maintained.

Then you will find them in foreign lands. The black haired, almond eyed Chinese girl, grasping at opportunities for Western culture, alas, too often a sham; to whom indeed the walls of custom have fallen down, leaving her as it were, in a house without walls. And it is not well to live thus. Then the sad eyed girl-wife and mother of India, the child widow; the secluded, petted toy; the beast of burden. The dark eyed, romantic sister of the Southland whose religion has failed her in time of need, whose spiritual growth does not keep pace with her mental and physical. Then last, the dusky African maid who is still our sister, though skin and features differ so greatly from "our girls" and the "other girls." All these are lifting beseeching eyes to our girls to give them a chance such as they themselves have had. Two of "our girls" have heard the call to Africa and have gone forth. Will others also?

When every Brethren girl is a Sisterhood girl, working and praying and giving, sacrificing and serving, then will many workers go forth to those "other girls" in the needy fields of the earth.

Why the Church Must Go Forward. By J. Fremont Watson

"The Church Must Go Forward," because of the urgency of the task of missions. Too many individuals and churches are planning and working as if they had two or more generations in which to do the particular work for which God is holding them responsible. I believe in building for the future, but the best way to build for the future is to serve our generation according to the will of God.

We are living in a time of unexampled crisis. We are living in a time of unexampled opportunity. The forces of evil are not deferring their operations until the next generation. If the non-Christians of this generation are to hear of Christ it must be through the Christians of this generation. There is an element of immediacy and urgency in the final command of Christ which we are prone to overlook. Let us so plan and work as though we had but one generation in which to plan and work. Let us resolve that, so far as in us lies,

"The work which centuries might have done Shall crowd the hour of setting sun."

The church that allows itself to be nursed in a spirit of ease, that furnishes a first class entertainment in the form of fine preaching, enchanting music, and naught but that which pertains to the success of a local place of worship, without realizing the broader and more comprehensive view of Christ's gospel, may be a very respectable club for men and women, but it is discredited by Jesus Christ and doomed. Woe be to that church that follows in that train! Our success in the church rests, therefore, on our zeal and service for those in the "utmost parts of the earth." The church has come to such an emergency and opportunity that she must give in order to live. She must bend to the influence of Christ's world-wide love or break under the authority of his law.

The missionary propaganda today rests more heavily on the church than ever before in her history, and she stands in pressing need of a tonic to brace her for the emergency of the hour. O that she could see with her Lord's eyes, and feel with her Lord's heart, and rise to the vigor of the conflict that is to take the world for Christ. It may be safely affirmed that the church has never yet met in a commensurate way the challenge of the world and the command of her Lord to use her time, her talent, and her resources for the evangelization of the world. It is the church that is on the imperial march of extending Christ's kingdom in the world that has the promise of his abiding presence. "Go ye—and, Lo, I am with you." What shall be the answer of this conference and the church behind this Conference to the challenge of our Lord. Will we answer back, we hear the call and by the grace of God we pledge ourselves to heed the call and advance the work of a world's redemption?" In the name of the Lord, "Go Forward."

"The restless millions wait
The light whose dawning
Maketh all things new:
Christ also waits,
But men are slow and late.
Have we done what we could?
Have I? Have you?"

The church must go forward in its home mission work. Jerusalem, Judea and Samaria must not be forgotten. God seems to be saying to the church "Intrench yourselves; build forts; garrison them well; a struggle is coming; we must have our places of defense and concentration. There must be a good home base vitally connected up with all our foreign missionary projects. It is obvious that we need much help and strong help in the wide and diversified work of our immense home field.

There are many promising fields in which we have a goodly number of Brethren people that need to be developed. We are lacking in vision, in means and men in order to do the work that opportunity presents to us. It would be a splendid thing if this conference would put its heart and life to the task of solving the country church problem. Either by helping weak churches to become strong or by encouraging them to close and link up with strong city churches. Where communities are overchurched it is folly in this day to keep alive or at least attempt to do so, a small band of Brethren people for the faith's sake. If there are those who feel that the Brethren faith is so vital as to make it impossible to unite with other Christian bodies, they should bestir themselves and "contend earnestly for the faith once and for all delivered unto the saints." We should do something to awaken some of the churches within the conference district or else give them a decent burial and cease claiming and counting points that through years have not been doing anything vital to the Kingdom of God. I should like to see the Home Mission Board get back of every weak and struggling church, where conditions justify such support and endeavor to put such churches already started on their feet. It is not good advertising to the denomination to have even a half dozen churches rotting down, within the conference district. Our Brethren churches should be given to understand that if they want to be counted and helped that they must get busy and prove themselves worthy. Our slogan should be "Every Church a Growing Church." Those that do not grow and do not care should be closed. I believe much could be done if our faith were greater. Many of our churches would be doing more for the kingdom if some of our brethren would stop practicing the faith and go to preaching and living it. If we believe more than others then let us do more than others. Show your faith by what you are willing to do for Jesus Christ.

In the earlier days on the western frontier a home missionary, urged upon his deacons and officials to build a new church, but utterly without avail. Their cry was, "We can't. We can't." Finally he said, "you can if you will; but if you won't, I can and I will." And, with saw and hammer and plane and trowel, he did; and looking down upon a group of trustees from the cupola of the completed building he said, "Brethren didn't I say it could be done?" A similar faith and work would transform many of our churches and result in starting many new points.

If the Church of Christ is to be a conquering church, it must be a united church. Looking only into the face of the present conditions, we see the need of far more union than we have. For the Christian church has a work to do and a battle to fight, and in order to have any sort of success we must stand together. Fifty men labor to move a rock and they go up five men at a time and push, and the great rock does not stir. Then all the fifty push together and the great mass is lifted. That is what united action does. Or the time comes when a man must strike a blow, and he extends four fingers and a thumb against his adversary and strikes with these. What does such a blow accomplish? It hurts the man himself; it does not hurt the other man at all. The only effective blow is that which is struck with the good, hard, concentrated fist. We have been fighting the devil these many, many years, with our foolishly extended hand, in the four-fingers-and-a-thumb fashion, with the Presbyterian finger, and the Baptist finger, and the Lutheran finger, and the Methodist finger and the Brethren thumb. No wonder that we have made so small an impression. We must smite the devil with our doubled fist.

Jesus said, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one for another." In his last high-priestly prayer Jesus prayed, "Holy Father, keep them in thy name which thou hast given me, that they may be one, even as we are one." Unity, then, or at least the spirit of unity, the impulse toward and an effort for unity," as much as in us lieth, is the first note of genuine Christianity. The tendency to division among Christians early showed itself, for it is a natural product of the carnal mind. Paul sternly rebuked the Corinthians for this fault: "Whereas there is among you jealousy and strife, are ye not carnal, and walk after the manner of men? For when one saith, I am of Paul; and another, I am of Apollos; are ye not men? What then is Apollos? and what is Paul? Ministers through whom ye believed; and each as the Lord gave to him." Yet in the face of the apostles' expressed condemnation of such a course we are going on to the present time doing the same thing.

The question before us in this day is How these shameful and harmful divisions in the church may be healed, and how we may return most quickly and most sweetly to the original unity around a common Lord. The mere enunciation of such a proposition ennobles us all. It is like a breath from heaven quickening every holy emotion. May he whom we all adore—the Prince of Peace—guide us in genuine progress toward a happy consummation!

"Get together; 'tis the slogan of the hour,
Get together; greatly multiply your power;
Get together; 'tis the Master's clarion call,
Get together; interlock your hands, your hearts, your all,
Get together; mighty tasks now call for action,
Get together; flagrant faults still need correction,
Get together now, and fight to win the world!"

Finally, shall we here find the exalted faith that ventures all things, that undertakes great tasks, that dares difficulty and danger and sacrifice and death itself? May the hours that we spend here together be surcharged with a firm purpose, vital faith, and radiant hope. And may the great Head of the church, in this hour and hence through the coming days of our conference, be with us, enabling us to live in continual prayerfulness; enabling us to banish, as far as may be, all other considerations but those connected with a vital Christian faith in its working.

Would Live Up To Name

Abol Ghsem Bakhtiar has come all the way from Persia to study medicine at Columbia University. He was educated in an American college in Persia and now wishes to obtain a medical education so he may be of the greatest service to his people. He desires especially to live up to his name for Abol Ghsem, in Persian means "distributing father."

Mr. Bakhtiar is greatly interested in the work of Near East Relief, 1 Madison Avenue, New York. His opinion of America and Americans may be gained from the following statement which he made recently when he visited the offices of Near East Relief.

"Nowhere in the Near East is there anything but gratitude and admiration for the American people. America is peculiarly the one nation that can give relief to these people without mixing politics with charity. The giving of millions of dollars by the American peoples to stricken peoples like the Armenians and Syrians at this time when they are facing starvation, disease and death is bound to be like the proverbial bread cast upon the waters.

"I have seen with my own eyes what you Americans are doing all through Asia Minor and it may be proper for me to say, too, that it is going to be a dreadful calamity if your charities are not continued during this winter. There are 200,000 Armenians in the Caucasus alone whose only hope of existence is the generosity of America and many thousands more are in as destitute circumstances south of Constantinople."

Wonderful thought! that God should desire fellowship with us, and that he whose love once made him the Man of Sorrows may now be made the Man of Joys by the loving devotion of human hearts.—J. Hudson Taylor.

Report of Kentucky Trip

By William A. Gearhart, General Missionary Secretary

Brethren Amos and Ira Fudge, Charles Smith, Ed. Landis, Hugh Brubaker, Rev. C. E. Beekley and myself left here Tuesday morning, December 9th for Riverside Institute to install the electric light plant and returned to our homes Monday night, December 16th.

We arrived safely at 9 P. M. at Riverside, Tuesday night. I never laughed heartier in all my life than I did when going through the mud and up and down rocky, dangerous stairways over the sides of the mountains.

My first impression was that of the great sacrifice which must be made by our mission workers, having to live under the conditions they do, especially those who have been reared under such conditions as you and I have been. No one but he or she who has a very deep seated love for the unfortunate people of this world and especially for Christ, their Master, will ever think of working in our missions in the Kentucky mountains.

The brethren who went to install the plant worked very hard each day and late into the night in order to finish, if possible, by Saturday night, and had it not been that the engine, after running twelve hours, refused to work any longer, we would have finished all the wiring. The two brethren who had charge of it, worked the whole day and part of the night trying to make it run, retiring late Saturday night very much discouraged, but kept sweet all the while. One brother said it may be we can dream what is the matter with it. As I awoke Sunday morning, I thought perhaps it was the poor oil we were using (so much of the oil in that country contains a great deal of water and the water goes to the bottom of the tank, and we were using from the last of the tank) as it looked very much like water, so I suggested that we take oil from the top of another tank, dipping it out rather than pumping it but, it did not seem to produce the desired results. We then took gasoline and mixed it with the oil and worked with the engine awhile and it finally started and never stopped until the batteries were charged.

I did not get to help much, for as soon as we got things started nicely Brother Amos Fudge, Rev. Beekley and myself went to Krypton to investigate conditions there, Brethren Fudge and Beekley lodging over night with Deacon Smith and the writer with Rev. Rempel. Brother Rempel's have had some difficulty in getting the people lined up for services since Brother Cook left, but after much praying and hard work it looks now as if they will accomplish much for the Lord at Krypton. Brother Rempel and his entire family are just the kind of people you cannot help but love and we should pray earnestly for them. They pray much and the Lord is answering their prayers in a remarkable way, and our humble judgment is that after the people become a little more familiar with them and their way of doing work for the Master, the church will prosper wonderfully. It looks encouraging now and we believe the Lord will use them to build up a greater work at Krypton.

Our dear Brother Cook, who preceded them in the Krypton work, is being used wonderfully at Salem, Ohio, and according to statements from some of the most influential members they are working hard and are helping Brother Cook build up a great church at that place. Let us pray for them also.

Leaving Krypton, Brother Rempel went with me to Happy, Kentucky, about 25 to 30 miles from Krypton up in the mountains near the Tennessee line, with the railroad station four miles away, and only one train a day. We arrived there a little after midnight and stayed the next day and night.

Sisters Haddix and Hillegas are happy workers for the Lord in this little town of Happy, Kentucky. The school seems to be pretty well attended and Sister Hillegas is leading them splendidly. Sister Haddix is doing a great work among the people at this place but they need our prayers.

It looks to me as if Happy is a very promising place for mission work. Some very fine people are located there now and foundations for 15 more houses are ready for the superstructure as soon as the railroad is completed up to this point. It is now within a half mile and will soon be completed and a mine will be opened giving employment for the people. Having been up to this time four miles from a railroad station, it is practically virgin soil for missionary endeavor.

Brother Rempel held a short meeting several weeks ago up there and had several excellent confessions.

Leaving Happy before daylight the next morning, we returned—Brother Rempel stopping at Krypton and I going on to Haddix and through the rain to Riverside Institute again, where we spent Sunday attending the Sunday school and preaching services. Your humble servant was asked to do the talking and did the best he could on the subject of "The Cross of Christ."

The workers at Riverside Institute are surely working hard and making great sacrifices to bring the Gospel to the people, which is greatly I am sure. Let us pray much for them and give more liberally to the support of this great work. We shall never forget this trip. It was a great experience for all of us and I know it will be the means of boosting the offerings. It has already done so for one of the brethren, who went with us, handed me $15.00 and said, "Put me down for $5.00 per year." And another brother on the way home said, "Put my wife and myself down for $5.00 each per year." So you see we will soon pay for the expenses of the trip. It is my judgment that it would pay to take influential members to our mountain mission points and let them see the great need, for when people see the need they will give more liberally. When planning for a vacation why not take this trip. You will never regret it. Ask some of the other brethren who make the trip and see what they say about it. I hope they will write articles for the Evangelist. Being away for a week my work has piled up so that I now have 70 or 75 letters on my desk, some of which should have been answered a week ago. I hope patience will be exercised until we get caught up.

I wish you could have seen how Riverside looked with the electric lights turned on, and especially how it lighted up the faces of our dear workers who have had to put up with oil lamps. It surely makes a great improvement and greatly lessens the dangers of fire, which was one of the things the Board considered when contemplating the installation of the plant.

The first cost is pretty heavy and so far we have not had many contributions for this purpose. Will not some of our dear brethren who can afford to give liberally, send us your checks for the amount your Master suggests to help defray the expenses of this plant?

We know many of our members are giving liberally and are giving often for the support of our mission points, and the Giver of the most precious gift will reward them greatly for laying up treasures in heaven.

While we are planning to give presents to our friends, let us not forget that a gift to defray the expenses of this light plant will perhaps be the most appreciated, for it is giving comfort and pleasure not only to our mission workers but also to the students, many of whom may never have seen an electric light.

Let us be as wise as the wise men were who came with their gifts and gave them to the One whose birthday we have just celebrated, and I am sure it will be a blessing too the one who gave as well as for the one who received.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Deity of Jesus Christ

(Address delivered by N. W. Jennings, Los Angeles, California, at the Fillmore, California Conference, October 7, 1919)

This is a big subject for mortal man to try to speak upon. The subject is so deep and mysterious that man feels like stepping back and inviting an angel to come forth and tell us about it; and yet I dare say the man who has experienced the supernatural birth of the soul through the power of the Son of God could come as near explaining the deity of our Lord as an angel, because the angels have experienced no such high birth as the blood washed souls of men.

I believe in the deity of our Lord because of his own eternal claims concerning himself. Listen to him speak, "Before Abraham was, I am." I want you to bear in mind that there never was a time when Jesus Christ did not exist. He was a slain lamb before the foundation of the world (Rev. 13:8). Long before God built his high white throne and stretched the golden curtains over its jasper beauty and trimmed its borders with silver clouds, Jesus was. Before an angel ever harped on his golden harp, yes, long before God tossed the worlds out into space, way back in the dim night of eternity before the dawn of the first day, Jesus was.

The deity of our Lord is the center wheel, the master wheel which contains the fullness of all truth. Jesus is the revelation and the representative of the Godhead, even God. He is God manifest in the flesh. The Holy Ghost, the third person of the Trinity, wrought in the chosen virgin, the body of the Son of God. The Holy Ghost prepared the body of our Lord, that he might be the Godman, the sinless man. Jesus was born not of blood nor of the will of the flesh nor of the will of man but of God. Of course some people will say, Scholarship denies supernatural birth of our Lord. Very well, scholarship has not and cannot save the world; these things are foolishness to the world.

It is impossible to conceive of an absolutely wholly human being in the midst of a sinful humanity on a purely natural basis. The virgin birth is the greatest miracle that ever took place in the physical world. By the virgin birth our Lord is marked off as a unique and divine product, the only begotten Son of God. Let us listen to another one of Jesus' claims, "I am the door." This is a great claim, it is an eternal claim, it was made for time and for eternity. He is the way here into the militant kingdom and he is the way into the eternal kingdom on high. We go in here by him, we will go in yonder by him. We cannot go in by the door of the pope, priest or bishop; Jesus is the only door; the door. Good old Noah must go in through the door into the ark. God shut Noah and his family in with himself and they were safe. The storms may rage and pound against the sides of the ship and lift it toward the skies and threaten to hurl it beneath the swirl and whirl, but God was with him, so will he be with us. The waters cannot break down the tree of life, the fires cannot destroy one twig or leaf, the long winter's frost cannot get at the tender bud, in him we are safe. "I am the vine and ye are the branches." He will care for his own, he will never leave or forsake.

I am so fond of this claim, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me." Jesus stands in the heart of the Bible and in the center of the highway and cries, "I am the way," come this way for life; for I am the source of all life. Come this way for truth, for I am the foundation of all truth. Come this way, I will give you eternal life, I will put eternity in your soul. "I am the light of the world," what a claim. I wish I might be able to erect a monument here as high as heaven and chain up and down the four sides of that monument the electrical light of heaven in these words, "I am the light of the world," and stand that monument in the heart of the world, that all who pass by might see and read, "I am the light of the world."

"I am the bread of life;" would to God that the world would get tired of living on husks and see on the platter bigger than the world, the strong, sweet food of life and lay hold on the life. (John 6:48) "Come unto me all ye that are heavy laden and I will give you rest;" what a challenge; what a promise! What man is this that offers rest to the world filled with sighs, groans, tears and heart aches, to a restless world? The Son of Man; the Godman (Matt. 11:28). "I and my Father are one" (John 10:30). "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9). "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:18). In this claim are infinite thought, infinite intelligence, unlimited wisdom, worlds of undiscovered power and even eternity; these are couched in this claim of his deity.

"I lay down my life that I might take it again; no man taketh it from me but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down and I have power to take it again." No other man ever raised himself from the dead. Yes, God conquered death and the grave. "I am the resurrection and the life." Jesus the incarnate God will open all graves, will raise all the dead (John 2:11). I believe in the deity of Christ because of what his Father said about him.

God most emphatically states, "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." If God was pleased with the incarnation of the Son, who am I that I should not be pleased with our glorious King, Jesus?

Faith in the deity of the Son of God is that which joins man to the throne of God and makes him feel that he is a son of God, an heir of immortality. The hope of civilization, of evangelization, of regeneration and of salvation lies in the deity of God's dear Son Jesus. With faith in the deity of the Son of God, we live; without we perish. "Who is this Christ?" we are asked by many, and when you tell them they will not believe. I was asked not long ago, in one of our western cities, by a man in whose home I was visiting, "Who is this man, Jesus, whom you are talking about?" "And where did he come from?" "And how long has he been here?" he continued. We told him, but he would not believe.

I believe in the deity of our Lord because the prophets and holy apostles declared it. Listen to the prophet Isaiah, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulders and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6). (Other proofs, Isa. 8:13-14, Isa. 6:14, Gen. 3:15, Exod. 3:14, Heb. 1:8). "But unto the Son he saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." Unto the Son he saith, "Thou Lord in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, of thy hands they shall perish but thou shalt endure, yea all of them shall wax old like a garment, as a vesture thou shalt change them and they shall be changed, but thou art the same and thy years shall have no end" (Rev. 4:10). "The four and twenty elders fell down before him that sat on the throne, who liveth for ever and ever." And cast their crowns before the throne saying, "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."

Another proof of his deity, is that he saved while dying. He saved in life; he saved in death. "Today thou shalt be with me in paradise." He was the Savior from the manger to the throne, and thank God, he is still a Savior. I believe in his deity, because of the angel's testimony. "And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a Son and shall call his name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the highest and the Lord shall give into him the throne of David, his father, and he shall reign forever over the house of Jacob and his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:31-32). Once more, his love is a grand proof of his deity. "He so loved the world, that he laid down his life for the world." He tasted death for every man, he died in your stead and mine that we might escape death and hell. Love moved him to come to us when we were helpless and lost. He breathed his first breath in the manger in love. He breathed his last breath on the cross in love. "Father forgive them for they know not what they do." Love brought him into the world, love took him back to the Father and love will bring him back for his church. Love will lift his people to meet him in the air.

Our hope of a glorious resurrection and immortality hinges on the deity of the Son of God. His deity sparkles like the river of life in unchangeableness. I like to think of the immortality of our Christ. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever" (Heb. 13:8). Thank God there is an unchangeable stream of life that flows from the fountain of all life, Jesus. There are three empires of truth, the spiritual, the intellectual and the moral, and their perfection is found alone in the deity of Jesus Christ. Christ Jesus is the Godhead's greatest miracle; great is the mystery of Godliness. He is God manifest in the flesh. He is very God, co-eternal, co-equal in every attribute with God.

He will one day be King of all the earth, King supreme; as he sits in the cabinet counsel, as King of heaven, so will he sit on his royal throne King of the earth, sea and sky. The strong men in the faith of God are those who believe in the supernatural birth of Jesus, our Lord, they also believe that the little babe born of the virgin Mary who grew up into manhood and who rode into Jerusalem, called the heart of the earth, will ride down the shining highway, back to this earth again, where he will be received as the glorious King by his people. I detest the idea advanced by some people, that Jesus was an ordinary man, that the Holy Spirit came upon him at his baptism and left him at the cross. Listen to these words, "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the ending," saith the Lord, "Which is and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." The human family is as changeable as the March wind but we have one changeless man, the Godman, Christ. His love is universal and eternal. All men look alike to him. He is without respect of persons.

Finally, his untiring work of miracles is a proof of his deity. Come on, ye blind and receive sight; come on, ye deaf and hear; come on, ye lame and walk; come on, ye lepers, and be cleansed; come on, ye filled with devils and have them cast out; come on, ye in your funeral march with your dead and have them raised again; roll ye back the stone from the grave and he will call your loved ones up.

Brethren, I believe these truths. The word of God is infallible. "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my word shall not pass away." The Bible is a pure gold mine; by it the streets of gold were paved in heaven. By it the foundation for the jasper wall was laid. By it the gates of pearl were hung on their gold hinges. By it on either side of the river was the tree of life planted. By it the river of life gushed from under the great white throne. Burn every copy of this book and yet it will live; the sun would shine it; the stars would twinkle it; the moon would reflect it. Blot out all these, would it still live? Yes, it is written on gold paved streets, on jasper walls, it sparkles on the river of life, and blossoms on the tree of life. Destroy all these, would it live? Yes, it is planted in the heart of God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost.

GOD IN THREE PERSONS, BLESSED TRINITY.
GLORY TO THE FATHER, GLORY TO THE SON AND GLORY TO THE HOLY GHOST, NOW AND FOR EVER-MORE, WORLD WITHOUT END. AMEN.

"A kind heart is a fountain of gladness, making everything in its vicinity freshen it into smiles."—Irving.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Life of Christian Service

BY MRS. H. H. WOLFORD

(A Devotional Service for Intermediates)

Besides prayer and watchfulness, probably there is no better defense against all kinds of temptations than a life of earnest service to Christ, and of following as best we can the example of him who went about while here on earth, doing all possible for mankind. By so doing we are not only guarding our own lives but helping in promoting the interests of the Kingdom of God. Let us have these references read that we may see how Jesus and the apostles emphasize the importance of service: Matt. 20:1-2; Matt. 20:26-28; John 12:26; Rom. 12:10-13; Phil. 4:10-19.

The Lord has various ways of working in this world. Many things are done by him directly in the course of his providence. Other things are done or have been done through the Son of God and the Holy Spirit. But it seems to be a part of God's plan that many things should be done by us as his personal agents and children. Surely this is a very great privilege for us. Our work is to do errands of love and mercy, in making the world better and brighter where we pass, bringing the spirit of Christ among men. These references tell us how we may serve: Luke 10:1-9; Psalms 103:20, 21; II Cor. 9:6-15; I Thess. 3:12.

Many of the greatest, sweetest, and most wonderful lives ever known to the world have been spent in this way of service to Christ and humanity, whether as prophets, apostles, missionaries, reformers, or as workers in other and less conspicuous places among men. No one is excused because his lot is a humble one, or because he has only one talent to be given to the Lord. What the Master thinks of such service was shown more than once in his ministry. We have an example in this reference: Matt. 19:40-42.

Every age, and especially our own, abounds in opportunities for engaging in this service for Christ. There is no place in city or country, at home or abroad, where there are not calls for service. Hear what Jesus says in this reference: Matt. 9:36-38.

Christian work is not always easy, and often it is very hard, indeed. The difficult places are usually where there is the greatest need of all and where the Spirit of Christ is most a stranger. Whoever enters these needy places, and does the Lord's work, is as truly a hero as any soldier on the field of battle. Every sad heart cheered, every weak one strengthened, every weary one helped along in life's dusty highway, every soul rescued from the power of evil, shall be like so many jewels in our crown, by and by. For, the Master said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me." And if we refuse to help others it is as if we refused to help Jesus. Hear this reference as we have it read: Matt. 25:44-45.

"Do all the good you can, in all the ways you can, to all the souls you can, in every place you can, at all the times you can, as long as ever you can."—John Wesley.

"I expect to pass through life but once.—If therefore, there be any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do to any fellow-being, let me do it now, and not defer or neglect it, as I shall not pass this way again."—Wm. Penn.

"With malice toward none and charity for all, let us go forward and do the right as God gives us to see the right."—A. Lincoln.

PRAYER

O Lord, I thank thee for the great privilege of doing some good in the world, and being of some use to thy kingdom. Make me to be diligent and faithful in every duty and opportunity, that I may have cause to rejoice in the day of Christ, when he comes to reckon with his servants. I ask it all in his blessed name. Amen.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The Boy and the Sunday School. By Mrs. H. L. Good

The three institutions that co-operate in the community for the purpose of the real education of the boy are: the home, the school, and the church. The greatest of these affecting boy life is the home. The home, however, has been greatly weakened because of the vast inroads made upon our normal home life and the boy as a result has been deprived of his normal home heritage. Next comes the school. Perhaps the greatest weakness of our public school system today—with all due respect to its efficiency—is the lack of religious instruction. For the first time in the history of the world has religious instruction been barred from the public school, and that in our free America. So we can readily recognize the fact that the church has a larger mission to fulfill because of these lacks in home and in school if the education of the boy is to be well balanced.

The Sunday school is the biggest force of the church in the life of the boy and if made in the least interesting he will gladly attend it. Education, even religious education, he will w f ifnotinthe is not necessarily a painful process. The germs of spiritual disease give way before the sunshine of the spirit, just as fast, if not faster than the microbes before the sun. The Sunday school then should be a happy, joyous, sunny place, brimful of ideas, suggestions and impulse. To produce these there should be adequate organization, supervision, and common sense leading. The Sunday school should be a kind of religious regiment for its challenge to the adolescent boy.

Let us then study our boy. "The boy is a many-sided animal, with budding tastes, clamorous appetites, primitive likes and dislikes, varied interests; an idealist and a hater of shams, a reservoir of nerve force, a bundle of contradictions, a lover of fun, but a possible lover of the best, a loyal friend of his true friends; impulsive, erratic, impressionable to an alarming degree." Furthermore the boy now is unstable and sometimes suffers from headiness and independence. He is traveling with mighty speed to manhood. His needs increase with his pace and must be fully and timely met. He needs but three things to attain his best: proper sustenance, unlimited activity, and careful guidance—this being adapted to the needs of his spirit-firm and compelling but not irksome. Given these three rightly the quality of his manhood will go beyond our fondest hope.

The Sunday school at its best has but little time to accomplish its aims. Fifty-two sessions a year of an hour's duration, only one-half of which is given to Bible study, furnish a meager opportunity for such great aims. The Sunday school seeks to give the boy impulses that will help to keep him clean, inside and outside, to render Christian service to his fellows in the name and spirit of Christ, and to love and worship God as his Father and Christ as his Savior. As soon as one of these lives knows Jesus as his Savior, it asks the question, "What wilt thou have me to do, Lord?" The quality of Christianity is service. The task of the Sunday school is the raising of the life by information, inspiration, and opportunity to its highest possible attainment. To the acknowledgement of Jesus as Savior and Lord, then, must be added the free voluntary, loving service for others in his name. This is the upbuilding of the spiritual life of the boy. Everything that will minister to the result may be used for this purpose,—organization, leadership, Bible study, through-the-week activity, material equipment, teaching, song, prayer, reproof, inspiration guidance, and all else that may be discovered. Two factors in all are pre-eminent: Christ and the boy, the boy a loving, serving follower of his Lord! This is the endless end.

In the lesson hour itself the lessons should be made to interest the boys, should be introduced and considered from their viewpoint, and should be always taught from the Bible. There is a sacredness in the Bible words and Bible forms which the child easily feels. In the preparation for the lesson let us begin with the lesson material and seek for ourselves the truth that it may contain. Study over it, take time to absorb it and love it. Let us by prayer and thought put ourselves in conscious touch with God for his control of the lesson presentation. Never leave your class without having presented Jesus Christ to it in some form of his beauty.

1. Be in earnest. Boys detect insincerity.
2. Be mentally alert. Check the first sign of inattention with a look, a question, a movement, or a story. The time to get attention is before it is lost.
3. Be varied. Make it impossible for the boys to know "what's coming next." It's easier to keep out of a rut than to get out of one.
4. Be sympathetic. Sympathy is the only element which will cause the boy to meet you more than half way.
5. Be physically active. Not restless but show some physical alertness if no more than real expression in the facial muscles.
6. Be brief. Boys often discover your thought before you have it half expressed. Loss of attention follows unnecessary words.
7. Be ingenious. Take time to work out surprises—a simple experiment, an unusual object, a curious drawing, or a contest.
8. Be clear. Don't teach anything that is hazy in your own mind. Teach by illustration but be sure it does not find a place in the boy's mind at the expense of the truth you wished to leave there.

Questioning is very valuable for the class. Don't become a talking teacher. Ask questions for the purpose of ascertaining knowledge, of arresting attention, of encouraging debate, and of challenging thought.

Now for a few words about the teacher. The teacher is the first object lesson the pupil receives. She or he should make herself or himself as personally attractive as possible. The scholars should never see their teacher other than serene, cheery and radiant with sympathy and love. Never be cross and scold. Children reflect their teacher like a mirror. Scolding does no good anywhere. There are hundreds of other ways to handle disorder without calling attention to it. The mischievous boy may be called up to assist in some work, playing ones on some pretext or another may be separated, the teacher meanwhile not changing at all the tone of her voice and not interrupting the course of the lesson. The ideal teacher disciplines her class of boys, who so resent public correction, without their suspecting her action for a moment.

The successful teacher then of boys—

1. Always sees and plans from the viewpoint of the pupil.
2. Knows personally every member of the class—in the home, school, play, social and religious life. The more a teacher can enter into the fun-loving, companionship craving side of the pupil's heart, the greater his power over the thought life for distinctly spiritual things. It is after the picnic party, or the tramp that the personal message can be spoken.
3. Visits their parents.
4. Is always on hand, unless unavoidably prevented, in which case the president is notified.
5. Has a capable substitute teacher to supply in the event of such absence.
6. Realizes that the function of his office is that of friend and counsellor. The adversary of the boy's soul is alert. If we forget, Satan does not.
7. Follows up an absentee through other members of the class,—a membership committee, by telephone, postcard or letter, or by a personal call.

8. Does not play favorites, nor neglect the less aggressive scholar.

9. Always keeps in mind that the supreme task and privilege of the teacher are to win the boy to Christ for service in his church.

10. Has a definite plan each week for daily Bible reading and prayer.

11. Takes a keen interest in missions trying to stimulate the boys' interest in this line.

In teaching boys let us look only and always to the ideal Teacher—Jesus. His sayings reveal the methods of an ideal teacher. He used illustrations in a remarkably effective way. He was a wonderful story teller. He was a good questioner. He always found a point of contact before advancing a truth. His teachings dealt with essentials. He always brought out of his lessons a definite conclusion. He frequently taught object lessons. He was himself the embodiment of all that he taught. His supreme faith made him an ideal teacher.

There may be many times when our work seems empty and success far away; and we may easily enough wonder whether it is really worth while. May God help us then to hold fast to our faith. There is no room for discouragement on the part of any teacher who has done his best. It will probably happen that some day in the not distant future that teacher will see the ones for whom he worked and prayed and who went out from his care uninfluenced apparently, standing at the altar of the church pledging allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ. Then he will know it was given to him to sow the seed which another has been privileged to reap, and he should be glad in the thought that without his labor of love, the harvest now seen in the life could not have come to its best fruition.

MISSIONS

Home Mission Notes. By G. C. Carpenter

Hurrah For Pittsburg!

The faithful pastor, Brother H. M. Harley writes: "We are just now going over the top with the debt on the Pittsburg church. When we came here there was about $8000 on it, but we kept cutting it down until the first of this year when we still had $2500. We are now cleaning it up and will have several hundred dollars to the good, for which we thank God and take courage. And with it all we are doing better than our apportionment on the matter of Home Missions. And from this time on you will not find the Pittsburg church lagging in any missionary enterprise."

That statement has the right ring. Any church that is lagging should read this and take courage and go over the top with the Home Mission offering which was scheduled for the Thanksgiving time. Every church can and ought to meet the apportionment. Do it yet. The many friends of the Brethren cause at Pittsburg will rejoice with that church and pastor in this victory.

A Worthwhile Gift

This too from Pittsburg: The Sunday school is donating to our Kentucky missions a large Sunday school library. Thanks.

A Modern Joash Chest

The plan adopted by King Joash long ago in Jerusalem for securing church building funds was tried recently in the First Brethren Church at Peru, Indiana, with most satisfactory results. The church treasurer, M. A. Eikenberry, found on Monday morning after "Joash Sunday" just $1000 in the chest, which was the full payment into the Peru church building fund. Philip Schmidt, one of the trustees, made a fine chest and at the proper time in the service the trustees bore the chest to the front of the church and the processional followed in which every member of the Sunday school and church present, from the beginners to the adults, marched to music past the chest depositing there their gifts. The church now has $3500 in cash in the fund for a permanent church building. By a ruling of the state conference the church is required to have forty per cent of the building cost provided for before beginning building operations. The magic chest is being preserved for future use. On request we might loan the chest to other churches desiring to use its magic powers.

In Another Mountain School

The following from the "Soul Winner" describes what takes place in the "Highland" mountain school which is supported by the Presbyterian denomination and where Brother L. A. Hazlett is now the principal: "Almost all the work about the place is done by the students. The large boys feed and care for the horses and mules and cows, cut wood, help plow and plant, cultivate and harvest our crops. You know boys, so you know how they can turn work into play sometimes. One evening recently some of the boys were getting a joy ride in a rather novel way. How? Why by jumping upon the patient cows backs and—you know the rest. The middle sized boys tote water, coal and wood, build fires in the school rooms and do numerous other things. The smaller boys get armfuls of wood. The girls help cook, wash dishes, sweep and dust and iron just as most girls do, and such a merry, willing bunch of girls. Our church is kept so clean and attractive by them and the boys light up for services. All the students are trained in active Christian service, and because God's Word is the best foundation on which any school can build, there is a period each morning in which Bible alone is taught every student in the school by trained Bible teachers, who constantly strive to construct consecrated Christian character, which will shine in every corner and light the way to Christ."

Happy, Kentucky.

Miss Charlotte Hillegas, teacher of the public school at Happy, writes that she has about forty pupils enrolled and that the school is going along nicely. She states also that the people of Happy have pledged sixteen dollars per month toward the support of Sister Elizabeth Haddix, our faithful worker in the Happy work ever since the station was opened. Several conversions also are reported.

The Stereopticon Slides

We are pleased with the increasing demand for the Kentucky Mission stereopticon slides for use in the churches. Write to W. A. Gearhart, Dayton, O., for a date. Then take a liberal offering for the electric light plant which is being installed at the present time by Brother Amos Fudge of Gratis, Ohio, and others. Brother Gearhart has spent some time recently on the Kentucky field that he may become thoroughly familiar with the field.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

We are glad to report that Brother and Sister Sichel are at last with us and we are certainly glad to have them here. The church gave them a nice reception the night of their arrival and we had the pleasure of having present Brethren Atkinson and Bock with their families, and the next evening we observed the Lord's supper. The attendance at this was hindered by rain but the meeting was an inspiration to all.

We also had a visit from Mr. Penzotti, superintendent of the American Bible Society in South America. He preached several splendid sermons for us.

Brother and Sister Sichel have now gone to Cariota where they will visit with Brother Bock's and Brother Sichel will bring the Ford truck which we have purchased of the agent in Cariota because he helps the mission. We are purchasing only the frame and will have the body built here in Rio Cuarto to suit the work. Then Brethren Sichel and Barrio will begin the campaign from town to town.

We have several new families who have professed conversion and hope to have some baptisms soon. We are preparing another temperance medal contest and also a Christmas program. At the request of the students I recently gave a lecture in the college on "Immortality." In spite of a hailstorm shortly before there was a large crowd of students, professors and prominent citizens, such as will go to listen in the college but for social reasons will not come here. I have been requested to follow this lecture with others, the next one being on "Science and the Bible." We thank the Lord for the growing opportunities to make known the Gospel. One of our members who conducts a country school recently gave a program which was attended by several hundred and I received a letter representing the farmers expressing their thanks for the gospel teaching they had learned through Brother Leyan and others who went out from the mission here, Nov. 1, 1919.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ROANN AND CENTER CHAPEL

Many months have elapsed since any reports have been given from these two churches and a still greater number since the writer has reported any church news. During these months we have found much pleasure in reading the reports from the churches of the brotherhood and noticing the progress of the Kingdom.

Our silence does not indicate inactivity. While our work has been hindered in many ways, still there has been enough work to keep all hands busy. The writer is certain that any man who serves two churches like Roann and Center Chapel will find more work than he can do, even though he learns to utilize every minute of his time. One continually finds himself doing the thing which seems the most important at the time. It is a process of selection. As elsewhere the work here was hindered by the influenza and it was further hindered through sickness and death in the writer's home and the consequent forced trip to California.

Center Chapel

This is a flourishing country church. As far as numbers are concerned there were no additions to the church during the year, while several were lost through death. Despite the fact, the church has made progress and it is in a position to branch out with more noticeable results. This church has some fine Christian members as one can find anywhere. It was with reluctance that I left these people, after having received a unanimous call to serve them for another year, but the call came from Roann for full service. This I accepted.

Roann

I completed my first year's work here October the first. As I look back over the year there seems to be very little to report. One was received into the church while four were lost by lotter and several others through death. Here again numbers fail to reveal the true situation for without question the church was stronger at the end of the year than at the beginning. There are the periods of growth and the periods of seed sowing. Last year was a year of seed sowing. God blesses both the seed sowing and the harvest. This year started out with every appearance of a year of harvest and with God's help we will make it such.

Our revival meeting began here October the 19th and continued for two weeks. The preaching was done by the pastor, while the music was in charge of Brother Harry Richer and wife of Peru. I cannot speak too highly of the services rendered by the Richers. They literally sang the message of Christ into the hearts of men, and also it would be hard to find a better personal worker than Harry. It was a great pleasure to work with these two people. Then too the people worked very hard for the success of the meeting. The great success of the meeting was possible only because the people united their efforts and their prayers for the salvation of souls. I never saw people work harder or pray more earnestly for the salvation of souls. God blessed our efforts and poured out his spirit upon us. Our worst problem was the lack of room. Many times the house was crowded long before the hour for services. On one night people were turned away an hour before the services were to commence and that same night one hundred and fifty people were counted standing, or sitting on the railing of the altar.

The visible results of the meetings were twenty-one confessions. Sixteen of this number have been baptized and the rest have expressed their intention of uniting with us. This is a great victory for the Roann church. Unto God we give the praise for he has blessed us.

We are planning greater things here but we will write of them when they are accomplished facts. This church has a great future if she will live up to her opportunities and I am sure she will. I thank God for these Christian people and their spirit of co-operation. May God continue to bless our work together.

WILLIS E. RONK.

KITTANNING PENNSYLVANIA CIRCUIT

A "cut" of the Brethren church in Kittanning, Pennsylvania, in the Evangelist recently reminded me of an unfulfilled promise. I had planned to write an article for the Evangelist to appear with said "cut." I failed to do so and come now at this late date not to be heard from, but to assist in keeping our worthy missions before our people. I must begin somewhere, so like some preachers of old I begin with "Genesis" and with a few Revelations I will then close.

I received a call to go to this field in June, 1914, near the time of the "Hun" invasion of Belgium. I have been interested in this field ever since I have been in the ministry. A stone's throw from where the Centerhill church now stands, (now Kittanning), I preached my first sermon and some of the members still reside there who can well recollect "the big effort to do a little." Well, after many years had passed by a new building had been erected and it too needed repairing badly. Only a few members lived near the church any more, in fact only two. The rest were scattered over a considerable territory. After an exhaustive period of footwork, I found that the members with the exception of those two mentioned resided as near Kittanning as to the Center hill church." A former pastor had carried off the church record and lost it. In my estimation the congregation had been better off to have lost the preacher than the records. I then planned to take out of the old building what material was good and weave it into a new one. I did not have one single male member that was interested enough in the movement to counsel with. Ezekiel had no more discouraging proposition, I think, as he had some to mix mortar and hold the torch light. I had neither.

I had built and remodeled thirteen churches prior to this, and I determined to get past the "unlucky number."

I finally succeeded in purchasing a splendid lot in as good a location as could be secured, in what is known as West Kittanning.

The Allegheny river divides the town. Kittanning is the capital of the county of Armstrong. I would not leave the impression that we had no members who were interested in the future of the church, for we had some who lived too remote from the place who would have assisted if they had lived near enough to have done so; others were busy with their occupations and some thought it not worth the while to make any more effort as the past failures had discouraged them. There being no church on the west side and it being the new part of town and the river and Railroad tracks to cross, it looked as good to me as any possible field in the state. Much better field so far as possibilities of future achievements and success are concerned than did Altoona or Conemaugh and more of our now strong churches looked when I knew them begging for an existence. Finally the lot was not only purchased but actually paid for, largely through help from residents of the town and a little from our own people who decided to help even though the effort would be a failure. Next on the program was to get the building up. And as the work progressed the interest increased and Brush Valley and Mosgrove brethren came down in a body and gave valuable assistance. The masons and carpenters of the town gave us help and some from Blanco. Finally the building was dedicated not quite free from debt but there remains about $700 to be paid and some $300 of that amount is pledged so our debt there could be canceled in at most two years if the interest is kept up at that point. Our members there with little exception are very much interested now and fully realize that the church is there to stay. Then, too, we have had some valuable additions to the work since we started. Some have moved in and while Brush Valley was the loser, Kittanning was the gainer. The Bible school there is as live a one as you can find in that district. It is union, made necessary in order to get the people of town to take hold of the work when no help of our own was available. I started it a union school with the understanding that the superintendent was to be a member of the Brethren church and that while I remained and peace and harmony reigned it should remain so. I am sure at present a good Brethren school could be maintained. And I believe that this change is now necessary and will be one of the good things that will arise out of my resignation, and would so advise as to the future program of the board. This will give our folks the much needed grip on the situation, as my successor is not under any obligation to carry out my plans made necessary as before stated by circumstances.

I want to say for our new faithful ones there, that no better can, or would want to be found, and the people of West Kittanning regardless of denomination stood by me to the last and when they gave us our final reception, (the same was given at the church our last night there, when I was to meet the financial board) after supper was served, with tears in their eyes they repeatedly thanked me for the good work I had done for their town.

I hope by this time that a pastor has been secured as supplying that points means sure death to the work if persisted in. I felt that the time had come that a change would be for the best and I am sure that a new man on the work would increase the interest.

I must put in a few words for the other points on this work. Brush Valley has made more progress along many lines in the last five years than she has made in the 20 years prior; this may not look good in print but it is true nevertheless. They almost needed a search warrant to find the building. One sister accused me of spoiling their berry patch, and even the cemetery had been shamefully neglected but a new fence has been put up under the leadership of Brother E. French and the members in general turned out the first year I was on the work, cleaned up the church grounds and put street lamps up and beautified the interior in many respects.

The old building must soon be replaced with a new one and a nice sum is now deposited in the bank for that very purpose.

They increased the pastor's salary 25 percent each year for the last two years. The Sunday school has increased from a mere name to front rank under the leadership of the leaders in their several departments.

Brush Valley promises to be the greatest "rural church" in the brotherhood, she has the lead by a good margin and no reason why she should not keep going. Mosgrove is a mission point lying between Kittanning and Brush Valley merging into Kittanning on the south and Brush Valley on the north. At this point we have a strong substantial membership. My work at that point was greatly appreciated. I preached in the school house every two weeks in the afternoon. This caused me to preach Saturday night and three times on every alternate Sunday. A young man at that point was installed as deacon for the Brush Valley church at our last services at Brush Valley.

I did the work on this entire charge last year and taught a term in the school at Tarrtown. So by this you will see I was kept busy. I visited 57 homes that had the "flu" in connection with other pastoral duties. I was sorry to leave all these good people but as I stated before I thought it was best for them to do so.

I never was, nor ever expect to be treated better than by the people of this entire Armstrong county circuit.

BURLINGTON AND DARWIN BRETHREN CHURCHES

We have been endeavoring upon these fields to develop and carry out the suggested program as outlined in our Four Year Program, which has been meeting with proper co-operation from our constituency.

Darwin

Following our National Conference we began a series of meetings at Darwin which continued for three weeks and closed on the Sunday evening preceding our state conference at Goshen on October the sixth. While the attendance was not large yet it was regular and mostly consisted of the membership. The interest of the various auxiliaries was greatly increased and the Sunday school was benefited, and many things point toward the meetings being a success in benefiting the local church, yet the numerical strength was not increased at present. But there is prospect that there are some who will as soon as convinced be with us. Many things have caused distrust and confidence has to be once more established, which takes time, patience and prayer.

Saturday evening, October 11, we enjoyed our fall communion, while the day was very rainy and the night came on looking unfavorable for such a gathering, yet, a great blessing was enjoyed, for the membership alone met and it was like a large family in a memorial service in which we were made to realize that God's loving Spirit was with us.

The church is planning for an all days' meeting in our business meeting in January in which we are sure the reports for the year will be encouraging to induce the brethren to "GO FORWARD."

Burlington

We began our series of meetings on the second Sunday in October and God blessed us in many ways, even though the days were rainy and the spirit of carelessness seemed to prevail. (In all my ministry I have never seen churches asleep as I now have been able to see them. If we ever had a real need of a spiritual awakening, it ought to be now. Too many seem to believe God is a pension agent, rather than a "rewarder of diligence.") Although, a goodly number of our brethren were faithful to the end, many more should have been, but the folks away from God and his love are reading this carelessness in his professed followers and themselves—become indifferent. We praise the Lord for the three by baptism, and we will be able in the near future to report others, the work as a whole, was benefited and many are the signs of better things in the ways awaiting us.

Sunday, November 2, we had an all day's meeting; it was a great day. The Sunday school gave a good account of itself and we will try and present its likeness at some future date on the front page of the Evangelist. Brother W. E. Thomas and a goodly number of his brethren from Flora were with us and Brother Thomas gave a great message on the "Second Coming of our Lord and Savior," in the afternoon. It was a great service, and a number from our Darwin church were with us in some of the service during the day and it shows that our brethren in Carroll county are getting the spirit of "get-together," and may the Lord continue to so bless.

We observed our fall communion on November 9, in which a number were with us from Flora and Darwin, and Brother Thomas was with us, and the Lord blessed us in many ways and before we assembled we met in the auditorium and Brother Thomas presented the call from the Flora church for the ordination of our Brother Sylvester Whetstone to the office of Elder. This was a blessed service concerning which Brother Thomas will report. The Lord is certainly blessing the Flora church by the number of Flora brethren who are accepting the call to definite service as messengers to carry the GOOD NEWS.

Pray for us as we labor at Burlington and Darwin, as we assume under God the work of a ministering servant.

GLEANINGS FROM COMPTON AVENUE, LOS ANGELES

During October we held our annual Home Coming and Rally Day combined, which proved to be a great success far above our expectations. You know our heavenly Father sends blessings above our asking; this was proven to us on that day of Christian fellowship. Many of our members who have moved out of our midst look forward eagerly to this annual Home Coming Day when they are able to be with us for a day of worship. It is one Sunday in the year that all our members try to be with us and we are like one big family in Christ together. A bountiful repast was spread in our social hall at the rear of our church. Although we did not quite reach our goal of two hundred and seventy-five present in Sabbath school, the deficiency was more than made up in our spiritual blessings, and our finances for the day. At our pastors' invitation in the Sunday school a boy of tender years came to the altar followed in the evening by another boy and his mother, in response to the evening invitation. We find in this instance the bearing out of the scripture, "A little child shall lead them."

Sunday evening, November 9, we had with us George Barsom, a native Babylonian of Constantinople, who was converted from the Mohammedan faith to the Christian religion. He related how through letters written by him after his conversion in America, his entire family of five brothers, four sisters, mother and father were brought to know the true God and consequently massacred by the Turks for their profession. At the close of this very impressive service, three more took their stand for Christ.

We feel we are blessed of the Lord.

KENNETH MONROE.

McKEE

The work at McKee is moving along most splendidly. The church is working harmoniously and every one encouraged to keep at work. The Sunday school has reached the standard of requirement and is doing excellent work. The Christian Endeavor society is now busy and doing very well. The preaching services are well attended. The protracted meeting is a thing of the past. Brother Ed. Miller did the preaching. "Brother Ed." is a powerful preacher. He knows what to say and how to say it. There were ten confessions, eight of which have been received into the church. The others may come later. Then Brother Harry DeLozier of Plowing Spring brought three to McKee for confirmation, whom he had baptized, making eleven additions in all.

They were all confirmed into the church just before the Love Feast. This was the largest Love Feast in the history of the church. The goal was more than reached.

The McKee church and pastor thank the Uniontown church for so unselfishly giving Brother Miller a leave of absence to help us. I am sure we all feel that they have a part in the great victory won; for it is really a great victory. The church was made to feel as never before her duty and is working with renewed energy.

The McKee church is growing in numbers and spiritual power for which we praise the Lord. The McKee church is composed of a great band of workers. "They are on the job."

MARTINSBURG

This church is still on the map and at work possibly as never before. The Sunday school is doing excellent work and has reached the Standard of Excellence. The Christian Endeavor society continues with unusual energy. The Woman's Missionary Society never yields to discouragement and continues to do good work. The preaching services are well attended and much interest shown in the Lord's work.

The revival is over. Brother H. M. Harley of Pittsburgh did the preaching. He also knows what to say and how to say it. He delivered powerful messages to large audiences. The special messages to the women and girls was well received, the house was well filled and all eager to hear the message.

Then the one to the men and boys was a masterpiece and was eagerly heard by a large audience.

The church has been most wonderfully strengthened and built up. The visible results are seven and previously one added by letter, making eight since the last report. The field here is small but made larger by the revival effort.

Of course we feel as church and pastor to thank the Pittsburgh church for giving Brother Harley a leave of absence to help us in the revival. His work is much appreciated. We are sure the Pittsburgh church will rejoice with us in the great victory won, and feel that they too have a part in it.

The Love Feast was the best attended in the history of the church. The goal was easily reached.

The church here is making commendable progress—steadily growing in numbers and becoming more spiritual. We have a well attended prayer meeting.

Both McKee and Martinsburg have called the present pastor for another year, it being the fifth year. These churches have been good to us beyond our deserving. Both pastor and the churches have worked in harmony and there is a close relation between church and pastor and this must be if the work succeeds.

We feel especially grateful that it was made possible for both Brother Miller and Brother Harley to work with us in our revival efforts. They are surely young men of rare ability and full of Godly purpose to do unselfishly the Masters' work. We believe as long as the Brethren church can be served by men like these, she has a great future. May the Lord raise up an army of such earnest, tactful and Godly young men to spread the glad tidings of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

PENNSYLVANIA CONFERENCE MINUTES

"The Victory May Depend on You" was sung.

Elder Martin Shively read an excellent paper on the subject, "Financing the Kingdom." This paper will appear in the Evangelist.

Elder E. M. Cobb delivered a most helpful address on "The Supreme Business of the Church." This address showed the supreme business of the church to be that of ambassadorship in reconciling men to God through Jesus Christ. That work can be accomplished only through loyalty to God's Word and to his plan of service and of giving God the tithing plan to man and has never failed to keep his promises with those who follow that plan. In fulfilling the supreme mission of the church there must be no compromise with the world. Keep the world out of the church if you would win men to Christ.

Dr. J. Allen Miller, Dean of the Theological Seminary, addressed conference on "The First and Greatest Need of the Church." In a most convincing manner, Dr. Miller showed the greatest need of the church to be that of efficient leadership. We may not aspire to a position of greatest numbers among the denominations. As Brethren we are protestants of the Protestants. This may preclude the hope of numerical greatness as a denomination. But we may aspire to a great and efficient body of trained preachers. Jesus trained leaders. He took men alive on the shores of Galilee and trained them for the work of preaching his gospel. This is the day of efficiency. This is the day of specialists. Training is essential. The failure of many is accounted for in the fact that they discontinue their active conscientious study of their work. This need of trained leadership is evident among the laity as well as among the ministry. The lack of business principles in conducting the affairs of the church often ruins opportunities for soul winning. The church of Christ is never a begging institution. We need an efficient trained leadership among the laymen of our church that will show the church to be a high grade business institution. All of this can be accomplished only by a campaign that will include (1) recruiting, not of a few from the many, but the placing of all of our membership in the position of most effective service for them, (2) education of our recruits under that influence that will most thoroughly fit them for the work, (3) the adequate equipment and endowment of our one educational institution for the training of that leadership.

Business Session, Thursday, 10:30 A. M.

The Moderator took the chair for the business session at 10:30 A. M.

Brother Platt presented the report of the Credential committee showing 46 ministerial and 44 lay credentials presented and approved. The committee reported that Elders Geo. H. Jones, I. B. Trout, and J. H. Burnworth had not furnished credentials from the district in which they resided before coming into the Pennsylvania district. The chair ruled that following the precedent of former conferences the seal of conference be placed upon the credentials of these brethren after they have furnished credentials from the district from which they came.

The minutes of the sessions of Tuesday and Wednesday were read, corrected and approved as corrected.

A motion prevailed extending the courtesies of the conference to the visiting brethren Dr. J. Allen Miller, Dean of the Theological Seminary, Ashland, O., Elder E. M. Cobb, pastor of Dayton, Ohio, Elder Geo. S. Baer, Editor Brethren Evangelist, Ashland, Ohio, and Elder C. A. Bame, pastor Brethren church of North Manchester, Indiana.

The Committee to Nominate Christian Endeavor officers for the Pennsylvania district reported the following nominees, who were elected without opposition.

President, Miss Eleanor Wilcox, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Vice-president, Mr. Karl Gross, Altoona, Pennsylvania.

Secretary, Miss Nora Bracken, Ashland, O.

The Committee to Nominate Sunday school officers reported the following nominees who were elected without opposition:

President Albert Trent, Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

Vice-president, Albert Kratzer, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

Secretary, H. M. Harley, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Superintendent Children's Division, Miss Grover Snyder, Conemaugh, Pennsylvania.

Young Peoples' Division, Geo. H. Jones, Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

Adult Division, Martin Shively, Masontown, Pennsylvania.

Teacher Training, W. C. Benshoff, Altoona, Pennsylvania.

Home Department, Bertha E. Hollinger, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

Temperance, Mrs. M. C. Myers, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Missions, M. A. Witter, Waynesboro, Pennsylvania.

The chair named the following brethren to serve as a Committee to Nominate District Goal Directors: A. L. DeLozier, H. G. Cassel, and Martin Shively.

Brother H. F. E. O'Neill was re-elected secretary of the Board of Benevolences for Pennsylvania.

Brother Wm. Kolb, Jr., was nominated by conference to succeed himself as trustees of Ashland College from this district, and Brother Norman Statler was nominated as alternate for that position.

The report of the statistician was called for. Statistician M. A. Witter stated that only 63 percent of the churches of the district have furnished reports and that the report that could be given at this time would be worse than useless for publication.

A motion prevailed that the statistician be instructed to make an effort to complete the report before publication.

A motion prevailed that after this year the conference seal be withheld from the credentials of ministerial delegates from churches failing to furnish statistical reports and that lay credentials be refused from churches failing to make statistical reports.

A motion that the chair appoint a committee to revise the list of churches of this district was carried. Brethren W. C. Benshoff, Albert Trent and Martin Shively were appointed as the members of this committee.

It was moved and carried that a committee of three be appointed to bring recommendations concerning conference credentials and representation. The following brethren were named, E. D. Burnworth, A. L. DeLozier, and George H. Jones.

Elder Martin Shively was asked to present the work of the Evangelist and Bible Study League. Elder Chas. A. Bame was also asked to speak of the League and its work. Both of these brethren responded with earnest words of commendation for the work of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League and called special attention to the need it is designed to meet.

The session was closed by prayer by Elder C. A. Bame.

Inspirational Session, Thursday, 2:00 P. M.

The session opened with Vice-Moderator H. M. Harley in the chair. "I Love to Tell the Story" and "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart" were sung.

Devotional services were conducted by Elder Morton L. Sands who read 2 Timothy 1:1-11 with comment and led in prayer.

Elder I. B. Trout brought a stirring message on the subject "How to Make the Brethren Church Have a Desirable Future." The address will be published in the Evangelist.

A male trio, "God Be Merciful," sung by Prof. L. B. Furry, Geo. Hunter, and M. B. Bole, was highly appreciated by the conference.

At this time the Moderator introduced Editor George S. Baer of the Brethren Evangelist who addressed the conference on "Serving the Church with the Pen." This was a splendid message and should be given to the church through the Evangelist.

A duet "Lead Kindly Light" was beautifully rendered by Miss Gertrude Lake and Prof. L. B. Furry.

Business Session, Thursday, 2:15 P. M.

The Credential committee made its final report showing 48 ministerial, 46 lay credentials and 53 Sunday school credentials presented and approved. The report was adopted.

The Committee to Nominate Goal Directors reported the names of the present directors who were re-elected. The names follow:

District Director of Four Year Program, W. C. Benshoff, Spiritual Advancement, M. A. Witter.

Church Extension, District Mission Board.

Recruiting and Endowment, Edward Byers.

Financial Methods, E. L. Miller.

Extension of Publications, W. C. Benshoff.

Foreign Missionary Extension, A. L. DeLozier.

Benevolences and Statistics, H. F. E. O'Neill.

Sunday School Promotion, District Sunday School officers.

Woman's Missionary Society Promotion, District officers.

Y. P. S. C. E. Promotion, District officers.

Conference Promotion, Moderator.

The election of a member of the Executive Committee from the Sunday schools resulted in the choice of Harvey B. Landis, Pittsburgh, Pa.

The Committee on Conference Credentials and Representation reported as follows: That delegates representing the local congregations and their auxiliary organizations, duly elected and authorized, be accepted thereby as members of this District Conference with equal rights and privileges, representation for the congregation being one delegate for each fifty members or fraction thereof and for all auxiliaries one delegate for each twenty-five members or fraction thereof; the delegate fee to remain unchanged.

Committee,—A. L. DeLozier, George H. Jones, E. D. Burnworth.

The report was adopted.

The Secretary of Conference was instructed by Conference to prepare card certificates to be furnished to ministers whose credentials are approved by our next conference.

Elder H. M. Harley in behalf of the Pittsburgh Brethren Church invited the conference to meet in the Pittsburgh church for the conference of 1920. The invitation was accepted and the Brethren church of Pittsburgh was appointed as the meeting place for the conference of 1920.

A motion was carried that conference pay one half the expenses of Ashland College Trustee Wm. Kolb, Jr., in attending the trustee meeting at Ashland in 1918 and in 1919.

It was moved that the present officers of conference constitute a committee to devise a plan for financing the conference budget for next year. The motion was carried.

A motion to pay the expenses of Dean J. Allen Miller and Editor George S. Baer in attending this conference was carried.

A motion prevailed approving the action of the Ministerial Examining Committee in authorizing the ordination of Forest E. Byers, Johnstown, Pa., and W. A. Walters, McKee, Pa.

Election of conference officers was the next item of business.

Elders H. M. Harley, W. C. Benshoff, and I. B. Trout were placed in nomination for the office of Moderator. Elder H. M. Harley was elected. Elder W. C. Benshoff was elected Vice-moderator without opposition. Elder M. A. Witter was elected Secretary and Statistician without opposition. Elder Elmer E. Fehnd was elected Treasurer without opposition.

The following report of the Committee of Resolutions was adopted:

1. That we thank our heavenly Father for this conference and for the presence of his Spirit and peace.

2. That we extend our thanks to the First Brethren church of Johnstown for the splendid manner in which they have entertained us.

3. That we commend the Woman's Missionary Society for the excellent meals served.

4. That we thank the church and all others for the hospitality of their homes.

5. That we appreciate to the fullest the excellent music rendered by the church choir, the male quartet, the trio, and others.

6. That we thank the Executive Committee for the program which made possible such an interesting and instructive conference.

7. That we express our gratitude to all who filled the regular places on the program and especially to our Brethren Miller, Baer, Cobb, Bame and others from other districts who were present and lent help and enthusiasm to the conference.

8. That this Conference appreciates the earnest efforts of the heads of the various departments of the church work in our district since our last Conference.

9. That we commend the churches of Pennsylvania for the noble manner in which they helped to build up the College Endowment and that we urge them to send their sons and daughters to Ashland College.

10. That we recognize the marked improvement in the Brethren Evangelist and other church literature and we heartily endorse the budget system of placing the Evangelist in every Brethren home.

11. That we urge the pastors and their co-workers to push the Four Year Program to a final success before the close of this "Victory year."

12. That we earnestly appeal to our pastors and churches to increase their spiritual and financial support of the District Mission Board in its efforts to extend the church.

13. That we heartily thank the Moderator for the courteous and impartial manner in which he has presided over the sessions of the Conference.

I. B. Trout

Committee on Resolutions—Wm. H. Menger
Norman Statler

The work of the Interchurch World Movement was very briefly but earnestly presented by Dr. J. Allen Miller who gave conference a glimpse of this most stupendous movement in the church in modern times.

A motion prevailed that a committee of three be appointed to co-operate in the Interchurch World Movement. Brethren J. E. Watson, H. M. Harley, and W. C. Benschoff were appointed as the members of this committee.

The following officers of the Woman's Missionary Society for this district were elected by the representatives of the societies present. President, Mrs. J. F. Watson; Vice-president, Mrs. Wm. Kolb; Secretary, Mrs. H. M. Harley; Delegate to Mission School, Mrs. W. C. Benschoff.

The Executive Committee for the conference year will be constituted as follows:

Elder H. M. Harley, pastor of entertaining church and District Sunday School Secretary.

Miss Nora Bracken, District Secretary of Christian Endeavor.

Mrs. H. M. Harley, District Secretary Woman's Missionary Society.

Mr. Harvey B. Landis, representing the district Sunday schools.

Elder I. B. Trout elected by Conference.

Elder E. D. Burnworth elected by Conference.

As delegates to National Conference from the Pennsylvania district, Norman Statler and Ira C. Wilcox were named.

The session was closed by singing the Doxology and prayer by Brother H. C. Cassel.

Closing Business Session, Thursday 7:00 P. M.

Singing "My Faith Looks Up to Thee" opened the session.

Devotions were conducted by Elder M. L. Sands, reading John 1:1-14 and leading in prayer.

Treasurer Elmer E. Fehnel made the following report which was accepted.

E. E. FEHNEL, Treasurer.

The minutes of Conference were read and approved, closing the business of the conference program.

Closing Inspirational Session, Thursday, 7:20 P. M.

A Male Quartet sang most beautifully "Blue Galilee."

"The Jesus In Whom I Believe" was the subject of a splendid address by Elder L. G. Smith. This address will be published in the Evangelist.

In response to numerous requests the choir sang "O Light Eternal."

The Moderator introduced Elder J. M. Tombaugh of Hagerstown, Maryland, who made announcements concerning a meeting of the ministers of the district, also concerning a meeting Friday morning of members of the Church of the Brethren and the Brethren church.

The evening offering, amounting to $24.18, was received at this time, Elder E. D. Burnworth returning thanks for the offering.

The Male Quartet sang "He Died of a Broken Heart," to the inspiration of all present.

The Moderator spoke of the sacred associations of the place in which we are met and called on Elder E. D. Burnworth to introduce the speaker of the evening. Elder George W. Flora, pastor of the Covington, Ohio, Church of the Brethren and successful evangelist.

Evangelist Flora preached the closing sermon of Conference, his subject being, "The Church of Our Day." This was a stirring and uplifting message with a strong appeal to faith in God and in man and to an unselfish forsaking of our littleness and a manifestation of true Christian unity and brotherly love.

This closing session of the Conference was closed by Dr. J. Allen Miller leading the Conference in praying the "Our Father."

Business Manager's Corner

FIRST THINGS FIRST

Just at this season of the year the first thing with us is the Evangelist subscription list. While there are several thousand subscriptions that will expire in the next few weeks it is only natural that we should be deeply concerned about their renewal. And since we have persuaded a goodly number of the churches to adopt the budget system for placing the Evangelist into all the homes of their congregations it is important that we keep all such on our Honor Roll, and we are glad to announce that two of our churches that have been on the Honor Roll for the past year have renewed their lists and will hold their places for another year. These churches are Tiosa, Indiana and Fostoria, Ohio. Brother C. C. Grisso is now pastor at Tiosa, and the Fostoria church has been without a place of meeting for quite awhile, but the members who are interested in building up a Brethren church in Fostoria know that there are few agencies that will hold a congregation together better than a weekly visit of the church paper while they are denied the privilege of having even a Sunday school for awhile. But we are glad to report that the prospects seem very good at this time for the Fostoria brethren being able to buy an unused church building so that they will finally have a place for their services. Furthermore we are "gladder" yet, if it is possible, that in addition to the two churches that have retained their places on the Honor Roll three more congregations won this distinction for the first time last week. Three new churches on the Honor Roll in one week is "going some" isn't it? And these are mighty good churches too. The lists from Hagerstown, Maryland and Gratis, Ohio were received on the same day. Brother A. B. Cover is pastor at Hagerstown and Brother C. E. Beekley is pastor at Gratis, though these lists were sent in by the church agents, Mrs. A. Roy Philip at Hagerstown and N. G. Kimmel at Gratis. These are surely splendid lists and we thank and congratulate both churches for their achievements. Then another church that has won a place on the Honor Roll is Roanoke, Indiana, with W. F. Johnson as pastor. Brother Johnson has had his home church at Berne, Indiana on the Honor Roll for the past two years and he knows what he is doing when he sets out to get other churches on the Roll. Roanoke has won the distinction of making the largest percentage of increase in the subscription list of any church that has yet won a place on the Honor Roll. The gain of Roanoke was TWO THOUSAND percent. This is a most remarkable increase, and while it indicates that this feature of the work of the church has been sadly neglected in the past it shows a remarkable awakening, and there are a number of other churches that need this awakening as well. If a few more of our churches would receive the same inspiration it would not be long until our subscription list would reach the SIX THOUSAND MARK.

We are writing these notes in our library at home, late at night and we do not have our office records at hand, but we remember now that there are two more churches that need honorable mention for again renewing their budget list for the Evangelist. These churches are Long Beach, California, and Nappanee, Indiana. This is the third year for both of these churches and it is a strong testimony to the fact that "the plan works." Of course everybody knows that L. S. Bauman is still the busy pastor at Long Beach, but some may not know that E. L. Miller is the new pastor at Nappanee. Brother Miller will find his work at Nappanee made much easier because of these weekly visits of the Evangelist to the homes of his membership.

We hope to be able to report churches continuing to remain on the Honor Roll or new churches winning such a place every week for some time.

A Last Word

We have been handicapped ever since moving into our new quarters by our inability to secure electric motors to operate our presses and machinery. So far we have been able to use only two of our four presses which very naturally throws us back in our work, but the motor for our big Optimus press was set last Saturday and in a day or so we hope to have this press in operation and then we trust we shall be able to catch up with our work in a few more weeks. However we began mailing Sunday school quarterlies last Thursday, the seventeenth, and we expect to continue sending them out just as rapidly as we can complete them, though some of them may be a trifle late. We are not offering this as an apology, but only an explanation, and we trust that our customers will understand and will be patient and give us an opportunity to get our bearings and to get everything in running order in our new location. Then we hope to be able to serve the church better than the Brethren Publishing Company has ever been able to do before.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

COLLEGE ENDOWMENT

CAMPAIGN NOTES

From Louisville I went to Middlebranch. It is natural to speak of these two points together because they were together on the same circuit for many years. Brother Perry Horlacker now in college at Ashland is the pastor of this congregation. Brother Horlacker had not been in charge of the work very long previous to our canvass there for endowment, hence his cooperation with me in the interest of the college gave him fine opportunity to get into the homes of his people. The pastor seems to enjoy the implicit confidence of his people and I feel sure good work will be accomplished under his leadership. I can only speak in terms of praise of the fine part Brother Horlacker contributed in our work here.

Middlebranch like many other Ohio churches is fully acquainted with Ashland College. There are those among her members who have given loyal help to the school in the days gone by. And during most of the years of her history she has had Ashland College men as her pastors. Consequently when I got to Middlebranch I found not a few folks who were both keenly interested in the campaign and also ready to give of their means to help the cause along.

The result in this church was $1530. All things considered I pronounce this very good. To be sure, I might say of Middlebranch as I could say of practically every church where I go, viz, if some had given who gave nothing, and if others had given more nearly according to their ability the showing would have been still better. But I repeat, that would be true of almost every point where I have been and I still pronounce Middlebranch results good.

We had in this canvass one $300 gift; three $200 gifts; the Sunday school went $250; and the remainder was in sums differing size. Some of those gifts represent the totals from several individuals in a family but I speak of them in lump sums. I feel that special mention is due the Middlebranch Sunday school for the fine part it has taken in the cause of endowment. I will say here what I have said repeatedly in the campaign, viz, that the biggest feature about our Sunday schools helping in this is of a psychological nature. The surest way to have our young people think of Ashland College tomorrow is to have them think of Ashland College today while they are boys and girls. Hence the value of lining up our Sunday schools to Ashland College. Thanks to the Middlebranch Sunday school for the fine example it has set to the remainder of Ohio Sunday schools. I hope the example may be heeded all along the line.

In former years there attended college at Ashland from this congregation Paul Hugo Wise and Mrs. Loretta DeWick (who was then Miss Wise). It was my pleasure too to be entertained in the home of Paul Hugo's parents, also in the home of Mrs. DeWick and her mother. The hospitable home of Brother Newton Roush and his good wife was our headquarters. But we also received kindnesses in the Correll home, also the Phillips, the Hang, and the Heiser families. I am very thankful to all of these good friends for their kind hospitality to the "stranger within their gate."

Brother E. S. Correll placed his automobile at our disposal one day and it was a mighty big help and I felt exceedingly grateful to him. During our stay here I assisted Brother Horlacker in a communion service but unfortunately bad weather hurt the attendance quite seriously. I preached to very good audiences at this place.

The mercury now stands at $132,500. I am glad to see what Ohio is doing. If there are no holdups because of bad weather it will not be long until Ohio will have spoken her piece in this matter. In the meantime don't fool yourself on Ohio.

W. H. BEACHLER,
Campaign Secretary.

A WATCH-NIGHT PRAYER

(Will be heard at watch-night services in every land where Christ is worshipped.)

Almighty God, Father of all mankind, at the end of a year in which malice has so often thwarted love, we join the prayers of all thy children around the world for peace, the elevation of justice and of brotherhood.

Thou Creator, possessor of all things, who didst make the earth for the races of men and didst set bounds for their habitation, forgive us our greed as we repent of our sin, and restore to all hearts the recognition of the transcendent right of human life to live.

Open our eyes, we beseech thee, to the dignity of labor, the sacredness of human service, and the privileges of production, that nation may join nation and man may join man justly in honest work to replenish a devastated earth.

Quicken the sympathy of hearts made dull by reports and sights of suffering, incomprehensible and needless.

Call us again that we may bow before the eternal laws of creation, putting aside malice, envy, covetousness and brutality, to enter into the peace of the sons of the Most High.

Hasten by thy gracious providence and by the consecrated efforts of thy children the coming of thy world wide kingdom where justice, mercy and love shall rule the hearts and hands of men.

Create in us, O Lord, clean hearts, and renew right spirits for the coming year.

This we ask in the spirit of Jesus Christ, our only Hope, Amen!

The Interchurch World Movement and the Small Denomination

That the great church of Christ is awakening to the bigness and urgency of its task is evident to all who are conversant with the movements that are now getting under way. It never took its mission more seriously than now, and never did it plan with more statesmanlike vision, nor with more sound business sense than it is doing right now. It is surveying the needs of the world (in the homeland and overseas, in the cities and country districts), calculating what will be required to meet those needs and planning how the entire resources of Protestantism—spiritual, missionary, evangelistic, educational and stewardship—can be brought to meet those needs in the quickest, most economical and most effective way possible. The Interchurch World Movement is urging every denomination that has not already done so, to formulate a great challenging program for the promotion of the kingdom of God toward which it shall bend all possible effort, and at the same time to co-operate with all the other Protestant churches in a great united drive to bring the whole of Christian America to do something really big in the interest of Christ's kingdom. In the editorial department of last week we gave the program of the Interchurch Movement for the months in the immediate future. It includes campaigns in the interest of the various phases of the church's activities, all of which will be readily endorsed by the members of all evangelical denominations.

But some denominations are so very large while others are so very small that some of the small denominations are wondering if they are not so small that by co-operating with the large denominations they may not be swallowed up and be carried away by the larger ones. However, it has been made clear repeatedly that the Interchurch World Movement is not aimed at church union, but only church co-operation; any church that believes it has a mission of God to perform and a plea for which to stand is urged to perform its God-given task with all possible zeal.

Some of the smaller denominations are wondering if there is anything for them to gain by co-operating in these drives. For example, will it profit Brethren churches to participate in the financial drive to be launched in the late spring? And to this question the answer is that it will profit more by being in the Movement than by staying out. The financial drive promises to be of such dimensions as to make the Red Cross drives look small in comparison. Every member of every community will be canvassed, and Brethren people will respond as liberally as members of other churches. But only those churches that are co-operating officially with the Movement will share in the undesignated proceeds. Money given for some designated purpose will be spent for that purpose, but much will not be designated for some particular purpose. That will be divided among the participating denominations and given to the most worthy and needy undertakings of those denominations. From every point of view, no greater misfortune could befall our own fraternity than to fail to participate in, and thus fail to share in the largest way in the mighty momentum of this great movement.

Brethren people are not alone in asking such questions as these; they are being raised in many parts of the country, due to a misunderstanding of the aims of the Movement. Speaking recently before the secretaries of a number of home mission boards of denominations affiliated with the Movement, Dr. S. Earl Taylor, general secretary of the Interchurch World Movement, answered the question, "What will become of the small, weak church as a denominational unit when the Interchurch Movement gains full momentum?" His remarks cleared away all ideas of repression or church "union" which seemingly have gained credence through rumor or hasty judgment.

Answering a question from the floor on what should be the motive for a small body entering the Interchurch Movement, Dr. Taylor said:

"I should say that if this body has a conviction that it has a work to do for Jesus Christ, that it is a part of his great program at home and abroad, there is all the more reason why that body should be identified with a movement of this kind that gathers up the forces—because all the forces ought to be in.

"Again, I see no reason why you should grade up on size, that is, today, there is equal reason, per se, why a small as well as a large denomination should come in, if there is any reason why the Protestant forces should affiliate themselves.

"It is just as if, for instance, little Belgium had raised the question in the war—she could not raise it because the enemy was on her territory, but might have if she had been detached—as to whether or not she ought to put her mite in because the large nations were in.

"Well, of course, Belgium has an enormous moral effect, if she did not have anything else, and she did have some other things. I would say on that basis that we of the strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak. The interpretation does not necessarily depend upon financial strength. Some of the smaller bodies are strong in faith and strong in evangelical zeal, and they can help a lot of us that are big and rather cumbersome in our machinery, quite as much as we might help, in the matter of organizing our program.

"I should say, in other words, that if they can take advantage of all the momentum that would come from the gathering together of the big forces, they would gain quite as much as anybody else would gain, and they might contribute no small part."

In reply to a remark from one of the secretaries that in the administration of the work the principles that seem to apply would swallow up the little denomination and cause its work to disappear in home work and missionary propaganda. Dr. Taylor said that he did not think these denominations would be "snuffed out."

"There may," Dr. Taylor said, "as a result of this or other things, come mergers of denominations, or groupings. I think that will come in the course of time. You may find, for example, that a small denomination ought not to have an extensive home mission program—that is, a nation-wide program—but it may be that right at its door there is something this denomination ought to do, and can do. As I look over the foreign mission field, with which I am familiar, I do not believe that when we have done our best we will occupy the field fully. The field is so vast that we are not touching more than the fringes of it now. There is a chance for everybody and a work for everybody, but it ought to be defined.

"Now this is true; that if these denominations are not in the Movement financially, they might go in on the stewardship movement, and on the evangelistic side of the work, and their own members have the same need of being stirred in their inner life as the members of larger groups."

This movement is of God; by means of it he is causing the church to take more seriously than heretofore the great task committed to it. By his Holy Spirit he is leading his forces on to take the world for himself. And when he leads the way we must neither hesitate nor falter, but lay aside our prejudices and follow.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother Arthur Snider of Mathias, West Virginia, reports a good evangelistic meeting conducted by himself at Kinsey's Run church and also a successful meeting conducted by Brother Wood at Mathias.

Sister Boothe, our regular correspondent from Oak Hill, West Virginia, tells of a revival meeting held at the Salem school house by Brother Wm. H. Miller. The success was greatly hindered by weather conditions.

Brother Gearhart, of Dayton, writes that the reports thus far show up splendidly for Home Missions. Doubtless he will be glad to have complete returns soon. He also asks for the names and addresses of the membership of the various congregations.

Our readers will be pleased to hear from Ashland, Oregon, and to know that the faithful little band there is to be ably assisted by Sister Detwiler. Dr. D. M. Brower reports a visit also from Brother A. V. Kimmell, of Whittier, California. Two have recently been added to the church by baptism.

Long Beach is still going forward, as you will see by Brother Nielsen's report. In finances, in evangelism and church efficiency this congregation is never lacking. At their recent brief evangelistic meeting they reaped a very generous harvest of souls. Brother Bauman has been retained for his eighth year as pastor, at an increase in salary.

Brother Barnhart writes at considerable length concerning his trip to West Virginia, but his description of the scenery and the people is interesting. He was delighted with the sterling quality of the people he met there. We have already called attention to his offer to assist in an evangelistic campaign or Bible institute work. Those interested should address him at Pleasant Hill, Ohio.

Brother Lowman, the earnest pastor of the new Fillmore, California church, writes of the blessing his church received from the conference held in their house of worship. At the close of the conference, Brother Broad remained with them to lead them in an evangelistic meeting. The Brethren find that they must take the lead in evangelistic work in that city, but we dare say they will reap the harvest when the seed thus sown has come to maturity.

And still the good work goes on and steadily increases in interest in Ohio, while the college endowment mercury steadily rises. Brother Beachler found the Gretna church ready and waiting for him, and they proved by their gifts that he was welcome. Ohio is proud of little Gretna; though she is small in numbers, she is large in generosity and loyalty. Brother Teeter, their pastor, has found them so, and former pastors have testified to the same thing. We know they are loyal because they were, if memory serves us right, the second church in the brotherhood to get on the Evangelist Honor Roll. Wish we had a lot more Gretnas, and we have a number of them throughout the brotherhood. We thank God for them. The Gretnas are the churches that are loyal to every interest of the church and seek to do their whole duty to them all.

Our readers will notice the absence of "Our Devotional" this week. We have omitted this department from this issue and may do so a time or two following this, in order that we may have more space for church news. Those who have written "Devotionals" will understand the importance of the prompt release of church news, we are sure, and have patience till their valued contributions are published.

Dr. Jacobs' "College News" contains a number of items of interest to our Evangelist family, and all are grateful to him, we are quite sure, because he takes time to keep us informed from time to time. Of signal importance is the item concerning the recent conference in the interest of the college endowment campaign. When the college trustees shall have met, we are sure there will be some news worth giving out concerning bringing to a climactic completion the campaign for college endowment.

The people of Krypton have no school and they want one. They are willing to pay for it, but as yet they have been unable to find the teacher. They want some one to agree to teach them a six months' school beginning January 1. Brother Gearhart writes that he considers this an urgent need and a great opportunity for service. They are willing to pay not less than $50 per month and board. Will not some consecrated girl permit God to send her to this needy field of service for a season. Write to Brother G. C. Carpenter, Peru, Indiana, or Brother Wm. A. Gearhart, 906 Conover Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

A portion of the Ohio conference minutes are found in this issue, the remainder will appear in a succeeding issue. While certain parts of the state were not as well represented as usual, due perhaps to conditions more than distance, yet it was a real success from the standpoint of enthusiasm awakened and actual work accomplished. One action of importance was the adoption of rules for the ordination of elders. All Ohio churches should acquaint themselves with them and be guided by them. It is also important to note the emphasis placed upon evangelism and the plans adopted for encouraging it both among children and adults in every church.

We have another news-letter from Brother Anderson, pastor of the Pleasant Grove, Iowa, church. He not only sees the weakness, but the strong points as well in his parish. He says he is going to work for a larger subscription list to The Evangelist and we believe he will accomplish it, for he and The Evangelist have worked together in other pastorates. Brother Anderson has always been loyal to the interests of The Evangelist, and we believe he has a very good reason, namely, he finds it a real assistant in his work. Thank you, Brother Anderson, for your co-operation, as we do also all the other brethren who are giving us such fine support and co-operation.

Brother E. L. Miller, who is now pastor of the Nappanee, Indiana, church, writes concerning the closing of his pastorate at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, and of the reception given him by his new parish. He must surely appreciate the royal treatment he received at both places. The generous gifts from the Uniontown people upon his departure spoke in a very practical way of their appreciation of his services. A clipping from the Daily News Standard of Uniontown, sent us by Brother Deffenbaugh, a member of that congregation, covers practically the same ground as Brother Miller's report and speaks in very high terms of Brother Miller. But because of the crowded condition of the news department, we cannot out of fairness to others publish both reports at this time, and so we give preference to "Brother Ed.'s" own words.

"A New Brethren Preacher," writes Brother Bame, in one of the columns of this issue, and to make the good news more real he produces the picture. It is the likeness of Brother Robert Goshorn, son of Brother Martin Goshorn of Clay City, who has written occasionally for The Evangelist. Brother Robert is of "good Dunker stock," as one of our older ministers used to say, and what's more he seems to have ambition and willingness to pay the price of success. He is now in preparation at North Manchester College.

FOUR-YEAR PROGRAM PAGE

NOW THEN DO IT.—II Samuel 3:18

Conducted by Charles A. Bame

My New Year's Message

'Tis New Year's Day—first of the year;
As others fraught with moments dear,
We meditate and justly fear,
We may not rightly spend them.
But while we ponder, let us pray
That God, through each succeeding day
While speedily they pass away,
Will teach us how to spend them.

Thus, twenty years ago we wrote. The passing years with changing scenes and enlarging responsibilities have not sufficed to make possible the least bit of change. We are still debtors and suppliants. Twenty years of strenuous effort have given us no possible remedy for our need save the one we had that long ago. No stored energy awaits our call. We must still,

"Work and fight and pray,
The battle ne'er give o'er.
Renew it boldly every day,
And help divine implore.

If we are larger the demands are larger, also. If we have grown, so have the world's burdens become more taxing and galling. If we feel more capable to do things, more is expected and we need still to pray for help from the one great Source of all good and power. How wonderfully has the Lord kept his star ahead of us to lighten us on the way to where he has wanted us! We try to catch up with him only to find the place we reach has been sanctified by him but a minute ahead of us so that we follow on till we near the place of perfection only when we have traveled as fast as the hours of the day and the days of the year and the years of a life-time will take us. God may be realized and followed but is never reached, even though we aspire daily to be like him.

Now For Victory

Nineteen-twenty is here. The VICTORY YEAR has arrived. "It is finished," will be written in nine months, or WE HAVE FAILED will be written in its stead. Which will it be? The next nine months alone, will tell the story. Here is INDIANA, we are working at it as hard as we know how and shall aim to strike off all the yellow from the page at the next conference. Our evangelistic plans are going on toward completion and every church is making plans to have a revival. Already we have a number of good reports and our increase will be a thing to look to when the year is done. Now, I do not think INDIANA is the only district that is trying but some of them will have to show us something feasible besides a few admonitions before we shall believe that you will go ahead of us at the JUBILEE.

Then, the Jubilee

One whole evening at conference this wonderful year will be given to the Jubilee. But, only victory is worthy of jubilee. And remember that we shall be ashamed if we do not "boost" hard for "Goal 4," this year. I know what I am saying and you will after the year has come to an end, if you do not take heed to my warning. We do not want any "buts" at that meeting. Many of the goals will be won and what a shout of victory there will be for some which have gone away ahead of all anticipations! After they have been reported and the jollification has subsided, then some other reporter will come and try to say, "We could have but, . . . and then, it will be that "Buts" won't go.

Now I am trying to tell you before it comes to pass what you had better do so that you will be able to jollify along with the whole program.

So Happy New Year to All

To district directors, national directors, to hard-working pastors, leaders of all goal-seeking organizations, I hope that you are making a neck-and-neck race for the goals and are happy that you are attempting great things for God. Not for me; not for the Program but for the sake of him for whom we toil and who will not allow one attempt to fail of his notice and reward.

Preachers, How About It?

Have you used two of the programmed subjects? At the Christmastide, you should have preached on the "Coming Kingdom and Its King" as was given, in a recent Evangelist. At Thanksgiving, you should have used "The Brethren Church and Her Message." If you did not, DO IT NOW. It is never too late to preach on a good subject and these are good any time and place where Brethren live and worship. No use for a church failing on this point for it is as easy to use one subject as another. Besides, this is a wonderful time for such a subject as this. But we can count on 90 percent of Brethren preachers doing their duty. If Brethren followers were as ready to "grab the bit" and run as well as 90 percent of the preachers, we would soon distance the goals.

Goal Six—Life Work

Churches, how are you doing your duty to the youngsters that might choose the ministry or the mission field if they had the proper encouragement? Now, I know from experience that a young man does not always rush in "where angels fear to tread," and many a young person does not choose the life work they would, if you helped them to make the choice. I do not think by any means but pure Jonahism that I could have escaped the ministry; looking back over the years of preparation and the immediate success that God gave me in his work, I feel sure that he would have found some way to get me there. But I do not know how long might have been the road traveled ere he would have caught me had it not been that I was a member of a church that believed in taking the matter of making ministers into their own hands. God used them in a way that seems strange to me now. But he did it, I am sure.

So, it may be the duty of many of our churches that have young men who know in their heart of hearts where God wants them but who are as timid as I was about expressing my desire. May it not therefore, be the duty of many of our churches who have talented young men and women, to hold elections or to have Life Work services with the special appeal to them to make the out-and-out avowal of their intentions and thus get where we ought on "Goal Six." Not for the sake of the goal but for the sake of the cause. The need of "Goal Six" was there before the goal was made and so, it is our duty to make "Goal Six."

So There it is Now, you have my New Year's message. It is the same message you have been hearing for three years in different ways from my very heart. I want you all to win on this program because the Kingdom needs that we do so. Because it is in line with the "new Day" in which we live and because nothing that it asks is out of line with the greatest happiness for you and us. "A Happy New Year—Victory Year."

BAME.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Church and Its Opportunities in the New Year. By H. H. Wolford

Every year in the history of the church has been a year of great opportunity. Perhaps the church has not always seen her opportunity and taken advantage of it but nevertheless God has always blessed the church in all that she has undertaken. Never in all the centuries has the church seriously undertaken a task but what she has been victor. Jesus made the promise that the gates of hell should not prevail against her. In this expression of faith in his church he did not think of the church on the defensive but on the offensive. Too many have been waiting for the day when the forces of evil should attack the church and in that day the gates of hell coming against the church should not prevail. It seems to me this is not the meaning of Christ's words but rather that at no time would the gates of evil be so strong but that the church by his power could overcome them and be victor. This must be our faith today if the new year is to mean the most to us.

The church of Jesus Christ is bound to be victorious in the opportunities offered her. Yet more than ever we need to remember the words of the prophet when he said, "Not by might nor by power but by my spirit saith the Lord of hosts."

If great leaders of the church who are surrendered to the spirit of God are to be heard we are approaching the year of greatest opportunity ever presented to the church. Lessons from the unresponsiveness of the church in the past to the leadership of Jesus Christ, the accumulative forces of the church now available and the proven inadequacy of all other forces in the world, makes the present unique in opportunity for unprecedented achievement.

The New Year waits with a longing heart for the manifestation within the church of the true spirit of Jesus Christ and the interpretation of that spirit to the entire world. Jesus said, "If I be lifted up I will draw all men unto me." The hour is here when every member of the church must lift him up in their own lives. God's greatest apologetic to the world is and ever has been a real Christian life lived in the spirit of Jesus Christ. This true spirit is not alone manifest in sacramentalism however essential it may be to Christian growth. The world is not looking at our sacraments so much as at our actions and words in real living among men. The sacraments of the church must not be neglected but unless they promote spiritual growth and a deepening of spiritual graces toward others they are of little value. Nor will the simple assertion of certain formulas of orthodoxy meet the needs of the present world. The life we live must manifest the spirit and life of the God, the Christ and the Bible which we acclaim. We must be orthodox in our insistence upon the great realities of God, Christ and the Bible but we need to remember that Christ summed up for us the test of our beliefs in another reality when he said "If any man would come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Following him unto the utmost and even unto the ends of the earth is the challenge of Christ and the world to the entire membership of the Brethren church. To do this with greatest effectiveness is the great opportunity of the new year.

It has already been hinted that the true spirit of Jesus Christ is not provincial but world wide. The spirit of Christ is missionary from beginning to end. The disciple who is not vitally interested in the immediate giving of Christ to the whole world is not really his disciple but a follower afar off. The nearer we approach Christ and enter into entire communion with him the more will the vision and task of the whole world possess and control us.

The true spirit of Jesus Christ must be represented in a great love for him and his work. The world has seen in the last few years not only the greatest manifestation of cruel forces but also the greatest manifestation of wholehearted love that the world has ever seen. The church now has the opportunity of continuing the spirit of Christlike love born out of necessity. The danger confronting us and already manifest is that we shall settle back to the old selfish and unresponsive life of the past. The heart of the world is bleeding and torn with suffering. The only cure and comfort is in the love of Jesus Christ manifested in his life and the lives of his followers. I do not mean by this that we shall simply supply the physical needs of men but by our love for him win them to Christ. The true reign of Christ on earth will begin when the individual life of the world is won to Christ.

This leads me to the second great opportunity of the church, the opportunity for service. The failure of practically every great force in the world to meet the needs of the world leaves the church as yet practically an untried force. But the power of the church in meeting the needs of the world must be manifested largely in service. The church now faces the opportunity of stepping into the breach opened by the failure of other forces. The church's greatest service to the world of now, lies in the united force of protestantism undertaking the tasks of the present world's unrest. In Jesus Christ the church holds the only adequate program for the world's redemption not only in saving the souls of men but in bringing about justice and righteousness in social and economic life. This service is incumbent upon us and we can not be true to our Christ unless we deliberately and prayerfully set forth to do it. This will demand the noblest and highest form of sacrificial service the church has ever rendered. The Brethren church though small has its part to perform. The very claims that we hold as being a New Testament church ought to fit us for effective service.

The ushering in of the new year brings to the Brethren church a new challenge to finish with victory the Four Year Program upon which we have been working. The next eight months must be filled with earnest endeavor if the largest results for the program are to be attained. This task is upon us and demands our immediate attention. Its fulfillment depends largely upon the ministry and lay leadership of the church. If any one has a larger responsibility than others it is the ministry. Our laity are ready to follow if once we give them a vision of the task before them. But the end of the present program presents to us the opportunity of making and putting into operation a larger and more comprehensive program. The bigness of the task of the Kingdom of God is as yet not fully comprehended by us as a church. Our contentment to work out our own peculiar problems has blinded us to the bigness of the movements of the church of which we are a part. The Intechurch World Movement is without question the mightiest movement ever seen in the history of Christendom. Unless the Brethren church aligns herself with this movement she is bound to suffer loss. It is therefore the hour of opportunity to co-operate in a movement of all protestantism before the task of the whole world's needs. In a few days this movement will be presented to the entire church. Is the Brethren church ready for its opportunity. The spirit of God's unquestionably leading. Will we follow? The hour is struck. The world lays the challenge of its needs at the door of the church. Christ is sufficient for these needs. The church must arise to apply the remedy to the world's open sore. In the spirit of the Son of God the Savior of the world, let us arise to follow his leadership.

A United Brethren Church. By George A. Copp

There is a very creditable Christian church by the name of The United Brethren in Christ. The phrase "In Christ" has been dropped in late years, but it would be well to hold on to it, and in fact the entire name would be a suitable one for the union of all Christendom. But this church is not the one I wish to speak of in this communication.

The Christian church today is shamefully divided into hair splitting factions and not only confuses the heathen world, but the civilized world as well, and it certainly would be a credit to Christianity to unite these discordant elements into one great church of God.

We have the names of two kindred denominations that are about the same in name as well as in faith and practice. I have reference to the Brethren church and the Church of the Brethren. Two names are here with only a single preposition of two letters and the transposition of a word to make them identical in name, and it would appear to be little more to do in practice in the way of faith to unite them into one church.

No good reason should exist for two churches so nearly alike in faith and practice to be separated into two religious bodies. It is folly and a waste of God's means to build two church buildings of these two Dunkard denominations in the same community when one will accommodate all the people. There are now congregations of these churches that have never fully separated, only at the communion service. I can point to two congregations where perfect harmony has prevailed for more than a quarter of a century since the general division in the church, which have jointly used the same building with regular services. And if this be possible for some churches, it ought to be so anywhere. We both administer the same form of baptism; we both observe the washing of the saint's feet; we both partake of the Lord's supper and communion and we have other things in common. In all these things we are in perfect accord so far as I know. Then what keeps us separated? So far as my information goes the only barrier is the garb or dress question. Well, that looks like a strange thing for MEN to divide on, so as to be forced to build opposing church buildings, establish different colleges, publishing houses, homes for the aged poor and separate missions, both home and foreign. We are expected to be men and put away childish things and rise above trivial matters which are certainly not essential to salvation.

Much greater and far more vital obstacles confronted the apostolic church when they met in council at Jerusalem to decide the question of circumcision, yet they settled it in a manly and Christian way and remained united as one Brethren church. Circumcision was given the Jews of God and to Abraham, the father of the Jewish race, to be perpetuated throughout his generation, or as long as his seed remained, and it was no easy thing for a Jew to drop it lightly. It had such a firm hold upon the Jewish people that it is still observed by the orthodox Jew. But these Christian Jews to keep peace in the church gave up a sacred rite which was a part of both their national and religious life.

To my mind the dress question should not be near so hard to solve as that of circumcision. We have in both the Brethren and conservative church a far better ministry than there was twenty-five years ago. The ministry in both churches is far more spiritual, much better educated and less given to preach "doctrine" as they called it then. To have talked of union then would have been a loss of time and effort, but now the time is ripe, I think, for union and if I am not mistaken it is sure to come. There will be scoffers in both churches at this statement, but the world and progress will still go on and accomplish it all the same. And may God hasten the day when there will be one united Brethren church.

PRAYER AND MISSIONARY RECRUITS

One of the greatest meetings of Christian instructors and students representing the colleges and universities of North America is being held at Des Moines over this week end. Latest reports indicated an enrollment of about seven thousand persons. Ashland will be represented by six persons, four from the Seminary and two from the College. During the week preceding the Christmas recess the Student Volunteers met daily for prayer, and on the last Sunday morning at the close of the church service in the Chapel a public consecration service was conducted by the writer. In line with this and all the preparation we are assuming this

CALL TO PRAYER

There are three passages of scripture which strongly emphasize the relation between prayer and missions. After hallowing the name of "Our Father," taught Jesus, pray "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done, on earth as it is in heaven." Directing the disciples' attention to the whitened fields, he said, "Pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust out laborers." Pointing out the willingness of an earthly parent to provide for his child, Jesus added, "If ye then being evil know how to give good gifts to your children, how much more will your Heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" The outstanding answer is recorded in Acts 1:8, "Ye shall receive power, when the Holy Ghost is come upon you, and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria and the uttermost parts of the earth."

From that day until this the history of missions has been the story of prayer. The Early church prayed, "And they went forth and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word by the signs that followed." Antioch prayed, and Paul, Barnabas, John Mark and others heralded the name of Christ throughout Asia

Minor and on the continent of Europe. Prevailing prayer explains the success of daring missionaries like Ulfilas, St. Patrick and Lull; courageous reformers like Wycliffe, Savonarola and Luther; flaming evangelists like Knox, Wesley and Moody. The modern missionary movement had its birth in the famous Haystack Prayer Meeting where Mills, Hall and Richards of Williams College and Nott, Rice, Newell and Judson of Andover Theological Seminary united in intercessory prayer for a revival of missionary interest and activity. In response to their intercessions God constrained men to organize great mission boards and societies. Later, as the fruitage of prayer, there came into being the Student Volunteer Movement and The Young People's Missionary Movement, not to mention others.

The League of Nations is promising, but there is something more fundamental. Lord Robert Cecil says: "If we rely on the provisions of the Covenant to preserve peace, we shall be living in a fool's paradise. We Christians think that in the application of the principles of Christianity to international relations lies the only solution of the problem." Then hear the Hebrew statesman, Mr. Morgenthau: "Jesus has exercised more influence on human history than any other personality. We shall never get out of war except by following his teachings. The missionaries have the right idea. They go straight to the foundations and provide those intellectual, moral and religious benefits upon which alone any true civilization can be built." Sharing these gripping convictions The Student Volunteer Movement through its general secretary, Mr. Robert P. Wilder, has issued a Call to Prayer. If war men were needed to crush autoeracy, prayer men are now needed to help exterminate the unchristian philosophy on which it rested. Students and professors are earnestly requested to join a voluntary league of interest, praying definitely for the coming Convention at Des Moines, Iowa, over December 31, 1919—January 4, 1920. To your knees, O Christian students, and pray

"Revive thy work, O Lord,
Thy work of quickening power;
O'er earth's vast wilderness pour down
The pentecostal shower."

In addition the reader is asked to study the following paragraph taken from one of the leaflets written by Mr. Gilbert A. Beaver.

Thorough and independent investigations into the history and effective methods of Christian work in many lands brought a wealth of corroborating evidence to the Edinburgh World Missionary Conference concerning the supreme importance of a vast increase in the praying forces of the church. "Every grave crisis in the expansion of Christianity which has been successfully met has been met by the faithfulness of Christ's disciples in the secret place. That there is a necessary connection between the prayers of Christians on the one hand, and, on the other hand, the revealing of Christ's plan, the raising up of workers, and the releasing of the great spiritual forces of the Kingdom, is a fact as clearly established as any fact can be established." Moreover, "The greatest leaders of the missionary movement have been men of prayer. The volume of testimony is overwhelmingly that . . . the man of prayer is the man of power." "The church has not yet discovered, still less begun to realize, the limitless possibilities of intercession. How to multiply the number of Christians who with truthful lives, and with clear, unshakable faith in the character and ability of God, will, individually and collectively or corporately as a church, wield this force for the conversion and transformation of men, for the inauguration and energizing of spiritual movements, and for the breaking down of all that exalts itself against Christ and his purposes—that is the supreme question of foreign missions."

It is no less the supreme question of every nation and community, of every church and Christian organization. It is a question of corporate life and guidance, not merely of individual needs. It was of a nation as a whole, the people chosen to illustrate God's leadership, and to serve the entire world, that Isaiah said: "Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? . . . Is not this the fast that I have chosen? To loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke . . . Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answer. . . And if thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satisfy the afflicted soul, then . . . the Lord shall guide thee continually." How timely are these words for all nations and Christian organizations in our day! If in its corporate life there is only perfunctory fellowship with Christ, how can the work of a Christian body be controlled and pervaded by his spirit? Unless corporate prayer expresses vital dependence upon him, and discerning sympathy with the aspirations of the masses of men, how can the Christian forces, in this time of antagonisms and re-adjustments throughout the world, gain for the Servant and Savior of men the leadership which belongs to him?

Fortunately, there are everywhere at least a few followers of Christ who are seeing more clearly that right relations between differing individuals, classes, and races can be realized, and Christian civilization can be developed, only through co-operation in prayer, as well as in outward action. Many are seeking to clarify or to express half-formed convictions. Nothing is more important than that they should unite in prayer with any others who are willing to join in a common quest. How often in the past have the united prayers of a few earnest men and women restored to the mid-week service of their church or Christian organization the compelling objectives of prayer! What a power it has then become for transforming life in the community, and for projecting its influence into foreign fields!

The New Chivalry

Standing in our midst in the spirit of truly chivalrous manhood, Paul says "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak." How is this to be done? Let a simple illustration or two suffice. The day was hot and dusty, the car was crowded. At a way-station a stylishly dressed young man came in. He had scarcely taken his seat when he noticed across the aisle a tired woman holding a sick baby. The mother's face was the picture of distress and despair. The baby was almost too sick to cry. The young man leaning over and addressing himself to the woman said, "Madam, you look tired and worn. Let me take the baby while you try to rest a little."

The woman was greatly surprised. This was the first kindly notice she had received and it came from such an unexpected source, for most of the passengers had marked the young man as a dude. "I thank you, sir, I am tired," she said, as she prepared to entrust the baby to the care of the stranger. "I will hold the little fellow as carefully as I can," said the young man. "He seems to be very sick; have you come far?" "Yes, all the way from Black Hills. Baby was well when I started. I am on my way home to friends in the East. My husband—my—" and here the words were choked by a sob. "I understand," said the young man, in sympathetic tone, as he noted the bit of crepe in her hat. By this time he had the baby folded in his arms. "Now you can rest awhile," he said. "You need not worry about the baby; he is all right. Have you far to go?" "Yes to Connecticut," she said, as she wearily folded a shawl to be used as a pillow preparatory to lying down to rest in the seat. "I see," said the young man, "and you can't afford the expense of a sleeping car." The woman blushed slightly as she placed her head on the arm of the seat, and several big tears ran down her cheek.

Shamed by the action of the young man, a woman passenger came forward and offered to take the baby. Freed from his little charge, the young man took advantage of the first stop that was made, and rising in his seat, said, "Ladies and gentlemen, here is an opportunity for us to show that we have been reared in a Christian land and have had Christian parents. This poor woman," pointing to the now sleeping mother, "is making a long journey. Her husband is dead and her baby is sick and she is without money. What shall we do about it?" A big fellow jumped up and said, "Why, we will take a collection, of course, that's what we will do about it." In a few minutes a generous collection was secured, and in less than half an hour the tired mother, with her sick child, was comfortably resting in the berth of a sleeping car. This is what is meant by the new chivalry. In every walk of life knights of this new chivalry are needed to live in the spirit of the Master, using their strength, whether it be wealth, intelligence, physical power, or position to bear the infirmities of the weak. Jesus went about doing good.—Selected.

"On to Greater Difficulties" is not only the subject of Sister Detwiler's letter, but truly expresses what she has actually undertaken, judging from all reports. She performed a valued service at Spokane, and now she has gone to blaze the way in Ashland, Oregon. May God crown her labors with success in this field as he has elsewhere.

Wonderful, Counsellor, Mighty God, Father of Eternity, Prince of Peace—how much these titles suggest to us! From no human lips have proceeded such words of wisdom for man's guidance as were spoken by our Lord; no other man upon earth ever did such mighty deeds as he; no other opened eternal life to mankind as did he; no other has distilled into restless souls and restless society peace as he did.—A. M. Kerr.

Men speak of heaven and hell as if these were mere places of habitation. But heaven is the confirmation of character, and so is hell.—Messenger, Galt, Ontario.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Antidote for Fear. By S. C. Henderson

TEXT: "Jesus spake unto them saying, Be of good cheer: it is I, be not afraid."—MATT. 14:27.

Our text has a suggestive significance. The Lord has just performed one of his great miracles—the feeding of the five thousand, with the five barley loaves and two fishes. The brief shades of evening are drawing near, so he bids his disciples to go over to the other side of the little lake, while he remained behind to dismiss the multitude. After which he retired to a place to pray alone. That night the little crew battled with the waves and angry sea. Under any ordinary weather the sea could be crossed in an hour or two. But at the third watch of the night they were still laboring at the oars. Of a sudden fright was added to their fears as they caught sight of a human form walking towards them upon the sea. It is very probable that the little lake had its common tales of ghosts and apparitions which is always common among a sea-faring people. Many a fisher's barque had been caught in the gale and found a watery grave on some wild night, to whose memory fancy and superstition had added their fears. But amid their panic stricken horror they uttered a cry of distress. It is answered by the well known voice of the Master. "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid."

Fear is one of the earliest human emotions. Its terrors fetter both the young child and the primitive man. Our highest enlightenment is not free from its powers. The world has had many epidemics and panics of fear. During the war we heard much about "the morale of the army." Many times well organized armies have been put to flight by fear. Whole lands have weakened and died before a spreading plague. There is an old legend that tells that a pilgrim met the Plague and inquired where it was bound. The Plague replied, To Bagdad to slay five thousand people. A few days later the pilgrim met the Plague returning and took him to task: "You said that you were going to kill five thousand people and you have slain fifty thousand." "No," replied the Plague. "I only killed five thousand, as I said I would; the others died of fright." Ambassador Gerard in his book "My Four Years in Germany" says that the German fear was a cause for the war on the part of the peasantry who were led to believe that the Allies would slowly starve the Germans to death unless they arose against them. A witty Frenchman says that the whole French Revolution can be conjugated thus: "I am afraid. Thou art afraid. He is afraid. We are afraid. They are afraid." It was distrust that led to the reign of terror. It is terror that rules Russia today instead of the Bolsheviks. It is fear that is largely responsible for the unrest in America at this present moment. Our financial panics can be explained psychologically as well as economically. In one of his books, Dr. Orison Swett Marden says that the worst enemy of man is fear. He says that parents do their children a great injustice by causing them to fear.

"He who chides a child with terror,
Stops its play or stills its song,
Not only commits an error
But a grievous moral wrong."

Fear debases a man. A coward is made so by his fears. A slave cowers and cries only because he fears. Fear paralyzes. Many animals in their fear of their enemy become powerless to move. So fear causes men to lose their highest motive and degrades them into cringing underlings.

Broadly speaking there are three common native fears,—the fear of want, the fear of death and the fear of an avenging deity. The fear of circumstances affects a large part of earth's humanity. Men are anxious of the morrow. We sometimes call it worry. Old Thomas Carlyle once remarked that the only hell that an Englishman feared was a hell of poverty. The struggling laborer sees before him the awful specter of want in his old age. He fears the alms house and the potter's field. To many in our own land the prayer "to give us our daily bread" has a meaning, while to many who have never felt the pinch of poverty or who are amply assured that they never will, the phrase may mean nothing more than a theological term of beneficence.

Of course there is a vast amount of needless worry, the kind of worry that Jesus warned against when he urged his disciples to take no anxious thought of the morrow, for the morrow would care for itself. Worry is but a form of fear. Some fear over the things that never will happen. They are imaginary. I used to know a dear old sister who possessed some means and lived in a constant fear that she might die in the poor house. She had a good home with her grown children. Her worry was useless because the Lord had a place for her and took her home to glory and relieved her of those fears.

Jesus gives us an antidote for our fears. He himself is the emancipator of the world's fears. Through the darkness and the gloom that cause the heart to quail and cry out we hear the well known voice, "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid." We are delivered from fear by faith in Christ. The antithesis of fear is not courage but faith. Faith fosters courage, while doubt is the joint product of fear and uncertainty. Great heroes were men of faith before they were men of courage. Washington, Lincoln, Grant, and Lloyd George, Joffre and Pershing were or are men of faith. They had faith in a great principle and the right. It inspired them to courage by their faith in its truth.

It is the certainty of our faith that alleviates our fears. We cross the bridge, we enter the ship or car because we have faith in their power and mechanism. So it is with our certainty with God. It was this certainty that caused the author of the 46th Psalm to sing, "Though the earth be removed and the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea, I will not fear." Its author had faith in God's providence as had Oliver Cromwell when he and his troops chanted it at Marston Moor before they went into battle. Luther had the same thought when he sang the battle hymn of the Reformation, "A Mighty Fortress is Our God."

To those who lack this faith how different. An old Roman writer said, "He fears not the sea, that never goes to sea; nor battle, that follows not the camp; nor robbers, that stir not abroad; nor malicious informers, that is a poor man; nor earthquakes, that dwells in Gaul; nor thunderbolts, that dwells in Ethiopia; but he that dreads divine powers dreads everything; the land, the sea, the dark, the light, a sound, a silence, a dream." To the primitive man all nature was full of terrors. Its deities awaited to strike him dead. Demons and evil spirits swarmed about him on all sides. He used the taboo and charms to ward them off. His life was continually menaced by fear, for he knew not their will.

But how different is the world to him who knows his Lord. John says, "Perfect love casteth out all fear." As soon as the frightened crew heard the well known voice of the Master their fears fell. It was as the father's voice to the lost child. It was the same Lord that had said, "God is love." In this he bid man to cast aside his false superstitions and fears and trust in his love. It was a new note to souls that had feared the new comet in the sky, the voice of the rolling thunder and the lightning flash, as the warning manifestation of God's anger. The loving father and his prodigal son were typical to what God's love is. The old prophet Hosea saw the yearning heart of God for Israel in his own love for his unfaithful wife. But only through Christ as the only begotten Son did man find the true nature of the Father in heaven. Man was no longer to find God a terror, but an object of love.

Finally Jesus delivered men from the fear of death which they were in bondage. The old adage had it, that self-preservation was nature's first law. All life's battles against the unseen foe of death. The fear of death was alike bondage to both animal and man. Job sees it arise before him as a specter in the night, when deep sleep had fallen upon him. Bryant, the poet, speaks of the thoughts of that last bitter hour coming as life's blight over the spirit. An old tale is told of an Egyptian king who wished to impress upon his nobles the thought of life's uncertainty. He made a feast to which he invited them all. While the merriment was at its height, the doors suddenly opened and two silent black Nubian slaves entered drawing a mummy case behind them across the room. It was enough; the music stopped and the guests departed in fear.

But why do men fear death? Man has possessed the intimations of immortality from his earliest times, but beyond the shades there remained Stygian darkness. While Socrates discoursed with his pupils about the life beyond the night before he drank the poisoned cup, yet there remained a frightful agnosticism of uncertainty, as they approached the urn or tomb. They like Hamlet, the prince of Denmark, debated, "To be or not to be?"

"For in the sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil
Must give us pause."

Men fear death because death puts an end to their earthly ambitions, possessions and pleasures. It is reported that old Dr. Samuel Johnson once visited a friend who took great pride in showing him over his estate, which was a model of beauty and convenience. After they had viewed it for awhile the learned doctor stood silently with his hand upon his host's shoulder and then said, "My friend these are what makes dying hard." Men whose vested interests are on earth dread to depart to a place where they have no possessions.

Men fear death because they fear to meet God with their sins and wasted lives. Like the unfaithful steward they feel condemned because they have been wasting their Lord's goods.

But to those who have felt the force of the Master's words, "Fear not little flock for it is the Father's good will to give you the kingdom," and "Let not your heart be troubled neither let it be afraid," there is no fear. Christ becomes the antidote for the world's fear. God's rich providence and Christ's earnest of the life beyond, speaks to our human terrors to cease. Lift up your head and greet the unseen with a cheer for beneath the mutterings of the winds and the lashing of the waves, we can hear the gentle voice saying, "Be of good cheer, it is I, be not afraid."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

What Will Make the New Year the Best for the Sunday School. By Sylvester Whetstone

Time and time again I have made this statement, THE SUNDAY SCHOOL IS THE BIGGEST AND MOST IMPORTANT JOB THE UNITED STATES HAS ON ITS HAND AT THE PRESENT TIME. This, at first thought, may seem a little strong, but if you will only take the time to analyze it you will find that it is none too strong. Do not misunderstand me, I am not putting the Sunday school ahead of the church, but we must recognize the fact that the Sunday school is the teaching service of the church, and therefore it has a great work to do in this awful unrest that is sweeping over this fair land of ours.

If this nation averts a calamity, it will be because of the SELF-SACRIFICING, CONSECRATED EFFORTS of the men and women of God in this land and as such I want to appeal to you to put "punch" into your Sunday school work as never before. There never was a day in the history of the world when men and women, leaders in the great Sunday school work, had such an opportunity to do definite work and to make their efforts count for the best as this year offers. Sunday school workers, superintendents and teachers have the best year before them to gain the shoal of efficiency in the Sunday schools of their fields.

The people in general see plainly the need of a more efficient Sunday schools. Folks have awakened to a new vision. It is a higher religious education for the church; they want it; they feel the need of it. This is no time for any able-bodied man or woman to be dreaming, or complaining. The day calls for action, and the most vital action is that which will develop religious and moral consciousness in the hearts of the people. Never before has the imperative demand for better Sunday schools and better trained Sunday school leaders been so apparent as at the present time. Brother superintendent, or pastor, let us wake up, and put into this great and noble work, the very best that God has put in us. We need more leaders in this wonderful work who are not satisfied, those who have a vision of the great things that are before them, those who are always looking out in the future, never satisfied with what they have accomplished.

In order to make the new year the best for the Sunday school we must be willing to do our best; and in this there is a lot included. If only some Sunday school in the brotherhood could get every member to do his, or her best for a whole year, what would happen? Listen, that Sunday school would have unlimited power, it would do some wonderful things. Yet that is the very thing we are called upon to do. To make this new year, 1920, the best year for the Sunday school we must have a better and stronger organization than we had in 1919. We must meet our denominational standards better than we did during the past year. That means that we will do our best to gain the following:

1. Accurate Attendance Records of the entire school must be kept, (that does not mean that you must not give reports) and you must give to your state and national officers such reports as they call for.
2. An active Cradle Roll Department must be sustained.
3. Classes Organized. One or more in each the Adult and Young People's department, both with International Certificates and Brethren Seals.
4. A WORKING Home Department.
5. Training Work. This is very essential, and let every school in the brotherhood meet this point, make it one of your New Year's Resolutions.
6. A Graded School.
7. Graded Instruction in at least one Department.
8. Definite Missionary Instruction.
9. Delegates must be sent to some Sunday school convention, either county, state or national.
10. Temperance Instruction Quarterly.
11. The use of Brethren Literature.
12. Annual Offering for National Sunday School Work.

To make this the best year for the Sunday school, we must not only have organization, but we must have co-operation, upon these two rests the success of our Sunday school work for the new year, 1920. May God lead us on.

All together, for the best year ever.

New Year Letter

Dear Fellow Endeavorers:

There is something thrilling to me in the thought of the possible record on the 366 unwritten pages of 1920, before we begin to date our letters, "January 1, 1921." How many good deeds we may write on these pages! Alas, how many blots or blanks the record book of 1920 may show! Allow me to make some suggestions along Christian Endeavor lines, which, if put in force, will result in fewer blanks and blots, and in many splendid records.

First. Make 1920 peculiarly a YEAR OF PRAYER. I have written at some length on this all-important subject, for the January 1st issue of The Christian Endeavor World, and I will not repeat.

Second. Make 1920 really a NEW YEAR,—a year of new plans, new beginnings, fresh efforts. God will make a wholly new crop of leaves and flowers and fruits and grain and straw just for 1920, while some of us will be threshing over the old straw of 1900 or 1890. The programme and goals of our two years' Loyalty Campaign which closes in July, 1921 will give use all the new plans we can use and yet all will be rooted in the old principles which have made Christian Endeavor strong for nine and thirty years, just as God's new flowers and fruits will be rooted deep in old Mother Earth.

Third. Make 1920 a LARGE YEAR. Don't be contented with small gains, since large gains, with God's help, are always possible. Every one of our goals means enlargement, and they call for real, self-sacrificing effort. I should be ashamed of them if they did not. A small society has just as good a chance to make large gains as a big one. A society that grows from ten members to fifteen makes just as great a gain as one that grows from one hundred to one hundred and fifty. So with all the other goals. All spell l-a-r-g-e-r.

Fourth. Make 1920 a LONG YEAR. Leap year makes it one day longer than the last three have been. We can make it still longer by filling every day and week full of good, effective work in our committees and meetings. Some men live more (really longer) in one year, than others in ten. So it is with societies.

Fifth. Make 1920 a WIDE YEAR, a year of wide vision and effort. Embrace Asia and Africa and South America, Europe and Australia, in your vision, not only your society, union and state. In all of these lands our brothers live. The object of our Alumni Department is not simply to unite older and younger in a new fellowship, admirable as is this object, but to gain help from our graduates to enlarge our world-wide Christian Endeavor University. It is no selfish, narrow, provincial plan.

"The whole wide world for Jesus,

And Christian Endeavor for the whole wide world," might well be our Alumni motto.

Nineteen hundred and twenty,—if a NEW Year, a LARGE year, a LONG year, a WIDE-VISIONED year, and, from beginning to end, a year of PRAYER, will surely be a HAPPY year. This is my wish for you all, dear friends,

FRANCIS E. CLARK.

In connection with the foregoing letter we are glad to print a letter written by Brother Garber, our National President, and mailed to each of our societies. It is entitled

A NEW YEAR MESSAGE

Dear Endeavorers:

In his letter (See Brethren Evangelist) Dr. Clark urges us to strive to make 1920 a NEW year, a LARGE year, a LONG year, a WIDE-VISIONED year, pervaded with PRAYER. With these suggestions we most heartily concur, because those are steps to victory; and we are working to make 1920 VICTORY year, the year in which we attain all the goals of our Four Year Challenge, given in full on the back of this stationery.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WEEK—February 1-8—will afford another opportunity to make a winning drive for all the goals. But the week will be disappointing in results unless you plan early and definitely for its success. At the earliest possible moment the PRESIDENT should call a meeting of the CABINET, all officers and committee chairmen with the pastor, during which they check up on past attainments and prepare to attain all unattained goals. They should also plan to observe the special days suggested in the helps so far as local conditions will allow.

ASHLAND COLLEGE NIGHT will climax the week's effort. Superintendent Boardman will announce a special program at an early date, copies of which will be mailed each society in due time. In order that none be lost in the mails, will you, Mr. President or Miss Secretary, send me the name and address of the person to whom the programs should be mailed, stating the number your society will need? We are especially anxious that you make this the occasion of enlisting young people for Life Work. The Challenge calls for one or more recruits from each society for definite Christian work.

Other matters of PRESSING IMPORTANCE are: 1. The improvement of the Prayer Meeting and Personal Evangelism, service themes for January, which will be stressed through the Endeavor page of the Evangelist. Through personal work our Endeavorers may lead many young people to Christ and into fellowship with the church. 2. Missionary reading and study classes. The use of books dealing with South America and Africa should be encouraged. Particular volumes will be recommended through the Evangelist. 3. Expert Endeavor, a class in which, if organized at once, may be graduated during Christian Endeavor week, or one may be organized then. Ofttimes the work of the society fails because the workers are not informed as to its history, principles and methods.

Assuring you of my deep interest in your activities and praying that the New Year may be a Victory Year for your society and each member thereof, I am, Yours for Victory.

J. A. GARBER, Ashland, Ohio.

—IF—

1920 is to be a NEW YEAR

Societies will need a new set of officers. The need may be due the time of regular election, or it may arise from the fact of protracted indifference and neglect. In either case the officers need to be fired, not necessarily without, more vitally from within.

Endeavorers will need to assume new attitudes, including interests, enthusiasms and loyalties. To lack interest, want in enthusiasm and fail in loyalty is to render half-hearted service. Servants of Christ should avoid the attitude of a "slacker" as much as soldiers of Uncle Sam.

Officers and members, leaders and followers, will need a new determination to win. Apparently insurmountable obstacles are overcome by persons of the Napoleonic type who say there are no difficulties. Victory comes to people, soldiers and civilians alike, who share the spirit of "They shall not pass" and "We are here" and "After a thousand different thoughts one fixed purpose." Many plans there may be, but let there be ONE purpose—TO WIN. It will create new life and secure new victories.

J. A. GARBER.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HOME MISSION OFFERING PROMISES TO BE GOOD

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in very nicely. The churches are nearly all going away over the top,—some as high as $2.00 or more per member. Praise the Lord for this!

We wish when money is sent by individuals that they would always state in what church they hold their membership, so the proper church can be given credit in the annual report of the secretary, for it is my desire to show how much each church gave to missions during the year and we would appreciate it if those who have sent individual contributions would send me a card stating where they hold their membership, especially those whom it might be difficult for me to determine. For instance, some one living in Chicago sending me some money—since we have no church there, it would be impossible for me to tell what church to credit in my yearly report. If the pastors would give me a list of their members with their addresses I would have no trouble in giving proper credit. Some of the pastors have given me their lists and I thank them for same. Wish all of our pastors would do that much at least for the general missionary secretary, who is your servant.

I have received several large amounts from individuals living in states where we have no churches. One $100.00 check, some $50.00 checks and many smaller ones and they have not stated where they hold their membership. I have written some of them but that makes extra work; some reply they are holding their letters. Perhaps some of the pastors have lost track of some of these good brethren and sisters and it may be they are living near some other pastor's church and he does not know it. It seems to me if we have the co-operation we desire from our pastors that we may be able to give information from this office which will be valuable to the brotherhood.

We know you are very busy but if you cannot find time to furnish me with this list, please have your secretary or some other officer do it for you.

There are good members leaving our churches—moving to other states and we finally lose their addresses. A new pastor may come and being a stranger to the parties who have moved, correspondence may be discontinued and finally we lose sight of them entirely and they may join some other church, whereas if we kept in touch with them it would not be so likely to happen.

We trust the above suggestions may be complied with so that we will not lose track of any of our valuable members.

WILLIAM A. GEARHART,
General Missionary Secretary.

UNIONTOWN TO NAPPANEE

On the seventh of last September we handed in our resignation as pastor of the work at Uniontown with a request that we be permitted to leave after the first Sunday of November. The agreement under which we worked at Uniontown called for three months notice either way, but by consent of the church, owing to the coming of winter, we were privileged to leave on a shorter notice. For this accommodation we wish to thank the Uniontown people. After nearly four years and four months of service with the folks in the progressive city of Uniontown we accepted the call of the church at Nappanee, Indiana, and on the fifth day of November we made the change in location. It was with many regrets that we left the folks in Pennsylvania, for, taken as a whole, they treated us with respect and love. It is to be regretted that some things do not so nice creep into nearly all churches and their work, and at Uniontown we had our downs as well as our ups, but the ups were ever in the majority. We shall always try to remember the joys of our sojourn in the coke city. Many souls made the good confession during our ministry there, and our prayer is that all may rally to the work of the Master as he would have them do. Tearing away from the good people whom we had learned to know and love brought tears from those leaving and those left behind, yet they were the proper kind of tears. And such a farewell that the dear people of the church and town gave us! On Sunday morning after the services we were held up and with remarks of kindness and esteem we were presented with a purse of $153 which nearly floored us. Then on the Tuesday evening following, the last evening in town, there was planned and conducted as planned, a general reception by the church folks and the friends in general. Some two hundred, nearly three hundred, people gathered in the community house and with speeches, music and refreshments we were given our final good-bye. Here the friends outside the church added another $75 to the purse already presented us, and our cup of gratitude was filled to overflowing. Just think of it, $233 as a farewell gift! It surely looks as if we were appreciated at that. Again we wish to say, thank you, to all the dear ones left behind. Your tears and expressions of sorrow at our departure made us feel sad for the time, but now they are to us the love expressions of friends, and what is dearer to any one than to know that he has friends.

While in Uniontown we tried to take our part in the affairs of church and Sunday school in city and county, and in the course of our pastorate we preached or lectured in every corner of the county. It was also our privilege to serve as county officer in both Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. Our own work always came first, but other works put us before the people and redounded to the good of the Brethren church. Our affiliations with the other ministers of the town were of the closest. The last year of our pastorate we were honored with the presidency of the city ministerium. For all these tokens of respect and confidence we tried to show our gratitude by throwing ourselves into the tasks at hand without reserve. Five revival meetings held in our church during our pastorate were conducted by the pastor unassisted by any outside help. The church choir and other workers did their best along with the pastor and we had results every time. At Easter season we conducted a week of meetings each year, and it was our desire and our efforts were to be of general use in all the work of the church. Now if we failed in any part, we at least did our best and we would have those noticing mistakes take the same to head and not to heart. Sorrow also crossed our path in Uniontown. Flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone lies buried in the adjoining cemeteries, but God has wiped away our tears and at the great day we will meet those whom he has called so early in life. We again thank those who came so close to us during our hours of bereavement. God bless every one of you. There are too many things that we enjoyed while in this pastorate to mention in detail, and our sorrows we do not care to rehearse, so it must suffice to say thank you to all and express our love as best possible in cold words, and to also give you an invitation to call on us at any time.

After we left Uniontown we were wondering what we would find at Nappanee, and our anticipations were realized. We expected to find some of God's own people, and we did. They were on hand to meet us when our train pulled into the depot, and they have been as nice as possible ever since. Only three weeks have elapsed since our arrival here, so we have not done more than get settled at this time. Of course we preached on the Sundays, and to increasingly large crowds. The Sunday school here is a hummer. Brother Harry Price, the superintendent, has gathered an efficient corps of teachers and officers about him and the school is keeping around the three hundred and twenty-five mark in attendance. Friday evening after we arrived here the members of the church and their friends gave us a formal reception. Brethren Thomas of Warsaw, Duker and MacLuturf of Goshen and Kolb of Milford were on hand to help make the affair run smoothly. The local ministers were also on hand and we had a jolly time together. The church was well filled and the social committee furnished refreshments to all after the addresses and response were made. We were made to feel at home, and with so many people of Pennsylvania origin we can almost imagine ourselves in old Pennsylvania. But then we are now Hoosiers, and it is our desire that we may become all that the nickname implies, for Hoosier being interpreted means Hustler. Already we have been in session with the ministers of the town and find them a bunch of mixers. Our lines have fallen in pleasant places, and in order to keep us sweet we do not want anybody to say anything about moving for years and years and years. We have had enough of the moving proposition for one life-time and from this on we believe more firmly in long pastorate. Nappanee looked good to us the first time we saw it and it looks better every day. Our hope and prayer is that we may be used of the Lord to bring souls to Him and make the church a good pastor. A policy of give and take on the part of people and pastor will make possible a long and successful pastorate, and we feel that the good folks here will co-operate in all things for the growth of the Kingdom as they have done in the years gone by. We will try to have something more soon.. As we become acquainted with the work we can write more intelligently. We are planning for a revival meeting to commence about the second week of January and ask an interest in the prayers of God's children in our behalf. We have some other things planned that will be spoken of as soon as we get to them. But above all we are going to put our best efforts forth in preaching the whole Word of God, for that is the thing most needed in these trying and perilous times. It will bring the results that God wants, so let us preach it with all our might, the Holy Spirit of God helping us. In closing I cannot help uttering a word of sympathy to Brother Rollier and his little girls and a prayer that God use them to his glory. Amen!

E. P. MILLER.

FILLMORE, CALIFORNIA

To the Evangelist Family. I am sending you a small report of our work at Fillmore to let you know that the new church here is still alive and busy. On Tuesday evening, October 7, we began a Bible conference here that lasted three days and was well attended for this field, and the interest was good. We had with us as speakers the following brethren of South California, L. S. Bauman, N. W. Jennings, Thomas H. Broad, A. V. Kimmell and J. C. Beal. These brethren rendered fine service and this was a treat of good things for the little group of faithful believers in Fillmore. By former arrangements we had engaged Brother Broad of LaVerne to remain for two weeks more and assist us in a meeting, and as a result of this there were four confessions and reconsecrations and the church strengthened. The fight here is a hard one because of the very worldly conditions and the low spiritual conditions of the community as you may guess when we have two other churches here and one of them has had no confessions for more than one year and the other one for almost a year. And there has been no revival effort in either one of them for two years. The Brethren church here on the coast has a different field from the east for several reasons. First, folks coming to the Pacific coast seem to leave their Christianity on the east side of the Rocky Mountains, and drop in here to have a good time. And all the isms let loose in all the country, you will find them here in California.

Our Sunday school is growing and we have two live Christian Endeavor societies, Intermediates and Seniors. We have a splendid plant here and in time hope for a strong church. The little group of followers here are faithful and loyal. We stand for the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing less and on this plea we fight. SYLVESTER LOWMAN.

PLEASANT GROVE CHURCH, IOWA

Dear Evangelist Readers: I expect you have been wondering what has become of Pleasant Grove church people. We are still here, thanks be to Providence, and on the road to recovery, as the Lord has not forgotten us and has given us a pastor in the person of Brother Homer Anderson of Indiana. He came here in October to hold a revival meeting which continued for two weeks. The weather and roads were bad, but the result of the meeting was that seven came out on the Lord's side and one was reclaimed. On the 3rd of November, a reception was held at the James Ballard home for the pastor, and also a farewell for Mr. and Mrs. Ballard and family as they are going to spend the coming year in California. Brother Anderson will occupy Mr. Ballard's house while they are gone, which makes it nice for him as it is close to the church.

Our Sunday school is progressing fine under the leadership of Brother Art Miller, and our Woman's Missionary Society is going along fine also. We ask an interest in the prayers of the churches.

Yours in his name,
MRS. LUELLA BELL.
North English, Iowa.

MATHIAS, WEST VIRGINIA

A report of the work at this place was expected sooner, but has been delayed.

About the middle of August the writer began a meeting at the Kinsey's Run church which is under the same management as the church at this place, and continued for two weeks, and having fourteen conversions we received them all into the Brethren church by baptism. The outlook there is good. The evening before beginning this meeting we received one into the church here by baptism, here, being led by L. G. Wood of Roanoke, Virginia, and by his efficient work for two weeks, fifteen have been received into the church already.

During this meeting we held our Communion meeting, which was well attended; something like one hundred twenty-five to one hundred forty being at the tables.

We consider the meeting a success, and the membership appreciates the effort made and the good work done by Brother Wood.

We are now planning for our Christmas exercises. ARTHUR SNIDER.

LONG BEACH, CALIFORNIA

At our regular quarterly business meeting in October, the church gave a unanimous call to Brother Bauman for the eighth year of service here with substantial increase in salary.

The church also decided to have a week or ten days' revival services before the fall communion, so November the 16th these services began. Our pastor very forcibly held forth the Christ, and God's mercy, righteousness and the judgments to come. Brother E. C. Wilson led the song services. As a visible result about twenty confessed the Christ as their Savior and King. Altogether twenty-seven have been baptized since our last report. These services closed the 26th with a very enjoyable communion service.

November 28th at the regular monthly meeting of the World Wide Missionary Society the Compton Avenue church of Los Angeles gave us a program consisting of candle talks and songs, each one lighting his candle from another at his first appearing, showing that thus the light must be brought to those who walk in darkness.

Brother Beal gave a very vivid picture of our work in Kentucky when it began, and the first time he was down there, and what it is now.

We had a chance to buy the lot north of the church at a bargain. This lot and a new heating plant and street paving and sewer and some other improvements on the building amounted to $2,885.00. This amount we raised on Thanksgiving Day, and services after.

At one of our prayer meetings it was made known that the Krypton Mission needed a piano, and the Rempel's needed some furniture. A subscription was started which amounted to $357.75. Brethren Gearhart and Cobb of Dayton, Ohio, are to buy the piano and send it down there.

The World Wide Missionary Society raised $160.61 to be used for outfit of Miss Hillegas, or some other outgoing missionary, if she does not go. For China, India and other missions there has gone through the church treasury $245.00 making a total of $763.36. Our portion for General Home Missions we pay out of the e hucubhdvhanrinaldBiErgN4,Of the church budget.

We do not believe in salvation by works, but in showing our faith by our works. We contemplate having another revival this winter and are praying and looking for the best year of the church.

Our pastor is now relieved of the secretaryship of the Foreign Missionary Society, so has more time to give to pastoral work.

N. C. NIELSEN.

SYDNEY, INDIANA

Sydney is in the midst of an interesting revival meeting, led by the Richer Brothers,—evangelist, singer, and pianist. A few Sundays ago was Rally Day with us, but now we are sure we can do better; so are making each Sunday a Rally Day and looking forward to the last Sunday as the climax of the meeting and the best day in the history of the church.

EULA MARIE BROWN,
Corresponding Secretary.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

On October 28, Brother Miller began a series of meetings at Salem school house, and continued two weeks. The weather was bad the most of the time, the roads being so bad that cars could hardly get over them. The weather conditions greatly hindered the attendance but the house was full most of the time. There were no conversions, but we hope the seed was sown that may be reaped later on. Brother Miller kept busy through the day visiting the scattered members and urging them to come to church, and considering all the hindrances we had a good meeting.

We are not entertaining any hope of having a church building at Salem soon but we have a nice new school house and we hope to be able to continue services in it. We desire the prayers of the brotherhood that the work may revive here and that much good may be done through the coming year.

Sunday, school and prayer meetings continue with good interest.

MRS. ESSIE BOOTHE.

ASHLAND, OREGON

Editor the Evangelist: Last Sunday the little band of Brethren in Ashland were made to rejoice when two of those on our prayer list made the good confession (Rom. 10:9, 10) and were baptized (Acts 2:41) and were received into the church by the laying on of hands (Acts 8:17; Numbers 8:10; 27:19). Our joy has been increased because last week Sister Vianna Detwiler, came among us to help us in the work. We were sorely in need of assistance and how glad we are that the Lord through the Mission Board sent her. The old saying that it never rains unless it pours was verified by Brother A. V. Kimmell stopping over with us two nights and a day this week. He preached for us last night and this morning went on to Sunnyside, Washington. We would be glad to have brethren passing through Ashland to do as Brother Kimmell did. If it is impossible to stop over any one passing through and letting us know on what day and number of train we would be glad to meet them at the station as the trains all stop here 20 minutes. Thus we might get to see each other and get acquainted. Our phone number is 498-R, our street number 216 Factory. We are glad for the brotherly spirit toward the band of believers at this place and, like Paul as he neared Rome, thank God and are of good courage.

D. M. BROWER, M. D.

PLEASANT GROVE, IOWA

Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things, whatsoever I have commanded you and lo, I am with you always even unto the end of the world. Surely the Lord has been with us, and blessed our work here. We held very short meeting, only eleven nights, that should have been fourteen, but rain prevented us and the worst was on the last Sunday night. So with corn husking and rainy weather we closed our revival with seven baptized and one renewal, making eight in all. On Monday night, the third of November, 62 persons called at the parsonage and gave us a hearty welcome as their pastor and presented us with many good things to eat. We had a two-fold affair. Brother and Sister Ballard and family left their home to us while they go to California for a visit and for the health of Brother Ballard. The party was for the pastor and the Ballards. A splendid good time was enjoyed. A three course supper was served to all. Pleasant Grove is the oldest church in Iowa and has had but three pastors. Brother John Myers organized this church and served it 37 years. Brother Myers has set a mark in Iowa that no one need not be ashamed of. He is not dead but liveth still. Brother Tom Miller was their first hired pastor, and he will be long remembered for the work done here. I am their third pastor and I am doomed to leave a record. Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. May I always say, Thy will be done and not mine.

HOMER ANDERSON.

IN WEST VIRGINIA

If you were tired of the monotonous landscape and the endless range of prairie in our central states, then a trip to the West Virginia hills would rest your vision and give you a new perspective on old mother earth. If you were weary with the rush and swirl of frenzied industry, the dearth of common religious faith and the dwarfing of religious consciousness, a trip to these same hills would rest your soul and cheer the heart.

We have recently had the privilege of spending three weeks in Christian service and fellowship in that field and it has been one of the pleasantest periods of service we have enjoyed in the Lord's vineyards.

Here the handiwork of God is piled and terraced in wondrous profusion, buttressed and bulwarked in everlasting grandeur and here is still found the simplicity, the sincerity, the sanity and sanctity of pure Americanism and common religious faith, the safeguards of our democracy and our religion.

From the thriving and beautiful city of Parkersburg at the junction of the Ohio and Kanawha rivers you may follow the trail of the latter stream for thirty miles to south-east and then turn aside for ten miles through the vale of a tributary creek and then ascend the trail to the top of one of the red clay and limestone hills and "viewing the landscape o'er you may count—if the day is clear—eight or ten little white churches and as many schools crowning the hilltops far and near. Here for more than a hundred years pure democracy and simple faith have been kindling their altar fires and rearing homes and temples. Isolation and rock-ribbed hills have stayed the hand of material progress and diverted the currents of travel and transportation with the subsequent losses in material, social, educational and perhaps some religious advantages.

There is however some compensation for those privations. Here the boasted vanity of a veneered civilization is not found; here the superficial in social and religious life is a minus quantity and the plain free-hearted American reigns supreme, unspoiled by luxuries, content without the fads and vagaries of society "so-called," industrious and frugal but not opulent, comfortably housed, sensibly and sufficiently clothed, heartily and nourishingly fed, enjoying the fruitage of his hill-side farms and orchards and the profits of "flocks and herds upon a thousand hills." The old well stoop with windless and bucket draws water from rock-bewn cisterns in the limestone strata supplied from dripping eaves and not from veins and fountains underneath. Thus the clearest sweetest rainwater one ever drank supplies the thirst of man and beast or fills the kettles of the cooks, while rippling creeks and singing brooks water the pasture vales and call to flocks and herds to come down from lofty hillsides to drink and lie down beside the babbling waters.

In many homes the old fashioned fireplace with front and back log, tongs and andirons still hallows the home with its cheerful glow and genial warmth and the sacred memories of the days of the pioneer; the beneficent rural mail carrier, the endless fibers of the telephone system, the proverbial "tin Lizzie" and others of her more pretentious kin add a touch of modernism to the rural life, that offsets the presence of the oldtime grain cradle and other instruments or customs of other days now so seldom seen in our broad land.

But more than all these considerations it was indeed a real pleasure to spend four Sundays and the intervening three weeks in gospel service among this people. Satisfaction indeed to stand on the hillside or in the church-yard some dark night and see the lanterns flickering among vales and hills in all directions as the people came down the trails, around the brow of the hill and over rough and stony highways through mud and mist or rain, just to hear the gospel story; interesting truly to see old men and women, boys and girls coming to church on horseback day or night, moonlight or dark. It was a busy time as work was piling up on their hands because of previous bad weather but the good brother-pastor took a vacation from the farm and said I have quit work till the meetings are over and so gave himself loyally to the service and of course others caught the spirit and did the same. We had forenoon sessions for special prayer and Bible study, a service highly appreciated by all who attended. They did not grow weary nor fret for the dinner hour. They are not descendants of "Esau" but by common consent work and dinner tarried till they were satisfied at the Lord's table and especially on Sundays dinner is a secondary consideration with these folks. It's the Lord's house first and by mutual custom the community never worries about the Sunday dinner hour.

We learned to love this genial people, many of whom are the Lord's own with love for his truth and cause. With the pastor we climbed the hills and descended to the vales or rode behind his steady grays and mingled and mixed with the people in their homes, sat with them around their frugal but bountiful tables, sat with the families and neighbors who gathered in around the fireside to spend the afternoons in song and prayer and conversation about spiritual things, admonished the saints and warned and invited the sinners. Truly such experiences are not only too rare but also too rarely possible in many of our Christian communities, and it was a rare treat to tarry in the midst of such environments. The moral standards of the community were very high, and I have never seen better respect and order in the Lord's house among the young folks of any community. In all the three weeks it was not necessary to give one public rebuke for disturbance or disorder during services. We feel deep regrets that such a fine bunch of young folks are cut off by isolation from any high school privileges nearer than thirty or forty miles from their homes, as the small towns have only the grades, but the world will hear from some of them nevertheless.

The first week our meeting was hindered by the absence on account of sickness, of the organist and her husband the chorister, and rains and storms cut in on the last week badly. Also until the middle of the last week two other meetings were being held not far away, however we had good crowds most of the time. One soul already a professor but seeking more truth and a church home applied for membership. Many unconverted were interested but the spirit's work was not finished before we had to leave. Unanimous words of appreciating and a splendid offering were showered upon us with a hearty invitation to return at some not distant date and serve them again. We appreciated very much the helpful co-operation of the United Brethren. Many of their members, especially the young people took a hearty interest and helped in our song and choir service. We closed with the communion service with a small band of members and there was one of the best audiences of the whole meeting. The house was full and at least two-thirds were young folks in teens and twenties, the finest kind of reverence and quiet behavior was manifested through the whole service and I have seldom looked into the faces of such a fine bunch of young folks in any audience in any community.

The Brethren have had a church here for over fifty years and the forefathers lie in the churchyard near by. Showalter, Park and Gault, Graybill and others are ancestral names in the congregation and Brother B. H. Showalter is the modest but highly esteemed pastor, a plain man of the people, called from the ranks some few years ago. His genial and hospitable home was our headquarters. The pastor has the work on his heart and say, brother business manager at Ashland, I think if you will get in touch with this pastor you will find an Evangelist Honor Roll church in the hills of Wirt county that perhaps ought to have had first or near first place in your list. We had planned to organize a Christian Endeavor society for these folks but at the time set apart weather and other conditions defeated the plan. It's coming later however. Both going and returning we were entertained over night in Parkersburg by our dear brother Elder Henry Wise at the magnificent and hospitable home of his son, Dr. Wise, Parkersburg's most honored physician and who with his noble companion—a native of the heaths and welds of old England—are strong factors in the uplift and progress of Parkersburg. May the Lord bless the little church, the Prosperity congregation near Palestine and Elizabeth in Wirt county, West Virginia.

But I must add a postscript. While sitting at my table writing up this bit of news I hear a knock at the door and without further ado it opens and in comes a dozen and a half of my former parishioners of the Pleasant Hill (Ohio) church from which pastorate I recently resigned to take up evangelistic work, and they pile the table and the floor with baskets and sacks and bundles and cans, a veritable shower of potatoes, flour, beans, meal, canned fruit, jellies, bread, sugar, lard, and "such like," "etc," "et al," "et cetera." What do you know about that, a shower and donation two months and a half after you have resigned a pastorate, can you beat it, brethren? Well, it certainly gives us the proverbial feeling "gone but not forgotten," and this certainly means more to us than if it had been done during our pastorate and it shows a fine spirit and willingness to give a life and a boost to the man (and his family) whom they know and believe in as ready and waiting for a devoted and strenuous service in the evangelistic field but who thus far has almost been overlooked in spite of all the cry about revivals in every congregation and such a scarcity of evangelists, and such great need of workers in the field, etc., etc. Now come along folks, it's your move! Who wants an evangelistic campaign, a sane and systematic hunt for souls, a live program of gospel sermons, a warm hearted service and a glad hand to boost the Lord's work in your congregation and community? POSITIVELY this is THE THIRD and LAST CALL and ANNOUNCEMENT in the columns of the Evangelist.

An evangelistic meeting or a Bible institute, either one or both, what will you have? ON TO GREATER DIFFICULTIES

The hope expressed in the last report of the Hollywood Mission, for the recovery of its founder, Sister Ollie Hayes, was not to be realized. She has gone ahead to pave the way for the rest of the family, and for others in her little parish who are beginning to look her way. Her last effort to speak was to assure the friends that she was wanting to go Home, and yet she seemed to be waiting for the completion of her part of the Hollywood work. The Tent Meeting had been over several weeks, the new converts organized for service, and while I was making the record of the two years' work, the end came to her who began its work. The happy features in the continuation of the mission, is the readiness with which the converts are putting on the harness. All but one led in public prayer at my last meeting with the women, which makes my leaving the logical thing to do, so long as Brother Miller meets with them each week.

Now I am on my way to Ashland, Oregon, according to National Conference arrangements. I am told on every hand that it is a field fraught with difficulties,—of a different kind than any met with at any former place,—a long and troubled past, yet with scarcely a dozen members! If the voice of the church is the voice of God in this call, then there is a power awaiting to meet the situation. One thing is very evident, there must be imbedded in some heart there a jewel of rare faith, to have any remnant left at all. Let this be a loud call to prayer, to you who have stood with me through other fields; and my promise is yours again, as at Spokane, that I will not desert the post till the hand of God in the work can be plainly seen by others.

To secure the best equipment for Bible teaching in the new field at Ashland, Oregon, it was necessary to go by Seattle, the New York of the West. After crossing the winding Columbia it was an uplifting ride to the summit of the fir-clad Cascades—a group of perfectly formed columns, then a pyramid of sand piled there by the wind. The peaks of the Cascades are volcanic and later in formation than the Rockies, and they are higher also. The highest in the Northwest is Mt. Rainier (14,444 feet), not far to the left of the railroad. Beyond Seattle, and near the coast, are the towering Olympic.

Seattle is the most variegated city yet. There is no attempt to follow the cardinal points, cut up as it is by a half dozen lakes and bays dipping in from Puget Sound. Within sight of snow-capped mountains, ever changing are glowing pink and purple veiled sunsets that enrapture. The promise made a neighbor before leaving the east, to visit her boy, gave occasion to take the tourist's most interesting trip, an hour on the water to Bremerton, where is located Uncle Sam's big naval base training camp and dry docks. Across the water from this is the War Veteran's Home. It is here where the famous Pacific fleet made its spectacular sweep through the sound in the month of September, 1919.

The place for the landing of our boat was quite near the Alaska S. S. line, on which my friend had recently returned from a trip to Skagway, Alaska, a thousand miles from her home in Seattle. On the elevated street leading up to the dock is a bit of Alaska itself. The shop is labelled "The Hudson Bay Company." How closely it is related to the company of merchants of the same name who had their trading posts scattered over the island of Vancouver, a night to the north, I did not try to discover. However, they have the goods; raw fur from Alaska being made into all kinds of clothing. In striking evidence are the models of Totem Poles with their grotesque designs, yet appealing as we think of the Indian heathenism it represents.

While Seattle is the gateway to the Orient as well as to Alaska, Portland is the gateway to the great Columbia basin, full of wheat. It is also the largest lumber producing city in the world, for there is yet 17,000,000 acres of standing timber in Oregon, the greatest lumber state in the Union. Dundee, 30 miles to the south of Portland, has the largest English walnut grove in the United States.

A NEW BRETHREN PREACHER

The subject of this sketch is Robert Goshorn, born of North Manchester. At the National Conference, last fall I first met him. Just dismissed from service, he with his father attended the Conference and told me of the intention of the "boy" to come to our town to study in our college here with incinations for the ministry. He was here less than one month, when our Sunday school elected him to the superintendency. I asked him on several occasions to do things for the church and his striking answer was, "Anything—so it is a Christian work." This greatly impressed me as a fine spirit of a young man just out of the army and not yet 25 years old. I got his history and these are some of the salient points of it. Grandson of a Church of the Brethren preacher; son of an educated farmer, Martin R. Goshorn of Clay City; graduate of high school at 17; a year at state Normal at Terre Haute; ten months in the service in France where he was promoted to be First Sergeant of the army Engineers' Corps. He at once proved his ability and leadership in forcing a decided gain in our Sunday school in the short time of three months. After securing the unanimous approval of his home congregation and the assent of the Indiana Board of Ministerial Examiners, our church gave its unanimous consent for his ordination to preach and we gladly present him to the brotherhood and the Indiana churches for "anything that is Christian work." He can sing, has already preached his trial sermon and will attempt an evangelistic campaign if invited. Churches desiring to try out a young man, can write him here.

MINUTES OF THE CONFERENCE OF OHIO BRETHREN CHURCHES AT CANTON, NOVEMBER 4 TO 7

The conference of the Ohio Brethren churches was called to order at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday evening by Elder W. S. Bell in the absence of both the Moderator and Vice-Moderator. While the fair sized audience was engaged in an inspirational song service, Moderator J. A. Garber arrived and assumed charge of the meeting. Elder Alvin Byers delivered the "Address of Welcome" in place of D. F. Eikenberry, who was absent on election board duty. Moderator Garber fittingly replied to the kind words of welcome and then introduced the first speaker of the conference, Dr. J. Allen Miller. The evening sessions of the conference took on a new feature and it worked out very satisfactorily. The Canton congregation held revival services during the evening with W. S. Bell as evangelist. Dr. Bell's work was introduced with a Bible lecture by Dr. Miller. Dr. Miller's work as an expositor of the Bible needs no additional word, it is priceless and not only were the delegates instructed but the Canton people as well. Dr. Miller's lecture, designed as an aid to Dr. Bell's evangelistic sermons, was followed by the sermon. The subject of the Bible lecture was "The Personality of Jesus," John 1:1-18. The text of the sermon, "The Place of Prayer in the Christian Life," Eph. 1:1-18.

The only item of business transacted during this session was the appointment of the Credential Committee, as follows:—G. L. Maas, E. M. Cobb, L. E. Hang. The song service of this session was very spirited under the able direction of Brother F. E. Clapper of Louisville.

Wednesday Morning—Business Session

After a short song and prayer service, the regular conference business was taken up.

Report of Trustees of The Brethren Home, by Elder Wombold, secretary, read by W. A. Gearhart:

... Financial Statement of The Board of Trustees of The Brethren Home of Ohio:

To the Conference of the Brethren Church Assembled: Greeting:

We, the members of the Board of Trustees of the Brethren Home of Ohio, beg leave to submit the following financial statement:

RESOURCES

Certificate of Deposit in The West
Dayton Com. & Savings Bank, ...	$ 6,623.69
George F. Keim, Note secured by mortgage,	3,422.72
Elmer Wombold, Note secured by mortgage,	218.00
Mansfield Brethren Church, Note secured by mortgage,	657.29
	$10,921.70

NO LIABILITIES

Respectfully Submitted,
ELMER WOMBOLD, Secretary.

The report was accepted and ordered incorporated in the minutes.

Report of the Ministerial Examining Board, by Dr. J. Allen Miller:

The ordination of the following candidates for the ministry were reported for the year, —M. B. Spacht, Williamstown; T. Darley Allen, Cleveland; and T. R. Atkinson, Ashland. By action of the conference the report was made a part of the minutes.

After some discussion, by vote, the conference decided that some action be taken to set some standard of requirements to guide the future action of the Board. A committee composed of J. Allen Miller, H. M. Oberholtzer and E. A. Rowsey was appointed to draw up such a standard and submit it to the body of ministerial delegates present for their approval, at some later session of the conference.

Nominating Committee for Trustee of The Brethren Home, by motion duly passed by the conference, the moderator appointed Dyoil Belote, W. A. Gearhart and S. M. Loose as a committee to name a candidate to fill the vacancy on the Board of Trustees of the Brethren Home created by the expiration of the term of Elmer Wombold.

Election of Member of Ministerial Examining Board, A. D. Cnagay was re-elected.

Statistician's Report, by E. G. Mason. Owing to the fact that only 19 of the 32 churches in Ohio reported, the report is somewhat unreliable, the churches reporting in full are:—New Lebanon, Fairview, West Alexandria, Greta, Fostoria, Bear Creek, Gratis, Camden, Fremont, Canton, Columbus, Louisville, North Georgetown, Dayton, Ashland, Fair Haven, Bryan, Ankenytown and Zion Hill. The report follows:

Statistical Report

The churches not reporting are: Mt. Zion, Buckeye City, North Liberty, Clayton, Glenford, Homerville, Mansfield, Miamisburg, Middlebranch, Bethesda, Pleasant Hill, Rittman and Williamstown. It is hoped that next year the statistician will be able to get a full report from each of the Ohio churches so that Ohio's share of the National report shall not be less than it should be and that the next year's report at the state Conference shall be complete. Our rating as a church is based upon our statistical report, may this report be complete from this time on.

Committee for Revision of Statistical Blanks. By motion of the conference the National Secretary, Dyoil Belote and State Secretary, E. G. Mason were appointed to draw up a more systematic blank for the approval of the conference.

Report of the Board of Evangelists. This report was made by each member of the Board individually on the spiritual and financial condition of the several churches under its supervision. The following members made verbal reports,—J. A. Miller, H. M. Oberholtzer, S. M. Loose, Dyoil Belote, J. A. Garber, and E. M. Cobb for W. C. Teeter.

Nominating Committee for Board of Evangelists.—M. B. Spacht, Mrs. N. G. Kimmel, and Mrs. John Barringer were named to constitute a committee to submit nominations for the Board.

Mission Board Report. E. F. Miller, secretary of the Board submitted his report and the treasurer's report was read and referred to an auditing committee composed of Alvin Byers, Mrs. J. F. Painter and W. A. Gearhart.

Conference Session

The general subject of this session was called, "Facing Future Opportunities and Responsibilities." The first address was made by Geo. S. Baer. His subject, "The Challenge of Unattained Goals." The speaker held himself closely to the Four Year Program. He outlined the goals that were not making a healthy advancement and gave as possible reasons for this a general lapse in the spiritual activities of the church. This spiritual condition must be built up or our goals will suffer. He said that the lame features of the Four Year Program Committee was the incomplete reports received. The reasons given for these incomplete reports are, (1) lack of accomplishment on the part of the individual churches and (2) lack of organization in the churches. Since all addresses given during the conference will appear in the Evangelist from time to time the secretary will not make complete extracts.

2. "Our Resources and their Availabilities," by G. L. Maus. The speaker reviewed the necessity of the budget system in the financing of our churches. He ended with an appeal to all the Ohio churches to concentrate their efforts upon placing their finances on a sound business basis. This address will appear later in full.

Moderator's Address. Moderator Garber reviewed the year's work and outlined a series of plans for accomplishment during the coming year.

We can only give an outline summary of his appealing message: since we met at Fremont eighteen months have passed as a series of lights and shadows with the lights predominating. Then we were baffled with the disquieting uncertainty relative to the termination of the war. Later we were confronted with the trying disappointments incident to the Flu epidemic. Fortunately, however, relatively few of our workers were claimed by the ravages of war and disease, no ministers, and the work, while retarded, made substantial progress. Most of our churches maintained previous records and some experienced commendable increase numerically and spiritually. The purchase, renovation and dedication of a church building at Camden where we have a new church with almost a hundred members deserves special mention. The leader of this movement, without promise or aid from the Mission Board, was our Brother Sylvester Lowman who is doing a similar work in Southern California. Brother Bell is another pastor who migrated to the same district, while Brother McClain left us for Pennsylvania. In return we have received valuable additions in the personnel of Brethren Cobb of Dayton, Cook of Salem, Kinzie of New Lebanon and West Alexandria and Riddle of Louisville. The latter succeeded Brother Baer who was promoted to the editorial sanctum of the Brethren Evangelist.

The future appears to be both challenging and promising. In the early stages of the Great War, men, even churchmen, yielding to impulse made bold to say Christianity has failed and the church collapsed. But a saner view has led us to see the world catastrophe was not an occasion for despair, rather an opportunity for service, and it is heartening to recall how the people learned to serve individually and collectively, even sacrificially. The quite general response has strengthened our confidence in the people's capacity for Christian service on an hitherto undreamed of scale. This assurance coupled with the deepened convictions that the Christian way is the only way for individuals and nations has called forth unmatched programs of Christian activity. Those initiated by progressive denominations evoked favorable comment, but the outstanding program is the one fearlessly proposed by the Interchurch World Movement, which seeks not organic union but church co-operation. After citing statistics disclosing the unaccomplished task of the church at home and abroad, the speaker said this Movement proposed a World Survey of these conditions that the unfinished work confronting co-operating Protestantism may be visualized by and distributed among the churches thereof. No church, he thought, had anything to lose by entering the movement but everything to gain. Accordingly our Ohio churches were urged to prepare for participation. But in doing so, he continued, we must not allow the imperative interests of our Four Year Program to go by default. Praise is due past attainments but more Ohio churches must step into front line position. Churches responding to Brother Beachler's endorsement appeal have given liberally, but let there be increasing liberality at this point. To neglect our only college is to court disaster. To tune up all the work of all the churches the moderator recommended a series of institutes for Bible study and efficiency studies and evangelism. One in each church would be ideal. With an earnest appeal, he said, this can be made a victory year for Ohio, if we leave Canton determined to render sacrificial service.

Wednesday Afternoon—Sunday School Session

After an inspirational song and prayer service, in the absence of G. W. Kinzie, who was to have appeared next upon the program, E. M. Cobb delivered an impromptu message on the subject, "Devotional Message from Our Textbook." He used the Bible as the textbook and the fifth chapter of Romans as the text. The message was truly a live-wire message.

Report of the President of the Mission Board, A. D. Gnagay. It was an interesting, complete and carefully prepared report, and showed thorough knowledge of the missions of the state. In general, it revealed very satisfactory progress in practically all the mission points, and some will soon be self-supporting. Plans for further progress were announced.

Without objection, the Mission Board was empowered with the authority to provide the secretary with whatever literature is needed to collect the apportionments from the several churches.

Children's Division Program. This address was to have been delivered by Mrs. Louis Clapper, but in her absence, Mrs. N. G. Kimmel very ably discussed the topic. She emphasized strongly the necessity of appealing to the interest of the children through the eye and of purchasing whatever apparatus is necessary for carrying on the work in this way.

The Organized Class at Work, by A. L. Lynn. This address will appear soon in the pages of the Evangelist, so no reference will be made in these minutes except that you can not afford to miss reading it when it appears.

Discussion on the above was led by A. D. Gnagay. He emphasized the necessity of each organized class to get some unconverted person or persons in it and then to convert them. This should be the goal of each organized class. He made repeated references to the organized class as recorded in Acts 10.

The next number on the program was indeed a rare treat. P. H. Welshimer of Canton, pastor-superintendent of the largest Sunday school of the world delivered an inspirational address. He voiced the difficulties encountered in organizing and holding together a Bible school. The training of soldiers has not been an incentive to Bible study. This condition and other conditions that have arisen out of the world war have made it harder to keep the church alive. In outlining the needs of the Bible school, the speaker stressed two points: (1) The Bible school needs a developed conscience. Ohio was voted dry because it had a developed conscience. Ten years ago without this developed conscience, this would have been impossible. All leaders of the church must be linked up with the Bible school to make it a success. (2) The Bible school needs a vision. It must see its possibilities and work toward their attainment. The Bible school has much to do with the revival services of the church. Its chief function is the teaching service that it renders to the church. The boys and girls may be won to Jesus Christ, if we give them a square deal. The logical way to get people to do right is to teach them right. The teacher is the greatest factor in the world today and the biggest thing about a great teacher is his personality. He further enumerated the requisites of successful Bible school work.

(1) The genuinely all right teacher. He must have great faith; if he has this he has something to teach. (2) He must be capable. He must be prepared. His ability must be respected. Every teacher may be as good a teacher as he wants to be, if he wants to be hard enough. (3) He must be interested in his work. The interested teacher will be an associate pastor.

After the speaker had finished, Moderator Garber gave the following definition of a teacher, "A teacher is one who has head enough, heart enough and time enough to become a master in the Kingdom of Life."

Election of Board of Evangelists. The nominating committee recommended the re-election of the old Board with the exception of W. C. Teeter, who desired to be excused. E. M. Cobb was named in his place. The report was accepted and the Board elected.

The Report of the Auditing Committee. The committee reported the books of the Mission Board correct. The report was accepted.

Treasurer of the Mission Board. By motion, the conference decided to refer the nomination of a treasurer of the Mission Board to the other members of the Board.

Election of Trustee of the Brethren Home. The committee reported the nomination of M. D. Kerr of Bryan to succeed Elmer Womhold as member of the Board of Trustees. Mr. Kerr was elected. The change was made because it was thought advisable to scatter the membership of the Board more widely.

Committee for Presentation of Plans for Carrying Out the Policies of the Conference. By vote of the conference the moderator was authorized to appoint a committee to formulate such plans, for the approval of the conference. G. S. Baer, A. D. Gnagay and A. L. Lynn were named.

Committee for Amending the Constitution and By-Laws. With the consent of the conference, J. Allen Miller and E. G. Mason were named.

Election of Delegates to the Interchurch World Movement. Dr. J. Allen Miller and J. A. Garber were nominated and elected, and the secretary was instructed to reply to the communication of the Ohio Federation of churches and inform them of the election so made. (To be continued.)

COLLEGE NEWS

School closed the Friday before Christmas for the holidays. Most of the students went home, but some stayed and found employment in the city. It is hoped that some of the students may bring others who have not been here before back with them. One could not do a young person a greater favor than to be instrumental in getting him interested in attending college.

I had the very good fortune to attend a meeting in honor of the service men of Johnstown, Pennsylvania church, on December 14th. The men of the church gave a supper in their honor and I was invited to be present and speak. On the following day, which was Sunday, I preached at the morning service. Both meetings were fine and the best of fellowship prevailed. It is an inspiring occasion to sit down to tables with two hundred of one's fellow-men and Christians. Johnstown, under the leadership of Brother Watson, is surely alive and wide awake. I have very kind remembrances of the good people there and especially of my hosts, Mr. and Mrs. Statler and family, and Rev. and Mrs. Watson.

The choir of the Ashland church rendered a very excellent program, "The Story of Bethlehem," by Prothoroe, December 11th, under the direction of Miss Puterbaugh, teacher of Voice in the college. The work of both Miss Puterbaugh and Miss Wimer in the Department of Music is very much appreciated by both the college and city.

The local members of the Board of College Trustees, the faculty, and others interested in the work of the school, had a conference last Friday evening at which plans for the culmination of the college financial campaign were considered. One thing decided upon was that there ought to be an early meeting of the trustees. After the Board has met and matured its plans, publicity will be given to them.

The girls of the college had a Christmas tree in the hall the Thursday before Christmas to which the orphans of the county Children's Home were invited. The girls had prepared a suitable gift for each child. The occasion was thoroughly enjoyed by both the children and the girls and, moreover, it exhibited a genuinely Christian and Christmas spirit. The sacred words, "it is more blessed to give than to receive," still ring true.

The college continues to ask an interest in the prayers of the church.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

CAMPAIGN NOTES

I visited the Homerville church between the Middlebranch and Gretna campaigns. However, I am withholding the Homerville report until the final results are all in. And the report at this time has to do with our work at Gretna. I went to Gretna on very short notice but all things considered the results are long results. This is another of our rural congregations, and while it does not represent great numerical strength it does have a membership of as splendid, loyal people as I have met anywhere in our brotherhood.

Brother J. E. Teeter is serving this people as pastor, giving them services every two weeks. The Sunday school keeps things moving on the alternating Sundays with Brother A. J. Neer as superintendent. It was not possible for Brother Teeter to be with us during the canvass among his people but in his absence Brethren E. F. Miller and James Hudson piloted me over the field, the one using an "Olds" and the other a "Reo." The pikes were mostly smooth, and needless to say, we "went some." And I believe I can say the Gretna canvass was one of the neatest, most enjoyable canvasses so far in the campaign. I don't attribute it particularly to the "Olds" or the "Reo." To be sure they are both fine cars; but I "hain't goin' to say nothin' agin the Ford nuther." But I attribute it to the people and the "paper." Brother Teeter being Business Manager of the Evangelist, naturally has all of the men, women, and babies reading the church paper in his congregation. And so when I landed on the scene the people knew just what has been doing for over two years and they were ready to say very quickly just what they had to say. Surprising as it may seem, however, I sometimes meet folks who are with the endowment campaign like those men at Ephesus were about the Holy Ghost. Those men had not heard that there was a Holy Ghost. And so I meet people who seemingly have not heard yet that there is such an animal as a permanent endowment campaign. Such people of course do not take the Evangelist, or, if they do they certainly do not read it.

Well, when I left Gretna that little congregation had talked endowment to the tune of $2,100. There will be more added to this I am quite sure—I cannot forecast with absolute accuracy but it would not greatly surprise me if Gretna went as much as $2,400. But even if she don't, I consider that what has been done represents a fine result. The eleven churches in Ohio thus far canvassed have gone approximately $20,000. I see now clearly enough that Ohio will get Indiana's "goat." But, if all Ohio churches thus far canvassed would have done as well according to size and wealth as Gretna has done, Ohio would also send Pennsylvania to the hospital, too, for a few repairs. Nor am I too sure but what that may happen to Pennsylvania yet, as it is.

We had one gift at Gretna which was just a little more than $600—this represents the combined gifts from one family. We had another $600 gift from a brother and his wife; another of $400 from another brother and his wife; then we had $100 gifts and $50 gifts, etc. The Sunday school and W. M. S. also gave substantial help. I was entertained in the homes of Brethren E. F. Miller and James Hudson and these good folks know me better than they ever did before. In the Miller home I had the pleasure of meeting for the first time Miss Harriet Rebecca Miller Lichty. This lady was less than two weeks old when I met her, but she is a real lady. And there is a grandpa and a grandma at Gretna, and a grandpa and grandma at Carlton, Nebraska, walking most of the time in the air, but I don't blame them, for this is the only grandchild on both sides of the house. But I meant to say that Neer, and Parish and Detrick, and McBrein, and Harvey, and Bayer are other names I shall also remember at Gretna.

The mercury now stands at a little more than $134,500. No I am not juggling figures. I know that I said in the Louisville report that the mercury stood at $130,500. Then with a result of $1,500 at Middlebranch I said it stood at $132,500 and you may wonder just how I count. Well, I count all right. Sometimes the little odds cannot be shown in a report, and it is the little odds and ends that I keep up my sleeve that makes the difference. I am to make my figures tell the truth. Williamstown will be next.

Campaign Secretary.

ASHLAND COLLEGE Ashland, Ohio

The Second Semester will open February 2nd.

There will be some new courses so that students may enter then and earn a half year credit.

There ought to be twenty-five young people in the church who will enter for this Semester.

Also, keep in mind the Summer Session, fully recognized by the State Department of Public Instruction.
